State Rights Market Is Permanent

Distributor Declares Material Is Plentiful for Any Number of Excellent Features

By H. J. Shepard

Of Shepard and Van Loan.

THE States Rights market is here to stay. It is a big, new, lasting institution and nothing can prevent its rapid growth and development. Even though all the "stars," who enjoy such enormous present popularity were gathered into the fold of the large program distributors, who claim them to be the real-box-office assets, there would still be a possibility of producing good photoplays from strong, virile stories, which have proven in the past to be more lasting.

Film "stars" are the most transient of beings, and many of them take the plunge over the horizon of dramatic obscurity only too quickly, while stories live forever, if they are good. Shakespeare never saw a motion picture, nor did he ever exploit a "star," but he certainly whispered something in that little remark of his about "the play being the thing."

Market Is Growing

There is no strongly defined line of distinction between a States Rights and a program picture. An exceptional program feature can be turned into a States Rights production if it falls under the classifications of the pictures designed for that field, and if it is properly advertised. No picture, no matter how valuable, can be successfully "put over" without recourse to the medium of a well planned advertising campaign; on the other hand, an exceptional program picture, with the force of an organized campaign behind it, can be made a very good States Rights proposition. The industry is coming daily to see this more clearly, and in consequence the market in this field is becoming correspondingly enlarged. This is borne out by the fact that many of the large program organizations, when they find that one of their releases is of more than usual merit, and falls under States Rights classifications, take it off their regular program and charge a special price for it.

The successful productions for the States Rights market come under three classifications: the sensational, the propaganda, and those containing an exceptional story. If the release is built around some sensational event or happening of the day, or has a plot filmed under such trying conditions as to cause public comment, it falls under the first class, and may be judged fit for the States Rights market. It may contain a preachment on suffrage, war, peace, religion, any subject that offers material for a sermon or a teaching, rendered in a dramatic and interesting way, and come under the second. And finally, a story of exceptional power and force, containing perhaps a little historical value, will serve to bring a release into the third class. Of course, even a combination of all three of these qualities will not bring a picture within the radius of the States Rights limit if the utmost thought and care is not put into its production and exploitation.

Percentage Vs. Cash

In putting a picture on the States Rights market, one great question faces the distributor and the territorial buyer. This is the question of percentage and cash. The distributor usually wants cash. He wants to get his money out of the picture in the quickest possible way. He will promise everything—and give nothing. After he has gotten the purchase price out of the territorial buyer, the deal is finished in so far as he is concerned. There is no co-operation—he just forgets all about him.

The buyer, left to hoe his own row, may lose or win. Consequently, the next time that he buys a picture, he negotiates for it upon the percentage basis. He wants the distributor—and he is justified in this—to take a chance with him. In other words, he is assuring himself of co-operation.

It is undoubtedly true that the failure of many States Rights productions is due to the fact that there is little or no assistance given to the territorial buyer by the distributor after the sale. A competent, careful distributor knows the financial value of his picture and he also knows that the picture is fifty per cent surer of success if he aids the territorial buyer with the proper information and backs him up with an advertising campaign. When all our distributors come to the realization of this important fact we shall find the number of States Rights failures materially reduced. The slogan of the development of this new field of the industry should be: "Co-operation," and it is that and that alone which will win for us in the long run.

Middlemen Crowd the Industry

One of the greatest evils of the States Rights trade is a wedge that has long stood between the distributor and the buyer. This is the middleman or broker. The industry is crowded with these men who are entirely lacking in the principles of decent business. They prey upon the distributor and territorial buyer alike. Retained by the one, they play both ends to the middle, and it doesn't matter who gets stuck, so long as they get theirs. It even frequently happens that more than one of these chevaliers of industry will claim the representation of the distributor or the buyers, and all will claim commissions, so that there are several percentages to be deducted from the final settlement.

It is unfair to make the statement that all the middlemen in the industry are of this type. There are some very good ones, who are doing the States Rights trade a vast deal of good. However, they are gradually eliminating the disreputable faction in their own trade, for they are daily bringing both the distributor and the buyer to a closer understanding of conditions, and teaching them to deal with those who make use of only honorable business methods.

The Problem's Solution

The solution of the States Rights problem lies in three things, the analysis of all territories by the distributor, the proper consideration of the story of the picture and of those other essentials which go to make up the careful preparation of a feature picture, and, co-operation. The last is perhaps the most important of all, for the best of releases can be made or broken on the wheel of negligence. The distributor must support the territorial buyer. He must give him the benefit of a comprehensive and thorough advertising campaign, and special, personal help when necessary. In the matter of percentage, he must not only be willing, but be glad to take a chance on the success of his picture with a reliable buyer, realizing that if they work together the production has a much better chance of going across.

Glendon in Another "O. Henry"

O. Henry's penchant for flinging delicately barbed shafts of satire at New York reaches its ripest stage in "A Night in New Arabia," the current release in the Broadway Star Features distributed by General Film Company. His description of Caliph-ridden Bagdad-on-the-Subway and the Haroun al Raschids who go about seeking to find a way of crawling through the eye of the needle, forms one of the richest and most whimsical of his many stories of New York life, and is peculiarly adapted to retelling in pictures. It is the fifth of the series of four-reel O. Henry subjects released by General Film.

The story deals with the attempt of Old Jacob Spraggins to find relief for his soul by scattering about donations to charity with a lavish hand. Having failed to obtain relief, Spraggins orders his detectives to find the heirs of a poor miner he had defrauded in a coal land deal. This happens to be Tom McLeod, a delivery boy, who has fallen in love with the romantic Celia Spraggins. The latter changes places with the parlor maid and courts her ideal with the aid of her expert whistling. Spraggins hands Tom $10,000 and the latter pursuades Celia to elope with him in his wagon, not knowing that Celia is Spraggins' daughter. A year later, when the infant Jakey McLeod arrives, Spraggins suddenly cancels all of his donations and begins piling up a fortune of $100,000,000 for the "kid." To do this he raises the price of vinegar three cents on the gallon, and Bagdad-on-the-Subway settles back into its old rut.

Director Thomas Mills, who has superintended the filming of many of the O. Henry successes, has attained a new mark in picture workmanship in this story, which possesses all of the original charm with which O. Henry endowed it. "A Nnght in New Arabia" features J. Frank Glendon and Patsy DeForest. The former gives a breezy and thoroughly life-like interpretation of the role of Tom McLeod. while Miss DeForest is particularly likeable as the vivacious Celia, who loves to be loved for herself and not for her millions. The two stars are supported by an able cast.

Electric of Morrilton, Arkansas, Doing Fine

Every town must have its "house of pleasure," and Morrilton, Arkansas, has hers in the Electric theater, owned and operated by G. O. Vail.

Established five years ago, other picture houses have come and gone, but the Electric remained, growing steadily in favor and popularity, making continuous improvements and keeping abreast with the times, a little ahead. It is known far and near as the "one-price picture house," catering to children, showing only the cleanest and best.

There were only 000 seats when the theater first opened; now there are 450 opera chairs in the large auditorium. The gold fiber screen is used and the pictures are clear and distinct. Two machines are operated. Paramount and Triangle pictures are featured.

The Electric theater is filled nightly. It is a civic asset, paying big dividends to the people of Morrilton and Conway county in pleasure, recreation and education.

Princess in Fall Dress

The Princess of Nashville, Tenn., is resplendent in its new Fall decorations, and much credit is reflected upon the already belaureled brow of Manager Harry Sudekum in arranging the attractive interior decorations. The inner auditorium has been touched up to give a fall atmosphere of freshness, and the second lobby has been repainted throughout. The main entrance, on Church street, is finished on the order of a high class drawing room with heavy upholstered furniture, velvet rugs and ornamental receptacles for flowers distributed at chosen points. A concrete floor has been installed directly back of the seats on the main auditorium floor. The entire theater is now in splendid shape for the autumn season.

Ever-Popular Theme in "The Clean Gun"

Action of the most thrilling sort, which has made the Falcon Features released by General Film Company exceedingly popular with filmdom, is found in "The Clean Gun," the current release. It is a mystery story which fastens its grip on the spectator from the opening and does not release him until the last flash has been run off. Kathleen Kirkham, the pleasing Falcon star, is seen to excellent advantage in this four-reel drama.

"Feet of Clay," another strong mystery story, will be the next Falcon release. Margaret Landis and R. Henry Grey are featured.

"Draft 258" Shows "Soap Box Oratory"

"Soap-box oratory" is brought prominently into the story of "Draft 258," Metro's great special patriotic production de luxe, soon to be released. "Draft 258" has been directed by William Christy Cabanne, the man who made "The Slacker," and written by himself in collaboration with June Mathis.

Mr. Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has been receiving many congratulations on having secured Fred C. Aiken as executive for the Chicago branch. Mr. Aiken was installed as branch manager when Sydney E. Abel, executive office representative, was in Chicago last week. Penny Famine is Serious

Motion picture exhibitors who expect to add the odd cents to their admission prices to meet the government's new admission tax, are still encountering great difficulties in obtaining pennies for change. Many managers, who had not intended to raise their admission price may be forced to make a straight five-cent increase and pay the government a higher rate because no copper cents can be obtained.

The campaign of the four minute men in Chicago motion picture houses, now that the Liberty Loan campaign is ended, are directing their efforts to aid the food conservation plans of the government. These speakers are addressing the audiences of 300 theaters, urging the elimination of waste and extravagant methods in the handling of foodstuffs. # War Tax Problems Are Nearing Solution

MORE PRODUCERS AND DISTRIBUTORS WAIVE FIFTEEN-CENT LEVY

ALTHOUGH still somewhat muddled, the war tax situation is beginning to show signs of clearing. Almost without exception the government's admission tax of ten percent, which became effective November 1, is being collected by exhibitors from the public without difficulty. Some exhibitors reported that a few patrons departed when informed they must pay an extra cent or two along with their regular admission money, but the public generally accepted the tax in good spirit, paying it as the public has learned to pay scores of other war burdens cheerfully and as part of its patriotic duty.

The matter of the fifteen-cents-a-reel assessment charged against exhibitors by a majority of the producing and distributing organizations is still a much discussed problem with all branches of the industry.

Other Firms Absorb Tax

Following the lead of the Mutual Film Corporation and the Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, the first to announce that they would absorb the government's footage charge of one-half cent a foot and the manufacturer's charge of one-fourth cent per foot, several distributors sent out word to exhibitors that they had taken a similar stand. Those whose announcements had been received by the exhibitors up to the closing of this issue of MOTOGRAPHY were:

Triangle Distributing Corporation.
Griever & Herz.
Art Dramas Service.
Unity Photoplay Company.
Standard Film Corporation.
Wholesome Film Corporation.
Owl Feature Film Corporation.

Other producing and distributing companies were expected to have adopted a like policy in regard to the fifteen cent charge.

Exhibitors Refuse to Pay

Numerous local organizations of exhibitors have gone on record as refusing absolutely to pay the fifteen cent assessment. Branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America have employed attorneys to undertake a study of the law with a view to taking legal action against distributors who insist upon payment of the fifteen cents in addition to regular rentals.

Local organizations of the American Exhibitors' Association have taken similar action. Members of the Chicago branch reported at a meeting held last week that several distributors who were charging this fee had cancelled shows when individual exhibitors refused to pay the assessment. At the suggestion of A. J. Krug, president of the Chicago Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association, and E. Thomas Beatty, chairman of the executive committee, members of the association decided not to pay the fifteen cent levy and to accept the cancellations if the distributors declined their business on that basis.

Construes Law Correctly

The threatened extinction of the motion picture industry through wrong interpretation of the footage tax was corrected last week, following a trip to Washington by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and several other prominent film men.

The delegation called upon G. E. Fletcher, deputy commissioner of internal revenue, to protest against an interpretation of the law contained in a letter from Commissioner Daniel C. Roper to William Wright, secretary of the Kalem company. Under this ruling the footage tax of one-half cent per foot would be payable upon each renting of every reel of film, instead of upon its initial release. This ruling, if enforced, would have resulted in the closing of most of the smaller theaters in the United States, and many of the larger ones whose programs are changed frequently. The natural result of this would have been the closing out of many manufacturing firms.

Brady Writes Letters

Deputy Commissioner Fletcher was convinced that an error had been made in construing the meaning of the footage tax clause in the federal revenue law. Preceding the conference, the following letters were written to Washington by President Brady:

October 29, 1917.

Hon. Daniel C. Roper,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Sir:—

Mr. William Wright, Secretary of the Kalem Co., Inc., of 235 West 23rd Street, New York City, has called my attention to a letter which he received from you dated October 23, 1917, from which I beg to quote as follows:

> "In reply you are advised that as the tax is placed not upon the manufacturer of the film itself, but upon the sale or lease, the office is of the opinion that the tax should be paid not by you, who do the commercial work only, but by the owner of the film or positive print, and upon him the tax will be imposed at one-half cent per foot each time the same is sold or leased."

I assume that in the great stress of business that is presented to you at this time that your opinion expressed in your letter must have been based upon a hurried interpretation of the War Revenue Act. The language of the Act itself and the intention of Congress to be gathered therefrom clearly indicates that the tax of one-half cent per foot on positive motion picture films (containing a picture ready for projection) is a footage tax upon the original sale or lease and not upon re-sales or releases.

I would appreciate the courtesy of a reconsideration of your opinion expressed in your letter to Mr. Wright at the earliest possible moment in view of the fact that the tax is now in force and has been since October 4, 1917.

Very respectfully,
(Signed) WILLIAM A. BRADY,
President National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

October 31, 1917.

Hon. Daniel C. Roper,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Commissioner:—

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which is representative of all branches engaged in the manufacture, production, sale and exhibition of motion picture throughout the United States, in furtherance of its attitude of sincere co-operation with all Departments of the Government of the United States, respectfully tenders to you who are charged with the administration and enforcement of the War Revenue Act of October 3, 1917, its services and aid in any direction which you may commend.

In carrying out and enforcing the War Revenue Act, we appreciate it is not your intention, nor desire, to unnecessarily burden those engaged in the moving picture or any other industry. Mindful of the fact that you are not wholly familiar with the actual manufacturing and working conditions with relation to the production and exhibition of motion pictures, we respectfully suggest, before you promulgate any regulations with relation thereto, that you permit the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, by an appointment of an individual or committee, to consult and advise with you with respect thereof, with a view of making known to you the conditions and problems the industry is daily confronted with. By this means we feel that such regulations that you may prescribe will result in their being fair, just and workable.

We feel it is hardly necessary for us to advance any argument to point out the injustice done to the motion picture industry by Congress in fixing the present tax upon it. It is the only industry directly taxed on its finished product regardless of the cost of production. You no doubt realize this, as well as many other irregularities and inequalities of the Act and others which will necessarily appear to you after its administration is fairly under way. As a result of your experience, you undoubtedly will, through the Secretary of the Treasury, make a number of recommendations to Congress at its approaching session, to amend or modify the Act.

Will you give us the opportunity of conferring with you to concretely point out the hardships and inequalities with which the industry are burdened as a result of this tax, so that you may have an intelligent and clear statement of our reasons and facts upon which we base them?

Awaiting your advices, we remain,
Very truly yours,
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, INC.
(Signed) W. A. BRADY.

The result of these letters was the conference with Deputy Commissioner Fletcher. After the situation was explained to him, the official dictated a letter correcting the former letter of Commissioner Roper, and it was announced by the Treasury Department that the revenue commissioner would sign the new letter making it plain that this tax was to be paid only once upon the first renting of the film.

Discusses Admission Tax

The commissioner was also asked to clear up certain points in connection with the assessment of the war tax upon admissions, but while in many instances this will work a hardship upon the theater owner, there was no pronounced attempt to effect changes in the methods outlined by Mr. Fletcher.

The film men appeared, Mr. Brady pointed out, not to avoid giving their support to the Government by assuming a portion of the war budget, but to prevent the Treasury Department through an error from enforcing an interpretation which would eventually place them in such a financial situation that the very help which they wished to give would be impossible.

Possibly much of the mistake was the result of insufficient knowledge of the system behind the presentation of photo-plays to the public and an application of the law, prescribed by Congress, made superficially by the Treasury Department. Most of the smaller motion picture theaters change their programs daily, and were they compelled to pay $5 for each reel shown, this would mean a minimum of $25 a day even though but one feature of five reels, an exceedingly scanty offering, were shown. In the majority of instances the margin of profit is so narrow that a daily deficit would result instead and the house be compelled to close its doors.

Tax Will Be Heavy Burden

As it is, the admission tax will be a heavy burden even though it is nominally passed on to the patron. In the cheaper class of houses the additional few cents required by the Government will result in decreasing the number of times which some of the fans will be able to attend, since often the admission prices represents careful saving on their part and is all that they can afford for the purposes of amusement.

Mr. Fletcher explained the phrasing of the law regarding admission taxes, which reads:

"One cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission" has the result of depriving the tax of its "10 per cent" feature, since on an admission of 15 cents, two cents must be paid, and on two admissions of 15 cents, four cents instead of the three which would be exacted were the tax conducted purely upon the 10 per cent basis.

Fletcher Explains Law

He declared also that (1) houses charging a straight five-cent admission were exempt; (2) that where several rates of admission existed, such as 5, 10 and 15, the five-cent admissions were not exempt and must pay one cent on the ticket; (3) that where the admission for adults was 10 cents, but children under 12 were charged only five cents, the latter must pay 1 cent; (4) that if the war tax is included in the price of admission, the advertising matter of the theater owner should state this fact, and (5) that children under 12 purchasing a seat in the five-cent portion of the house which has higher rate seats must still pay the one cent.

While the Government under the present application of the war levy is exacting a heavy toll from them, the film men feel that a decided victory was obtained through their visit to Washington and that their ability to help the United States by their co-operation will not be impaired by the bankruptcy of a large number of their body.

Patronage Shows No Falling Off

In spite of the war and its attendant taxes the motion picture theaters of New York do not seem to be suffering any falling off of patronage. The Strand and Rialto theaters report the usual large attendance, and this in the face of a raise in admission prices.

These two houses last week announced a new schedule of prices. The Rialto Theater, beginning on Thursday, charged 20, 30 and 60 cents, as against a previous 15, 20 and 50-cent list, while at the same time the Strand jumped to 30, 40 and 55 cents. However, there were no extra admission tax tickets to buy, nor any odd pennies of change to handle, as in both cases the tax is included in the raise.

As the average attendance at these houses runs between 60,000 and 70,000 patrons per week, it was necessary for the management to reduce the collection of the new taxes on motion picture film and theater tickets down to the simplest possible system, in order to expedite the handling of the line at the box office, and to avoid confusion on the part of those purchasing tickets.

Theaters Issue New Tickets

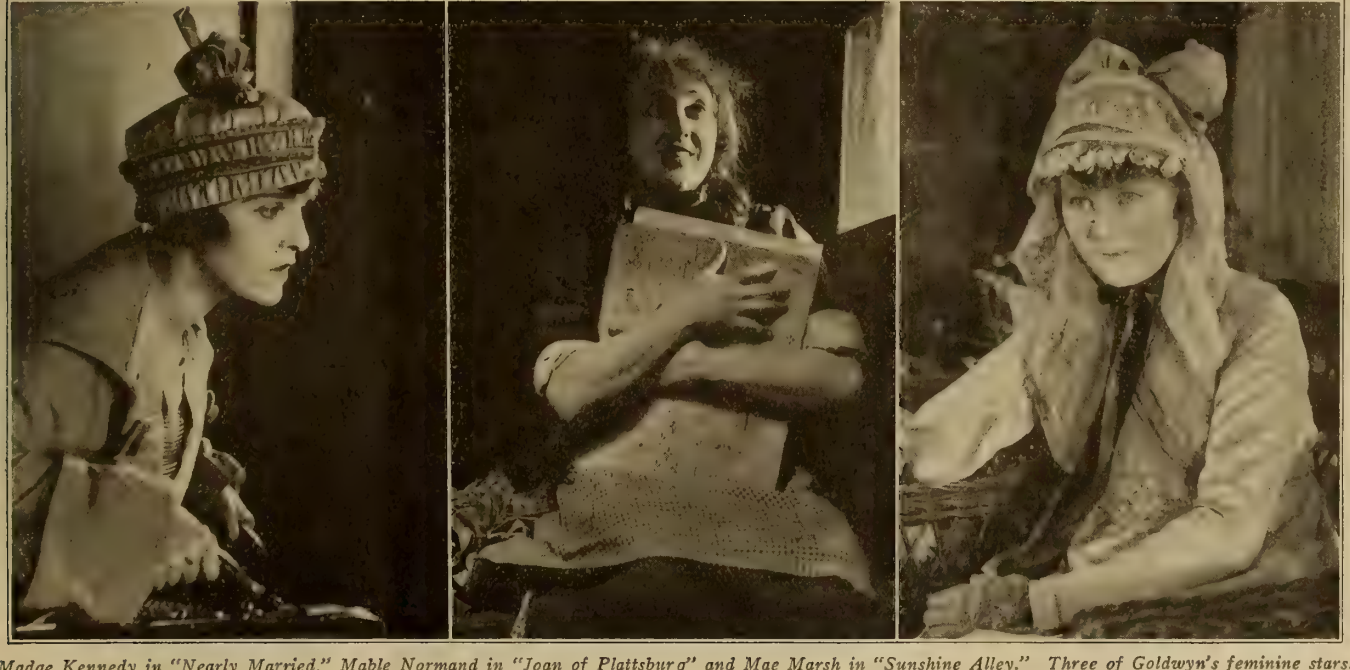
The problem was solved by having new tickets printed on each of which the new price appears in large, red figures, with smaller type explaining how much of the sum is admission price and how much is war tax. For example, the tickets which formerly sold for 15 cents are now 20 cents—18 cents admission and 2 cents tax. The quarter tickets are now 27 cents with a 3-cent tax, which brings them up to 30 cents.



Under this system the federal tax collector will simply audit the box office statements and collect the proper per cent of the receipts. It will be noticed that the theater is giving the Government a shade the best of it, its tax on each ticket being slightly in excess of the 10 per cent required by law. The theaters prefer to do this rather than go to the expense of the complicated bookkeeping which would be required in keeping track of fractional portions of a cent on such a volume of business. The advance in the prices of admission, exclusive of the war tax proper, is designed to take care of the footage tax which the theater has to pay on all film which it leases or purchases and other taxes which have been imposed as a result of the war. S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto is announcing in his program that the advance is temporary only, and that the former box office scale will be resumed when the taxes on film and tickets have been removed.

Chicago Contributes Heavily

Motion picture shows of Chicago will yield a tremendous amount of money to the government in the admission tax fund. Max Ascher of Ascher Brothers estimates the average weekly movie attendance in the 500 Chicago houses subject to the tax at 10,000 for each theater. About 40 per cent of this attendance would pay the 2 cent tax, on a 15 cent admission, and on this basis movies of that city would yield about $70,000 weekly, or about $3,640,000 annually, and the movies and legitimate theaters combined would, in Chicago alone, yield $4,300,000 a year.

Pay No Music Tribute

Theatergoers in Milwaukee, Wis., will not hear any music on which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers receives tribute. Exhibitors of that city, at a meeting, in which practically every house was represented, decided not to use any selections on which a tax could be collected by the society. All the exhibitors of Milwaukee are convinced that independent publishers can furnish all the good music they require.

Co-operate With the Four-Minute Men

LIKE all the other government organizations, councils and committees for the prosecution of the war, the Division of Four-Minute Men is eager to receive helpful suggestions and to listen to the advice of business men. The director of the division, in a letter to MOTOGRAPHY, voices the appreciation of the government for the assistance so cheerfully given by the motion picture industry, and expresses a desire to see the picture theater interests safeguarded as thoroughly as possible.

It is quite within reason that the four-minute men, who in the name of the government receive all possible co-operation from the exhibitors, may be able to do a little bit for the picture theater business without sacrificing much, if any, of their own highly important and valuable time.

Dr. Atkinson, a thoughtful exhibitor of Evanston, Ill., suggests that each theater man take a minute of his time to outline, to the visiting speaker for the government, the principles of censorship as they are applied. This does not waste the four-minute man's time, for he can rarely begin speaking the moment he arrives. Ordinarily the four-minute man is no more familiar with censorship than any other member of the large and varied public. But after a course of instruction at the hands of harassed exhibitors it is reasonable to suppose that the industry would have a powerful staff of new friends in the shape of experienced public speakers opposed to censorship. For these volunteer government representatives, necessarily men of thought, could not escape the sinister significance of censorship once it was presented to them.

The benefits of this plan to the picture theater industry would be of low visibility, and quite intangible; but some day they would work out.

That is one side of the four-minute man proposition. The other side has to do with a certain unintentional unpatriotism on the part of the public. It is a hard problem for the patriotic exhibitor; but no doubt it can be solved.

We call it unintentional because we cannot conceive that any American citizen lacks the small amount of patriotism which asks only that he listen to a four-minute talk on the needs of the nation in a time of emergency. We hope and believe it is nothing but sheer thoughtlessness that induces portions of an audience to leave the house as soon as a government speaker is announced.

These four-minute men are not performers with an uninteresting act. They are volunteers who have themselves realized the urgent needs of the nation, and who, of their own patriotism, are striving to awaken the people to a sense of the situation which confronts them. Obviously, the least the people can do is to sit still for four minutes.

There is no rule for the guidance of four-minute men, nor for the exhibitors who entertain them. The exhibitor may, or may not, introduce the speaker—as he pleases. Where the government man is left to his own devices, there is always chance for public misunderstanding, and an unthinking but brutal exodus of part of the audience.

Where the exhibitor is sufficiently interested to make a brief introductory announcement before the four-minute man goes on, it should be a simple matter for him to inject enough patriotism into a few words to make the people stick to their seats.

We believe the exhibitor will actually gain in the estimation of his patrons if, in his introduction, he makes it not the privilege, but the duty of the people to listen attentively to the government representative. Those who avoid this simple form of respect—even though they are already familiar with the speaker's subject—number themselves among the minor slackers, like the parade watchers whose heads remain covered when the colors go by.

And no theater man will lose anything by telling his patrons just that. The man who fears now to express his Americanism in the strongest terms is himself a slacker.

The Importance of the Sunday School Plan

THE importance of any affiliation between picture theaters and the church cannot be overestimated. The plan of co-operation just inaugurated between the producers of motion pictures and the Board of Sunday Schools, described by Secretary Elliott of the National Association on another page, is of large significance to the future of the picture industry.

Many excellent business men who are themselves indifferent to the activities of the church fail to realize the power of religious motive in the lives of the people. Whether the individual exhibitor who reads this is interested in church affairs or not, he knows that many of his patrons are. And to make it still stronger, he knows that those who are not his patrons, but should be, are the "church people" of his community.

The church (unwittingly and unintentionally) has kept more people away from the pictures than any other agency, simply because it did not set the seal of its positive approval upon picture entertainment. The churches and Sunday schools which have either adopted or recommended specific film subjects are still so few that discovery of a new one makes acceptable copy for a news story.

Not that the pictures have any grievance in this respect. It is simply that pure religion and pure entertainment have had nothing in common. Even if the purpose of some pictures might be religious, the purpose of religion was never entertainment in any form.

But with the growth and broadening of the picture industry, two truths have become newly apparent to church workers. One is that the thing vaguely called entertainment may be in reality a short cut to the human mind and heart, open to all worthy projects; the other is the bit of scientific philosophy that makes the picture not an entertainer, not a show, not a play, but merely a living record of whatsoever its producer may wish to pass on. The film is only a plastic vehicle for thought, whether that thought be religious or profane.

The practical side of a co-operative arrangement with a board representing more than four million Sunday school students promises interesting developments. It will be noted that a committee of this board of church and Sunday school workers proposes to be of positive assistance by recommending the pictures it approves in publicity reaching all parts of the country. There are hundreds of local and national periodicals, published under the auspices of the various church societies and organizations, which will publish the recommendations of the committee, as well as, doubtless, the results of such observations as are made on the moral, educational and recreational values of specific pictures. This publicity will obviously give impetus to the favored subjects without detracting from the usefulness of other pictures.

Despite the stupendous figures of motion picture attendance, the well informed know there are still unexplored depths in our population. And there is every reason to believe that the church holds the key to the interest of those millions who are not yet picture patrons.

That church which operates its own picture show, even though the admission be free, is the local exhibitor's best friend. It is his missionary. It gathers the timid and the holy and righteous and proves to them that the motion picture is not an invention of the devil. It brings home to their previously shrinking consciousness that a strip of photographic emulsion is like paper, upon which may be printed the Decameron, or Shakespeare, or the Bible; and that it is not the screen, but the brain behind it, that makes the film an efficient agent for good or evil, for study or play, for science or frivolity.

The church can decide the question of picture acceptability for all of our hundred million, and we view the new affiliation with the Sunday school board with much gratification.

We Beg Your Pardon, Mr. Smith

In the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY a "What the Picture Did for Me" note credited Harry Miller, manager of the Boston Theater, Chicago, with saying that "a glance at the Chicago Board of Censors' permit shows forty-nine gambling scenes cut." He was speaking of Metro's latest Bushman-Bayne offering, "The Adopted Son."

Cresson E. Smith, of Metro, hastens to correct the statement. Mr. Smith's letter points out that the report of the censor board read "shorten 4 Gambling scenes," and that the capital "G" was somewhat misformed, so that it appeared to read "49." Mr. Smith says—and we believe him—that Metro never released a picture in which forty-nine cuts were ordered.

Warns Against Use of Emblem

In an effort to co-operate with the Red Cross Society in its labor of mercy, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has issued instructions to the advertising department of his company not to use the Red Cross emblem in any of its advertising, and in addition has given out the following open letter to manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures dealing with the subject:

I have just had called to my attention the fact that the Red Cross Society of America is seeking to prohibit the use of its emblem—the Greek Red Cross—for trade purposes, and, while Vitagraph never has been guilty of doing so, I have thought it well to issue a specific warning against its use in any of our advertising or propaganda. In this connection, I should also like to address an appeal to every branch of the motion picture industry—manufacturing, distributing and exhibiting—to refrain from encroaching upon the rights of the greatest organization for the benefit of mankind that the world ever has known.

It is a great temptation, with the vast number of war pictures now being turned out, for producers and exhibitors, in their desire to call attention to their wares, to link them up with the Red Cross.

In its present campaign, the Red Cross makes it plain that it is only asking what the law gives it when it urges Americans to give up the use of its insignia for trade purposes. Of course, there are some concerns in various lines of business, a very few, which have the right, under the trade mark law, to use the Red Cross, but I understand that even these are being requested to drop it, at least for the period of the war.

There is another phase to the situation—that of liability. Where a person, whether he is a motion picture exhibitor or a business man engaged in any other line, uses the Red Cross without legal authority, he is liable to prosecution and members of the motion picture fraternity whose zeal leads them to employ it should take heed now before it is too late.

Before the war, the use of the Red Cross, while in violation of a statute, was not considered a crime quite so much as a compliment to the wonderful work of a wonderful organization. But since the war began and the society added to its already monumental work for humanity the symbol has taken on a newer and greater significance and care should be exercised by every patriotic American not to invade the province of an association of self-sacrificing men and women whose only object is the alleviation of suffering and the benefit of mankind.

Next Year Will Be the Biggest Ever

Aaron J. Jones Predicts the Motion Picture Business Will Exceed Every Previous year

By Ralph Thomas Kettering

A prediction for the new year has been made by Aaron J. Jones, who has never failed to strike the nail on the head and who continually keeps his fingers on the public pulse. Calling to inquire regarding the future plans of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of which firm Mr. Jones is the president and the active director. The following was obtained from him:

"Nineteen eighteen will be the greatest year the show business has ever seen. Theatrical history tells us that during the Civil and Spanish-American Wars show business jumped with leaps and bounds, and thus I feel sure with the world struggle, a like condition of affairs will prevail.

"This will be especially so in the lower priced houses. Those who attend the two dollar houses, in addition to paying war tax, have found that their income tax severs their yearly annuity, but the working man who patronizes popular priced theaters will not be effected, except that he will be earning more money next year than ever before in his life. This will tend to increase the prices in the outlying theaters.

Picture Prices Advance

"Picture houses which have charged ten and fifteen cents in the past will charge twenty cents or even higher. There will be a further combination of the manufacturers who have found the overhead too high, who will not alone combine the production expense but also the distributing.

"At present there are over forty exchanges in Chicago, where four could easily handle the business. This we endeavored to do when we formed 'The First National Exhibitor's Circuit.'

"There will be a closer co-operation with exhibitors. Stars will be given more time to make their features.

"For instance, let us take Charlie Chaplin, who is under contract to our concern. Heretofore he has been driven to make twelve pictures in twelve months. Under his contract with The First National Exhibitor's Circuit, he makes but eight pictures in sixteen months and can, therefore, allow his artistic temperament to run riot.

"Last year I predicted a combination of manufacturers and exhibitors, which came to pass. I also said that there would be a building in the outlying districts of Chicago of picture houses in excess of 3,000 seats, which would take the place of the smaller theaters. This has also come to pass.

New Playhouse Projected

"For some time manufacturers have been urging Chicago to build a big loop picture palace. I am at liberty to state that Jones, Linick & Schaefer will build the most magnificent playhouse ever erected in Chicago. We have the location selected and leased, but the present war conditions make the investment too great to begin work at this time, but I can say that we will take active steps to build such a theater."

Slight Built, But—

Aaron J. Jones is slight of build and dark of complexion, but has eyes that are very keen. By heroic gigantic efforts he has built has own fortune and made himself the foremost figure in the middle west theatricals.

With Adolph Linick and Peter J. Schaefer, he formed the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, which control Chicago's principal loop playhouses. Personally, he directs the activities of the Marcus Loew Western Booking Agency, The Goldwyn Film Corporation and the Contral Film Corporation. By his great magnetism and rapid decisive strikes, he has earned for himself the title of "The Little Corporal of the West."

Work Begins on the Making of "The Marionettes"

Clara Kimball Young has started to film "The Marionettes," which was to have been her first picture under her own management, but on account of the misunderstanding with the Charles Frohman Estate interests, who claimed that they owned and controlled the American rights to the play, it was necessary to supersede it with "Magda" and "Shirley Kaye." The question of screen rights to the play has now been fully established and settled with the French Authors' Association, and Miss Young will produce "The Marionettes" as her third offering.

The supporting cast will include Nigel Barrie, Alexander Francis and Corliss Giles, who appeared with Miss Young in "Shirley Kaye," which production marked Mr. Giles' first appearance on any screen. With Miss Young in the picture will also appear her father and mother.

Emile Chautard, who has just finished a picture for Lina Cavalieri, has been engaged to direct "The Marionettes."

"Please Help Emily," Stage Play, Is Filmed

"Please Help Emily," Broadway success of last year, is the next Empire All-Star Corporation picture that Mutual is to release November 19th. Ann Murdock is to be the star of the picture, as she was of the play, and many of the original cast are also in the picture. Ferdinand Gottschalk plays the part of Herbert Threadgold, which he created on the stage; Hubert Druce has his same role of Professor Delmar, while John Harwood, whose impersonation of the butler was one of the hits of the play, has given just as clever a performance before the camera.

Exhibitors Display Their Patriotism

THE following from the official bulletin of the United States government, issued by the Committee on Public Information, tells its own story:

The United States Civil Service Commission has received an expression of the patriotism of practically all the exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States.

The Government is in need of thousands of typewriter operators and stenographers of both sexes for war work in Washington, and through its 3,000 local boards of examiners in that many cities the commission requested the owners and managers of motion-picture theaters to allow free of charge an announcement on their screens of this need of the Government.

The refusals were so few as to be negligible. Not more than a hundred of the 20,000 odd exhibitors who were approached declined to render to the people the service asked. Even these can not be charged with disloyalty; most of them held decided views as to their duty to their patrons, who pay for entertainment only. The only criticism of the Government came from three exhibitors, who declined on the ground that it was proposed to place a tax on motion-picture tickets. One owner asked remuneration in the sum of 25 cents a week, and another stipulated that he was to be relieved of any responsibility for damage to the slides furnished by the Government. The slides cost less than 10 cents apiece.

Almost without exception the "movie" men were not only willing, but were even eager to serve the Government in the manner requested. This hearty response from 20,000 business men, representative of every part of the country, has a striking significance. It is interesting to note in this connection that the estimated daily attendance at motion-picture shows in the United States is 10,000,000. This allows an average of 500 for each house.

Prison Paper Publishes Film Criticisms

The Star-Bulletin, organ of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Penitentiary, is developing a good-sized moving picture department of news and criticism as the result of the showing at the prison of feature films donated by various producing companies. The reviews, which appear three or four to an issue, are as keen and discriminating as those of the newspaper press and are followed with much interest by both local exhibitors of Ossining, N. Y., where the great prison is located, and the manufacturers of films themselves.

Commonwealth Finishes Its First Picture

Six Weeks Are Required to Make Feature With Charlotte, Champion Woman Skater of the World

AT THE close of last month the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation finished making its first big motion picture, a super-production in six reels with Charlotte, the world's woman champion fancy ice skater, as star.

This company is now practically ready to begin marketing its product.

At this writing this picture has not been named. Several thousand suggestions were submitted, under a plan that was intended to obtain the best name for the production.

Plans for this company's next large picture are already well under way. It is very likely that a very big star will be used as star in the second picture.

The theme of the story portrayed in the picture just finished is patriotism and war, and involves the perfecting of an important war invention and the efforts of enemy spies to steal it. This affords opportunities for thrilling action, in which Charlotte, as an all around athlete, takes prominent and at times hair raising parts.

A part of the action takes place in the Chicago ice skating arena where Charlotte is given an opportunity to introduce into the picture many fancy skating stunts that have made her the wonder of the world as an ice skater. People of New York are said to have paid millions of dollars during her two years' engagement at the Hippodrome in that city.

Apart of the ice arena action takes place at a Red Cross benefit at which fully 14,000 persons were present and photographed. This is said to be the largest indoor scene ever photographed for a motion picture. To light the arena properly for this photographing, it became necessary to install temporarily a large number of lighting plants that had to be rented from many movie studios throughout the country.

Government Approves Scene

In one scene in this picture several wireless apparatuses were used. Permission to install and use these had to be obtained from the government and a representative of the government was present to see that no messages were sent.

Indoor ice skating is becoming very popular in the large cities of the country. During Charlotte's engagement in New York this form of skating became the recreation fad in society and many indoor skating arenas were opened to meet the demand.

The same thing has happened since she went to Chicago. The latter town now has two large arenas, and there is talk of more. Several of the big hotels have also installed ice skating for the pleasure of their guests.

Introduces Ice Sport in Film

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation is the first film producing company to incorporate this sport in a moving picture, and goes to prove Mr. Spanuth's alertness in seeing and seizing new ideas. The press throughout the country has paid considerable attention to Charlotte and her introduction to pictures. The Chicago Tribune said in advance of the filming of one of the scenes for her new play:

"One of the largest photographic 'shots' ever made in motion pictures will be the one made this week at the Arena, Chicago's ice skating palace in the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation's film in which Charlotte, the ice skater, is the star."

The Philadelphia Ledger said:

"Charlotte, the famous ice skater, who started an ice skating craze in New York City that is said to have cost $3,000,000 in equipment, is now being filmed by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago in a six-reel feature which is to be released this month. In this the young woman is called upon to skate, dance, swim, dive, ride horseback, manipulate a wireless machine, handle a yacht and drive an automobile at a furious rate of speed."

State Rights Distributors, Inc., to Hold Meeting

The announcement is made from the office of Sol L. Lesser that the next meeting of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., will be held at the Claridge Hotel, New York City, on Tuesday, November 20, 1917, at 11 a. m.

As many pictures have been presented to the members for national distribution, this will be one of the most important meetings.

The offices of the corporation are temporarily located at Room 523 Longacre building.

Mr. Lesser advises that the organization being complete, manufacturers who have worthy productions can secure an immediate market.

This is What Doug. Accomplished

Pete Schmid, Ill With Fever, Relates From His Couch the Real Story of Fairbanks' Trip

THE whirlwind trip across the continent made by Douglas Fairbanks for the purpose of selling Liberty bonds has until now remained more or less of a mystery, for the reason that Pete Schmid, Artcraft publicity representative, who accompanied the strenuous smiler, was laid up in his bed in Chicago by the jaunt. When seen by MOTOGRAPHY Pete gave out some of the interesting facts of the campaign from his cot in the Congress Hotel, where he was confined by tonsilitis, fever and a few other minor ailments.

"The whole trip was hatched up one evening in New York," said Pete. "There was no advance preparation, and we had to use the wires for publicity. The screens of Troy, Albany and Utica heralded our start on October 20, and then all the way across the continent the papers and screens told folks of our arrivals and believe me, the receptions were astounding.

"The result of it all was that Doug. sold $900,000 worth of bonds and then added the other $100,000 to make it an even million. Secretary McAdoo sent him a telegram of congratulation."

Fairbanks and his party struck Chicago one Sunday, visited eighteen theaters, including the Majestic, and raised $50,000. In several towns in the west half holidays were declared to boost the bond campaign. At Fremont, Nevada, the comedian was met at the train by a parade of school children. At Lexington, Nevada, a female band from the Majestic Theater stirred up the throngs and at Rollins, Wyoming, the fire department turned out, together with thousands of the natives. These, Pete says, are but a few examples of the great receptions given to Doug. from Germany's ocean to the celluloid coast where the tour wound up at Los Angeles.

"Babes in the Woods" Christmas Offering

"The Babes in the Woods," one of the William Fox Standard Pictures, which had been set for release November 18, according to an announcement this week, has been moved along to December 23, making it a holiday week offering.

Virginia Lee Corbin

Two reasons were given for the change. Another Standard Picture, Theda Bara in "The Rose of Blood," has been completed and because of its timeliness was set for release November 4. The other reason advanced is the remarkable success attending "Jack and the Beanstalk," and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." These productions, the first of which has been released since September 2 and the other since October 14, are in the same class as "The Babes in the Woods."

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are the stars of the new production, which is reported to be even stronger dramatically than either of the other two recent releases in which these juvenile actors have appeared. This chiefly is due to the directors' successful paralleling of the story with a modern life drama in such a manner as to make an especially powerful appeal to adults. The same element, of course, also has been carefully developed in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," but it is the producer's contention that heart interest in "The Babes in the Woods" is unsurpassed by that in any other picture.

Mae Murray's Second Bluebird Set for Release in December

Managing Director Carl Laemmle, in announcing the releases set for the Bluebird program to finish the current year, lists the second Mae Murray feature—another Robert Leonard production—for Christmas week; places Ella Hall's next appearance on the program for the week preceding and gives Violet Mersereau and Ruth Clifford positions in the opening fortnight of December. Thus appear four of the girl stars in Bluebird's galaxy in offerings that promise to capitalize the screen popularity of those favorite players to the full extent.

Violet Mersereau's appearance in "The Raggedy Queen," week starting December 3, has previously been published. John C. Brownell prepared the scenario from Nell B. Bronson's story and the direction was accomplished by Theodore Marston as his third production in the Bluebird series, with Miss Mersereau the star. Donald Hall, Charles Slattery, James O'Neill, Frank Otto, Robert F. Hill and Grace Barton appear in the supporting company.

Ruth Clifford's appearance December 10 will be made in conjunction with Monroe Salisbury in Rupert Julian's presentation of Samuel Merwin's story, "Anthony the Absolute." Elliott J. Clawson prepared the scenario. George McDaniels and W. H. Bainbridge will have important roles in the support. Director Julian was at great pains and expense in preparing the Oriental settings for this feature (still to be definitely titled), as the action requires both Japanese and Chinese "atmosphere" to frame the story in proper scenic surroundings.

Ella Hall will next appear in what might be called her "honeymoon picture"—for she was married to her leading man, Emory Johnson, just previous to beginning work, under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson, on "My Little Boy," the feature to be released December 17, with Little Zoe Rae and Gretchen Lederer sharing the billing honors with Miss Hall. A role resembling the Dickens character of Scrooge, in "A Christmas Carol," will be played by Winter Hall, and Harry Holden will have a conspicuous comedy role.

Mae Murray brings her second Bluebird to the schedule December 24 to mark Christmas week. Robert Leonard produced "Face Value" from his own story, Fred Myton helping on the scenario. Miss Murray is declared to have an effective successor to "Princess Virtue," last week pre-released at the Broadway Theater, New York, and set for the program November 19.

Franklyn Farnum, in "The Winged Mystery," is scheduled for November 26, but will probably be pre-released at the Broadway before schedule date. The stars of Bluebird are all accounted for in the foregoing mention, save Dorothy Phillips, who will reappear early in the New Year, and Carmel Myers, who is listed to offer "The Lash of Power," during the current days, as her introduction to the program.

Olive Tell, Politician

Olive Tell, Empire-Mutual star, is an ardent worker and helper in things political in New York City. Miss Tell takes an active and keen interest in politics, being one of Mayor Mitchel's warmest supporters.

Around the studio she spent much time telling the uncertain how they should vote and why.

Second Alice Brady-Select Picture Begun

At the Paragon studio in Fort Lee Alice Brady began work last Tuesday on her second Select Picture. This is a screen version of Charlotte Bronte's immortal novel, "Jane Eyre." The picture has been splendidly adapted to screen uses and is being directed by Edward Jose. Miss Brady's leading man is Elliot Dexter.

Coincident with the beginning of her second Select Picture, progress is being made on the cutting and titling of the first of Miss Brady's Select star series, "Her Silent Sacrifice." This picture was also directed by Mr. Jose. The director, Miss Brady, the star, and a few officials of the Select company saw a roughly cut version of the picture for the first time recently and were pleased with it. "Her Silent Sacrifice" is being put into shape for early release through Select Exchanges.

Old Lubin Property Is Ambulance Camp

Growth of the United States Army Ambulance Service camp at Allentown, Pa., has made it necessary to increase the camp grounds. Negotiations were just completed for the purchase of the old Lubin farm near Valley Forge, Pa., which was owned by the motion picture magnate of that name. Twelve hundred men will be quartered on the Lubin property in addition to those remaining at the fair grounds at Allentown.

Army Haircut Wasted

Jack Dill, playing the lead in Henry Kernan's "Big V" comedy company on the Vitagraph lot, was all ready to go to war, resigned his part in a new picture, made himself possessor of an army haircut and reported at headquarters, only to be told that his contingent would not be called for possibly six weeks or more. So Jack Dill is again cavorting in "Big V" comedies.

Neal Burns and Chris Richards have joined the Mack Sennett forces and will appear in a Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy to be directed by Clarence Badger.

Theda Bara Returns to Work After Rest

AFTER a rest of two weeks, the first she has had in more than a year, Miss Theda Bara has started work at Fort Lee, N. J., on her twenty-seventh production for William Fox. As usual, she is under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

Following a long sojourn in Southern California, where, after the completion of "Cleopatra," she finished two other Standard Pictures, Miss Bara at first found it rather trying work under the artificial light of the Eastern studios. She expressed herself as preferring natural light conditions, such as usually are obtainable at Hollywood.

Miss Bara's new vehicle was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and is declared to be a gripping, virile type of story and to contain many decidedly tense, dramatic situations. The action takes place in and around New York.

The Fox production of "Cleopatra" is in its fourth week at the Lyric Theater, New York, and still is playing to capacity houses. Standing room only has been the condition confronting the management on practically every night since the opening, and it is estimated that half as many persons as have seen the picture have been turned away. The length of the New York City run is indefinite.

Films Aid to Jap Women's Advance

MOTION PICTURE THEATERS ARE POPULAR IN NIPPON

Mr. Hi Sibley, the author of this interesting story of the motion picture and its influence in Japan, is a world traveler and magazine writer who has recently returned to America after spending several months in the Orient.

By Hi Sibley

THE motion picture theater has done something for the woman of Japan that no other institution has accomplished; it has provided a means of evening entertainment where she may go with her husband and children. Formerly she was pretty much restricted to the legitimate theater, which was not nearly so convenient and considerably more expensive. Now, however, she can go frequently and enjoy a wider horizon than the limitations of Japanese home life.

Also, the cinema has had a noticeable broadening effect. The status of the Japanese woman is less menial today than it was a few years ago. Formerly this shy little creature was taught that obedience was her first duty; she was permitted very little liberty and had no voice in family affairs, but through the film portrayal of the advancement and activities of women of other lands the sentiment toward the Japanese woman has undergone a great improvement. There are just as many women as men in a movie audience, and no small number of children. The women are the most appreciative spectators.

Keep Movie Houses Segregated

In Yokohama and Tokyo the motion picture houses are generally segregated in certain districts. There is Theater street in Yokohama where probably twenty-five film houses are located, and every 'rikisha runner in that seaport will suggest this point to the tourist from abroad as a place of interest before he takes you to the shrines and temples.

In Tokyo, as in other cities, there are picture theaters scattered throughout the city, but if one wants to see the pure Japanese motion picture theater and the enthusiasm with which the people have taken to the film drama, he should go out to Asakusa Park.

There is probably nothing like it anywhere in the world. At one time this was merely a recreation park, with its bazaars and shops and side shows, but the movies came and conquered, and today they dominate the whole district.

There is a main street three squares long, in addition to side streets, and every closely packed structure is a motion picture theater. Their fronts are embellished with the most gorgeous decorations; posters, streamers, rococo plaster work and paper lanterns.

Sunday Crowds Are Large

On Sundays, Asakusa Park is packed with bareheaded and wide-eyed Oriental humanity. The crowds are so dense that one can scarcely elbow his way through, but the American of average stature is so much taller than these little people that he can see over all their heads and get a very good idea of what is going on. It is a quaintly interesting crowd; fathers with babies in their arms and mothers with babies on their backs, and through all the commotion the infants remain sound asleep. Little tads in polka dot and flowered kimonos and sandals or clogs will pause before a theater and gaze at the posters in rapt wonder.

The crowds move on slowly, stopping here and there to consider the merits of each film before favoring any with their patronage. The sharp "Ee-yup! Ee-yup!" of the bally-hoo men is heard above the murmur of the shuffling throngs, and here and there a barker will give an uncanny, nasal recital of the attractions of the film his house is showing. At the doors are demure little Japanese girls, as dainty as roses in their gay kimonos and immaculate white aprons. They greet each patron with a shy smile as they accept the tickets.

Spectators Are Shoeless

One always removes his shoes when visiting a Japanese home, hotel, temple and some shops, and the picture house is no exception. As it is a comparatively modern institution, some concessions are made, and at the entrance of some houses an attendant slips a sort of flannel carriage boot, held in place by an elastic band, over the street shoes of the patron. This is done in theaters which exhibit American and English films and are patronized by the foreigner. In these same theaters, however, the Japanese remove their street clogs or straw sandals, and are given a wooden identification tag by the attendant. By the long row of these cunning little clogs greeting the visitor at every theater entrance one can judge the size of the audience within.

The houses are designed with a main floor and balcony, similar to American theaters, part of the seating space being devoted to broad tiers of stalls in which the Japanese and his family may sit upon the floor, and in which position they are, very obviously, more comfortable than in chairs. Conventional theater seats are provided in the rear of the theaters for those who prefer them.

Manager Wears Frock Coat

At the opening of the show the manager steps upon the stage in the inevitable frock coat, which is a mark of distinction all over Japan at every function, and he launches forth in a rather tiresome talk on the film to be shown. Just before the picture is thrown upon the screen a two-piece orchestra, perhaps a violin and a piano, will strike up a tune in American fashion, but the strains are not as seductive as they might be, for Occidental music is an unfamiliar art in Japan, and one may recognize snatches of "Marching Through Georgia" and "My Hula-Hula Girl" pretty well scrambled with other airs.

If it is an American film, and very likely the opener will be, a speaker will describe the scenes and action in Japanese, and his Oriental conception of Occidental situations would doubtless be most interesting to an American if he could understand it.

Most of the Japanese films are portrayals of the legitimate Japanese drama. A Japanese play is largely dialogue with very little action, and exceedingly tedious to the uncomprehending foreigner. There may be a thousand feet of film showing two or three characters seated on the floor engaged in conversation and nothing more. And here the speaker comes into play again, for the audience cannot know what it is all about unless the silent actor's conversation is repeated to them. This is done in a weird, gutteral chant, and there must be many thrills in those lines, for the collective Japanese audience is "moved from tears to laughter and to tears again" in rapid succession.

Next Russell Picture Is of Treasure Hunt

William Russell, American Film Company star, has started on his fifth production of the present American series of six.

His new story takes him in an altogether different pictorial direction. It is a story of a treasure hunt in South America. Raymond L. Shrock wrote the story and Edward Sloman will direct it. The sets required cost much money but President Hutchinson after reading the script, smiled and ordered the play to proceed.

"Cannot produce a picture worth while without an outlay," he said.

The new picture is said to be extremely picturesque and will hit the high notes on an entirely new plan of costumes and setting. A large number of extra people will be required and Sloman is sitting up nights planning the details of the rehearsals.

Russell will not actually take his company to South America to search for the treasure—he claims he has it right in the picture. The South American atmosphere will be reproduced in Santa Barbara.

Screen Star Weds

Hero of thousands of tempestous stage love scenes, idol of misty-eyed matinee girls of years gone, nowadays a screen star at the Thomas H. Ince studios, Melbourne MacDowell has been snared by the wily love god he has so often propitiated or flouted in the mimic world. He was married recently at Riverside, Cal., to Mrs. Caroline Wells Neff. About six weeks ago, MacDowell had a nervous breakdown, together with an injury to his shoulder while making a picture. He was taken to the private rest home of Mrs. Neff, who has for years been a trained nurse. The acquaintance thus formed, ripened into a real romance. The bridegroom was the husband of the late Fanny Davenport who died in 1898.

Serial "Heavy" Is Ill

Leo D. Maloney, well known leading and heavy man, who has supported Miss Helen Holmes in "The Lost Express," Mutual-Signal serial, is confined to the Sisters' Hospital, Los Angeles, with a severe case of muscular rheumatism. Cinematographer S. A. Sues of the same company occupies a room a short distance down the hall.

Mutual Program Topped by "The Planter"

Special Seven Reeler Is Staged in Central America—Juliette Day Is Starred

"THE PLANTER," a seven-reel spectacle produced from Henry Whitaker's novel, with Tyrone Power in the leading role, tops Mutual's release schedule for the week of November 12. "The Planter" is released as a special. The star production release of the week is "Betty and the Buccaneers," a pretty five-reel drama from the American studios starring Juliette Day, the Broadway actress.

"The Planter" is a gorgeous production. It has been built from one of the strongest, most virile stories of the decade. Herman Whitaker spent months in Central America gathering material for his book and it has been acknowledged as one of the most truthful portrayals ever written of conditions in the tropics.

The motion picture was produced by F. M. Manson under the personal direction of the author who went into southern Mexico with a company of a hundred actors and a technical staff to supervise the filming of the scenes from his book. Few productions have ever been made under more careful direction, with greater attention to detail and with more wonderful scenic effects.

"The Planter" cost approximately $250,000 to produce. The sponsors of the picture gave Mr. Whitaker and the technical staff free rein in the matter of expense and the production shows in every scene that neither money nor effort was spared to turn out a flawless picture.

Tyrone Power, who carries the leading role, is one of America's foremost actors. He has a stage and screen career of successful productions dating back to the early nineties. He is admirably cast in "The Planter" as Ludwig Hertzer, the domineering, cruel, merciless planter. The supporting cast includes Lamar Johnstone, Lucille King, Pearl Elmore, Helen Bateman, Mabel Wiles, Louis Fitzroy and George O'Dell.

Mutual has issued a comprehensive and complete press book on the production.

Miss Day in Third Picture

"Betty and the Buccaneers" is Miss Juliette Day's third production for Mutual. The Broadway star who scored a hit in "Upstairs and Down" and whose first two motion pictures—"The Rainbow Girl" and "The Calendar Girl"—proved out with high box office value, is cast as a dreaming little miss in "Betty and the Buccaneers." The production is in five reels. It was directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Supporting Miss Day in the picture are Charles Marriott, Joe King, William Kyle, Tote du Crow, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson.

Chapter IX of "The Lost Express," the fifteen chapter Mutual-Signal photo-novel, is entitled "The Looters" and it was during the filming of this episode that Helen Holmes, playing the role of Helen Thurston, nearly lost her life.

The chapter closes with a fight aboard a runaway ore car between Miss Holmes and Leo Maloney, who plays the role of Pitts in the production. The car actually did run away down a steep incline and was smashed, realistically as well as actually in collision with a building at the foot of the hill.

Two Comedies Included

The comedy releases on the week's schedule are "That Dog Gone Dog," a one reel Strand starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry's Running Fight," a one reel Cub comedy featuring George Ovey. The Ovey Comedies are directed by Milton Fahrney at the Horsley Studios.

Title Is Changed

The title of Harold Lockwood's next Metro play has been changed from "Love Me for Myself Alone" to "The Square Deceiver."

The Pioneer Days of Motion Pictures

OLD TIME FEATURE FILM WAS 250 FEET LONG

FRED COSMAN, a pioneer in the motion picture field, recalls some interesting bits of history that show the remarkable strides made by the industry in the twenty-two years of his connection with it. Mr. Cosman is the owner of the Electric Theater in St. Joseph, Mo., where he has lived for the last fourteen years.

When he entered the field of moving pictures storage batteries were the only source of illumination. It required two hours to set up a projection machine, and he was playing mostly one night stands. While the operator adjusted his fifty-foot roll of film for projection two phonograph records were played for the entertainment of the audience. If he got the film in upside down, two more records were played while this was corrected.

No One Knew Pictures Then

A motion picture operator needed to know a great deal about electricity then. Mr. Cosman was assembling arc lights for an arc light company in New York. Lyman H. Howe advertised for someone who knew about arc lights. He would no doubt have advertised for a man who knew something about motion pictures, if there had been such a man in those days. He figured that a good electrician could be taught. Applications were made at the Morton house, and fifteen men appeared. They were asked to examine his old Vitagraph machine and make suggestions.

The Vitagraph and the Biograph were the only machines in existence and were sold on a state royalty basis. The 1¾-inch film was used by the Vitagraph and the 2-inch on the Biograph.

The only two theaters in the country that exhibited pictures were Keith's Fourteenth street, which had the Biograph, and the Eden museum, which had a Vitagraph, both in New York. Keith's paid $1,000 for the machine.

The first picture they projected was of the Empire state express. The film was 250 feet long and realistic sound effects were supplemented. People in the audience often had to be quieted when they thought the train was coming their way, but otherwise it was a great success.

Two months after Mr. Cosman applied for place with Lyman Howe, he received a railroad ticket to Wilkes-barre, Pa. Mr. Howe had bought the Pennsylvania and New York royalty rights, and needed an operator to travel. It took two weeks to assemble the machine and experiment with it. The first show was held at Deposit, N. Y. Howe had six 50-foot films and twelve phonograph records. As the films operated on a spool bank one could be run all evening, and they were always encored.

"The May Irwin Kiss"—she was a young thing then—was the most popular picture of the time and was thirty feet long. It was never run less than three times, and was invariably encored twice.

Picture Starts Upside Down

The first engagement, which was booked with the idea of giving the machine a trial, went along famously except that the operator flashed one picture upside down. That, of course, took two additional phonograph records to regain its equilibrium. An advance booking agent was employed, who obtained bookings chiefly with persons interested in church benefits and who gave Mr. Howe 60 per cent of the proceeds.

The price of admission was 75 cents and $1. The Deposit exhibition was the first outside of New York, and Cosman the first operator to travel and the third to operate a machine in America.

The operator often had to run his own wires from the telephone pole outside the building. The electric currents were 52 or 104 volts and were alternating. Very little direct current was used except in the arc circuit, which ran 2,000 and 6,000 volts. At Natec, Mass., a 6,000 voltage had to be used. A man was stationed at the circuit breaker where it entered the building. It is thought to be the heaviest voltage ever used on a motion picture machine. The 2,000-volt circuit was the most often used and was the best current then in use for the machine.

Realism Frightens Audience

The realism of the pictures was not the only thing that sometimes frightened the audiences. Often a cable had to be run from where the wire entered the building to the machine. It was on the floor and a heavy rug was laid over it. People would not even step over it, but would walk as far away as possible.

Howe was very proud of his machine and no one was allowed to see it in action. The projection part was boxed immediately after a performance. A box of old films was always carried, as everywhere the people demanded souvenirs.

In the four and one-half years Cosman was with Howe, only one engagement was cancelled and that was because the alternating arc circuit could not be used in a Vermont town. The power house was some distance from the theater, and the operator was obliged to wave a handkerchief as the signal to turn on the electricity. Then it was impossible to draw an arc of sufficient brilliancy for screen use.

Operator's Salary $5 Weekly

After being with Howe for two years, Cosman was making $5 a week and expenses. One day another motion picture man happened along and offered him $15. He placed the matter before his employer, who offered him $18 a week, considering, Howe said, that Cosman had been a good boy. Back in New York once more the pioneer operator went into the matter of the wages of motion picture men and found that the six operators then in the country were making $100 a week.

With a man named Barnes as his partner, Cosman started exhibiting what were called the Cosman-Barnes pictures, and was the only exhibitor on the road besides Howe. Howe managed to buy out first Barnes and then Cosman, who went back to his old employer, with whom he worked two more years. At Eagle Rock, N. J., the pictures were shown at a place directly back of the present Edison motion picture factory at Orange, N. J.

Three Machines in Field

At this time the three machines in the country were the Edison, Vitagraph and the Lubin. The Vitagraph had reduced its film to the standard width, and the Biograph had gone out of existence. Important discoveries and inventions were being made rapidly on the machines. Cosman, for example, conceived the idea of using the sprocket wheel instead of what was called the "kicker." The tension springs were another new discovery.

As the films became longer they could not be allowed to run into a flour sack as was done in the earlier days, and Cosman was the first operator to use the take-up, which rewound the film.

Corinne Griffith, of Vitagraph.

Young Star Is Making Good Record

Corinne Griffith started with the western Vitagraph studios under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon. She made a big hit, and disappeared for awhile, only to reappear with the eastern Vitagraph companies as a featured-player.

Miss Griffith was born in Dallas, Texas, and is young, talented and beautiful, with large, expressive eyes and delicate features.

She is essentially a modern actress, earnest and ambitious, a thoughtful girl, who studies out her parts, one who is really in love with her art.

Since appearing at the Brooklyn studios Corinne Griffith has played with Earle Williams in "The Stolen Treaty," "The Transgression," and "The Love Doctor," with Harry Morey in the Robert Chambers story, "Who Goes There?" and is now being featured in O. Henry's tale, "A Municipal Report."

Producers Making Longer Pictures

REVIEW BOARD FINDS FINER DRAMAS ARE INCREASING

The National Board of Review has just made its annual report to the members of its advisory committee who are scattered all over the United States. This advisory committee helps to keep the national board in touch with public opinion in the several local cities. In this report of W. A. Barrett, review secretary, "The Trend of the Photoplay in the Last Year" is discussed.

By W. A. Barrett.

THE outstanding feature in the development of the photo-drama in the last few months is the ever increasing number of longer pictures, five and seven reelers, in proportion to pictures of the one and two-reel variety. And in the making of these feature productions more and more thought, time, energy and money is being employed.

The result of this care and effort is evident in a finer dramatic finish and greater reserve, and in the avoidance of the bizarre and sensational which in the popular mind have marked the motion picture, from its inception as a dramatic medium, as an art form inferior to the spoken drama.

This does not mean that the generality of pictures reaches the high-water mark set by a very few productions that have just been instanced as placing the motion picture, as far as its possibilities are concerned, on the highest dramatic level, but implies that the average production of five or more reels is cleaner and more serious entertainment than it has ever been before.

Suggestion Replaces Detail

Constant advice and trained opinion have acquainted the producers and directors with the advantage of restraint, and the fruit of their more careful methods is to be seen every day by the trained and unbiased eye in the successful "putting across" of character and situation on the screen by suggestion rather than by cold-blooded photographing of detail. Such pictures as "The Honor System," "The Manxman," "Polly of the Circus," "The Sawdust Ring," "War Brides," "The People Vs. John Doe," and the true health-giving comedies of Douglas Fairbanks, are evidences of the best in this development.

Two other elements in this encouraging upward movement of a too often unintelligently abused but greatly loved amusement and teacher, are the improvement of the short comedies designated as "slapstick," and the unmistakable beginning of the really-truly child's pictures.

The first is noticeable in the gradual passing of the black-jack and the brickbat used by the chief comedian to render his fellow actors hors d'combat, and the greater prevalence of the suggestion of plot; also in the very evident decrease of suggestion and vulgar antic, the direct cause of persistent eliminations, which were sometimes formerly used as a bellows for the dying flickerings of comedy.

The second is evinced by such a picture as "Jack and the Beanstalk," a quaint and imaginative visualization of the tale that has set the mouths of innumerable children agape.

This picture was made with as much care and expenditure as has hitherto been put on the most pretentious photoplay for adults, and is conclusive proof that its producer has seen the great use to which motion pictures can be put in appealing in a healthy way to that vast audience which is still interested in doings in the realms of Grimm, Anderson and Mother Goose.

Enter Social Research

The pioneer work in the regions of social research which the motion pictures are now doing in earnest—photoplays by such intelligent authors and directors as Lois Weber (Mrs. Philip Smalley)—is not the least significant phase of their development. These pictures, naturally, are provoking two kinds of opinion, that opposed to the accepted order of things and that adhering to it; but, in considering pictures of this type, it must be remembered that the purpose of propaganda is to create discussion, until values are weighed and standards reshaped.

And, after all, the future of the motion picture as a servant of society lies in its ability to teach, reveal and prophesy, and not merely to amuse mildly by allowing itself to be pushed back upon innocuous themes. If sometimes pictures are to be criticized because their authors and directors have been tempted to bite off too big a piece of moral pie, and the juice runs in an unsightly way, and the moral confection is disfigured, there is large cause to be thankful that they feel there are problems to discuss and that the motion picture may properly be used to discuss them, and there is cause to forgive them their crudities and absurdities.

Regulation Must Be Wise

And let it be said that motion picture regulation must be mighty wise in laying restraining hands on pioneer thought. For the world has advanced in art and morality along the footprints of the mountain-climbers and jungle breakers.

Not till the voice of Ibsen came thundering from the Norway fiords did the English-speaking stage, cynical or inane in its superficial conventionality from the days of Congreve, say anything of benefit to English-speaking people. The Norwegian's propaganda liberated the stage. Shall it be ruled that an Ibsen cannot come to the aid of the photoplay?

As for the propaganda photoplay, let it be said that anyone has a right to state one side of an argument. If a picture does this, it is merely asserting its propaganda rights.

These are simply impressions gathered from general observation of the current year in the photoplay world, and a scrutiny of the most noteworthy production. The fact they point to is that the motion picture is better food for the people than ever.

Take Great Pains with Petrova Film

Expert Cutters Work Slowly to Insure Best Results With "Daughter of Destiny"

IN response to inquiries that have come to Petrova Picture company as to why "Daughter of Destiny," the first Petrova picture, was delayed beyond October 22, the date first announced, Frederick L. Collins, president of the company, authorized the announcement that the filming of the picture was completed by Madame Petrova exactly as scheduled, and that the postponment of the date of release has been due to the care that was taken to insure the mechanical perfection of the picture, in titling, tinting and cutting, the picture having been gone over a half-dozen times by expert cutters to insure that each reel has been stripped of superfluous details.

The Rialto Theater of New York will shortly announce the date (probably about the middle of November) when it will show "Daughter of Destiny."

As a sign that Madame Petrova is putting her whole heart into the production of this series of pictures, it may be noted that Madame Petrova started work on her second picture just nineteen hours after the first one was completed. This second picture is now well under way at the Biograph studios. Madame Petrova has been fortunate in securing from L. Case Russell a scenario that contrasts sharply with the theme of "Daughter of Destiny" and which is yet quite as full of opportunities for vivid dramatic effects.

Wide-spread interest has been created throughout the public by the announcement that Madame Petrova in this new series of pictures is to produce what may be called "feminist plays"—plays based on what women really think and do and not what men imagine they think. Petrova appreciates that there is real drama in these subjects, and she has no fear of appealing to a distinctly feminine class, since the life of man is interwoven with that of woman.

"If 'Daughter of Destiny' is a feminist play," say the officers of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, which will release the picture through its Circuit, "it is also a distinctly masculine play, and we expect to see both men and women crowding our theaters to get a foretaste of Petrova Pictures."

Film Salesmen Hosts

The Motion Picture Salesmen's Association of Philadelphia tendered a banquet to the exchange managers of the Quaker City at the Vendig Hotel recently. Four vaudeville acts contributed to the evening's entertainment. The salesmen's association has a membership of forty-eight. Its officers are George Mallaird, of Pathe, president; Edwin Booth, Fox, vice-president; C. U. Martin, secretary-treasurer; Sam Lefko, recording secretary; and Daniel Heenan, sergeant at arms.

Reproduce Egyptian Street for "Thais"

Builders Erect Temple Modeled After One That Stood in Alexandria in Year 400

A FAITHFUL reproduction of one of the principal streets of the ancient city of Alexandria, Egypt, is a scenic feature of Goldwyn's production of "Thais," Mary Garden's first motion picture vehicle.

On the lot back of the studio at Fort Lee there has been erected a group of buildings reproducing in the finest and most artistic detail every architectural and structural feature of Egypt's "golden city" of the Fourth Century. Still pagans 400 years after the birth of Christ, Romans, Greeks and Egyptians worshipped in marble temples the old gods of their fathers, while the Christians, but lately freed from three centuries of martyrdom, still prayed in dark caves and secret cellars in constant peril of fresh outbreaks of persecution.

The Greek-Egyptian temple at the head of the street is the most imposing structure in the great set. Across its commanding front are six Byzantine columns, each sixty feet high and fifteen feet about the base. Downward from these leads a flight of seventy stone steps, constructed, for photographic purposes, of concrete, but strikingly like the originals they duplicate.

The temple is 115 feet high from the foot of the steps to the peak of the roof and 140 feet wide. The street, of the width of the temple, is 350 feet long. On each side of it are a score or more of small shops, houses, booths and similar structures.

A force of fifty men working seven days a week for nearly three weeks built this tremendous scene set. When the scene is photographed more than 1,500 men and women will be required to people it.

The photography of "Thais" is progressing splendidly. There have been few delays unanticipated.

Miss Leah Baird was chosen by the Cinema Club of the Bronx Exhibitors to lead the grand march of their ball to be held Monday, November 5. Her partner in the march was Earle Williams.

Hart Is Arrested as "Bad Man"

From the serious mien of Thomas H. Ince, the noted film producer, one would hardly credit him with being a practical joker. He has a deep sense of humor, however, and is not averse to giving it vent, as the members of his company have discovered.

While making "The Silent Man," which will soon be released by Artcraft, Ince and the famous William S. Hart, who is the star in the film, journeyed to a small town in California looking for a suitable location for one of the scenes. In this picture Hart runs foul of the law and a reward is offered for his capture. The handbills, with a picture of Hart, which were to be photographed in the film, were gotten up by a Los Angeles printer, and Ince had a copy in his pocket.

When they reached the town, some distance from the railroad, they discovered that owing to its isolation the inhabitants were far behind the times, and did not even boast of a motion picture theater.

While Hart was in the make-shift hotel, Ince met the chief of police, and giving him one of the handbills told him where to find Hart, agreeing to divide the reward of $2,000 offered. The chief got together a half dozen husky individuals who soon made the famous star a prisoner, in spite of his protestations. In the meantime Ince had disappeared, and Hart languished in the calaboose, glaring through the bars at the citizens who came to take a look at the desperado.

Ince finally returned and fixed up matters with the chief, but by this time Hart was in a towering temper. He did not appreciate the joke, but when the humor of the situation dawned upon him he promised to be good if they would let him out.

High Cost of Toads Is Alarming

One of the big scenes in the motion picture production of "Thais," in which Mary Garden will make her first appearance as a motion picture star, calls for an assortment of animals both wild and tame calculated to give even the most abstemious of property men a bad half hour. The animals required range from burros to snakes and a toad.

It was the toad which caused the commotion. It was to be the toad's "bit" in the production to hop merrily along a street in ancient Alexandria and play about the feet of a dozen-odd beggars propped against the walls of the houses and asking alms from passers-by.

Director Frank H. Crane received the shock of his life when the man from whom the animals were rented demanded $25 for the services of the toad, claiming it was a trained animal.

Old Screen Team Reunited

In "Sunshine Alley," Goldwyn's second Mae Marsh starring vehicle, one of the most celebrated acting teams of the screen is reunited. From the early days of the industry, when two reels of film constituted a feature, there were few productions in which Mae Marsh played without Robert Harron. Mae and Robert appear together in "Sunshine Alley" for the first time in many months.

Robert once was D. W. Griffith's office boy.

U. S. Exhibitors' Plans Are Complete

Vigorous Business Drive Will Cover Entire Continent—First Feature Ready for Market

ARRANGEMENTS for the launching of a country-wide business drive in the interest of the newly organized U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation are rapidly being rushed to completion and within another week the organization will be in full operation having executive offices in New York, and branches in every important city in the United States and Canada.

The New York headquarters, under the supervision of Frank Hall and William Oldknow, moving spirits in the new organization, incorporate the accounting, main booking, publicity and advertising departments. The staff took possession on Monday of offices comprising the entire top floor of the Times Building at Forty-second street and Broadway.

Distribution of the U. S. productions in many of the large cities of the country will be handled by the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges. The Southern territory will be in charge of Mr. Oldknow who operates a chain of exchanges in all of the principal cities south of the Mason-Dixon line, with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia. The Frank Gersten exchange will handle distribution in New Jersey. The Canadian territory also will be covered by the Foursquare system, which has made a record for salesmanship under the direction of M. H. Hoffman. Subjects will be marketed by a system of exchanges that girdle this country and Canada, numbering in the aggregate about twenty-five branches.

Give Exhibitors Special Aid

A special representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation will be stationed in each of the aforementioned exchanges and it will be his duty to attend solely to the exploitation of the U. S. productions. Not only will he book the pictures but he will assist the exhibitor in the important work of promotion. A system of active co-operation by which the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation will lend special aid to exhibitors in exploiting its film is now engaging the attention of advertising experts.

The work of organizing the sales force in the Western territory is in charge of Joseph Partridge, one time general manager of the V. L. S. E. in New York and later affiliated with the Triangle Distributing Company. Mr. Partridge has left this city on a tour of the Western division and will place U. S. representatives in all of the exchanges west of Philadelphia. He will visit Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Columbus, Toledo and may go out to the coast.

Mr. Partridge also will arrange for trade showings of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Thomas T. Ince's new spectacle which will be the initial release of the new enterprise. Trade showings will take place this week in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Boston, and in other Western cities next week. Showings of "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, the second of the U. S. pictures, will follow. No release date for either production has yet been announced but it is highly probable the Ince spectable will be given to the exhibitors not later than November 15. No bookings are being accepted in advance of the trade showings.

The assembling of the distribution forces in New York and elsewhere in the East is in the hands of Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the new concern, who will make his headquarters in the main office in New York. Mr. Card will devote his attention principally to the development of the metropolitan territory.

Big Ad Campaign Planned

Plans for an advertising campaign, nation wide in its scope, are being prepared by experts to assist exhibitors throughout the country in exploiting "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

A well known agency will place large advertisements heralding the new Ince production in newspapers in all of the large cities in which the U. S. branches are located. These ads will appear daily for a week in advance of the trade showings, concluding with a final full page "splash" the day of the trade presentation. Coupled with these ads which will be designed to "catch" the theater going public, will be another publicity drive in the trade publications, so that the exhibitors will have the double benefit of public and trade advertising. Similar campaigns are contemplated for all subsequent U. S. releases.

"It is the idea of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation," declared Frank Hall, president and general manager of the new enterprise, "to give the exhibitor every possible co-operation in the exploitation of our productions. Our initial release, 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' is a particularly timely subject and excellent promotion material.

"With Zeppelins again in action on the west front in Europe public interest is centered more than ever before upon these giant dirigibles. Therefore, we believe that it is up to us to let the public know that our picture presents for the first time on the screen the Zep in actual operation, bombarding towns and cities and also revealing the secrets of its construction. We do not intend to let our relations with exhibitors cease after the renting of our pictures. We are arranging to assist him in every way possible to sell it to his patrons."

Fatty Gets Enthusiastic Welcome

WHEN Manager Otis Hoyt, of the Liberty Theater in Long Beach, Cal., learned that Roscoe Arbuckle was leaving New York for his city, he planned a rousing reception for the rotund comedian. Mr. Hoyt had been playing the Arbuckle-Paramount comedies and upon receiving the news that Arbuckle was on his way west, booked a return of "Oh Doctor!" and arranged for the appearance of the star in person. With the stage braced for the occasion, Hoyt played to the largest house in the history of the theater. After addressing the audience for a few minutes the comedian introduced his jumping-jack relative, Al St. John, and the village pest, Buster Keaton. Arbuckle's canine pal and actor, "Luke," also horned in on the reception.

Manager Hoyt sprung the surprise of the evening by presenting Arbuckle with a rattan chair of generous proportions which was built expressly for the star and announced to the audience that the chair would be placed in a box which would be reserved exclusively for the Arbuckle party during their stay.

As box seats in the Liberty are thirty cents it will cost Hoyt eighteen cents every time the Arbuckle party attends his theater.

Continuity Is Important Factor

EXPERT DISCUSSES PROPER BUILDING OF PICTURE SCENARIOS

Pierre V. R. Key, advertising and sales manager of the Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, is not only a man who has a complete grasp of the problems of the motion picture industry, but has for years been an able music critic on a leading New York daily. Mr. Key's first picture, "The Fringe of Society," produced by the George Becker Film Company, is shortly to be released by the Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, Inc. What he says about continuing of pictures is interesting.

By Pierre V. R. Key.

ODD though it may at first appear, it is nevertheless true that a well developed musical sense will be found helpful to one who undertakes to write a superior motion picture scenario. Whether one is a skilled musician or has only an inherent musical feeling, this faculty cannot fail to assist in the building of a scenario —or "continuity," as it is termed in the profession.

As rhythm is the governing element in the universe it must, if we analyze matters aright, be utilized in the construction of the motion picture continuity. If this law were more generally recognized I am sure that it would aid in raising the standard of continuity-writing.

Ninety-nine picture fans in every hundred can instantly tell whether the continuity in a picture is good or bad. They will not stop to analyze it; that isn't necessary. They feel instinctively whether it is rhythmical or not; whether the scenes follow one another in proper sequence, and whether the correct values of each to the other are maintained.

Music Laws Important

Now this may or may not impress many persons as logical, yet it is true beyond doubt that the observance of the laws of music assist in creating a fine motion picture scenario or continuity. And we can easily explain why.

The contrasts in a picture are all a matter of expression of one form or another, just as in a musical composition. Dramatic values are dependent upon contrast, upon what has gone immediately before or comes after. Now to get contrast we must place emphasis of some sort on what is done. We either indicate that one thing is to be performed with vigor or without it; with rapidity or without that quality, and so on to the end of the gamut of light and shade.

In short, like the composer who indicates that one part of his composition moves andante or allegro or largo, the motion picture continuity-writer must consider the proper tempo of every scene he introduces into his manuscript. He has also to measure very carefully the constant changes of tempo, wherein he again works in a manner analagous to the creative musician.

Same Law Governs Pictures

Building a picture-continuity of broad proportions, the writer proceeds quite naturally in a major rather than in a minor key—unless his story is almost uniformly sombre throughout. He goes ahead creating what he wishes to make an approximately perfect working script from the story the author has given him. As he does so, he constructs his scenes (unconsciously or not, depending upon his natural or developed musical ability) in accordance with the laws of melodic progression in music and those which govern theory.

Let a continuity-writer lack a sense of rhythm, or be deficient in musical feeling, and his work will suffer. Nor is this confined solely to the writer of motion picture scripts; the playwright deficient in musical feeling, or the novelist, the painter or sculptor, will fail in equal measure of attaining a degree of success otherwise possible.

Must Not Smother Art

Composition is difficult work, requiring imagination and sensitiveness to many elements that many matter-of-fact folk might be inclined to regard as nonsensical. The very fact that a motion picture continuity-writer must work technically, that he has to do with the mechanics of the craft, should not pre-suppose his being mechanical to the exclusion of the finer attributes of any art. On the contrary, his work gains in proportion to his sensitiveness, for it is having this that enables him to sympathize with the subject matter of the story on which he is at work.

In other words, the cut-and-dried picture continuity that is turned out by a hurry-up man can be recognized the moment half a dozen pages of it are read. Translated in pictures upon the screen (providing the director adheres to the script) it is equally stiff.

No, writing continuities for pictures is more and more becoming recognized as an art; perhaps, some day, it may be lifted into the place it deserves. But before that moment arrives considerable changes in method of work must ensue; possibly it may be found imperative to enlist the services of men and women whose abilities are more in keeping with what is demanded.

Hours of Toil Necessary

As with great musical compositions, we find upon studying the best motion picture continuity (which occasionally crops up out of the ruck), that the desirable quality of spontaneity does not ensue from the swiftest workmanship. Every composer who ever earned a lofty place polished and repolished his work until it shone. His melodies may have had the trait of spontaneity, and his harmonies all the richness of seeming spontaneity, but no matter how inspired he was, you may be sure that innumerable hours of toil represented the finished composition.

The motion picture has passed the transitory stage; it is here to stay. More than one thing about the picture invites criticism, and those best equipped to speak say that it will develop artistically. What they undoubtedly mean is that the fabric will improve, and by that is meant the quality of the picture as a whole.

Better Pictures Will Result

But if we are to have better pictures —which is likely—it will be because we develop continuity—writers who have lived; whose education, travels and native talent peculiarly fit them for a difficult and delicate task. For as matters stand today there is too much hit-or-miss work put into most scripts, and not enough time taken to construct what is really the foundation upon which the picture must ultimately rest.

A few of the most painstaking producers are recognizing this fact, and turning it to profitable account by entrusting their continuity scripts solely to men and women of proper qualifications, and, after so doing, giving them sufficient time to do their tasks as they should be done. As a consequence there appears, from time to time, a continuity of genuine excellence.

In every such instance the producer is the financial gainer for two reasons: Because the artistic value of the picture is thereby enhanced, and for the reason that being a better picture its commercial worth automatically advances.

False Idea of Economy

It is only the "penny-wise" producer who entrusts the making of a picture-continuity to a low-priced writer who, being that, is almost without exception incompetent. The scrimpy producer may think he has economized by engaging a script-writer to do a six or seven-reel feature for $300 or $400, but in reality he hasn't. On the contrary he has shown nothing but utter disregard for his own interests. He does this in forgetting that if he is to spend many thousands of dollars on the finished product that the foundation should be as strong as possible.

Let me illustrate: Assume that an excellent six-reel picture is planned, one which cannot be adequately made for less than $25,000 to $40,000. Assume, further, that the rights to a novel have been purchased (or an original story by a well-known writer) for $5,000, or even twice or three times that amount—something by no means uncommon in these days of motion pictures.

Wherein is there economy in continuity construction by engaging a "cheap" writer to lay the most important part of the picture edifice? The producer doesn't hesitate to pay a director four or five thousand dollars for his task; nor to contract for several players whose salaries are considerably more than $500 a week. He is also ready to pay liberally for his production and other necessaries.

Writers Should Be Paid

Why, then, in the light of sheer common sense should he hesitate to pay a proper compensation to an unquestionably competent continuity-writer? If he were not "pound foolish" he would. Because in so doing he would be doing nothing more sensible than buying insurance (and the best sort of insurance) against the satisfactory completion of his picture.

The few progressive producers of whom I previously spoke have learned the basic secret of making a good picture. Nowadays these producers are attaining a higher mean average in the artistic and commercial quality of their output. And the secret is the retention of the continuity-writer deserving the name and earning, and getting, proportionate compensation.

These producers no longer "rush" their continuity-writers. Instead, they insist on their taking all the time desired, within reason. In place, therefore, of turning out a continuity in ten days or two weeks, the writer spends at least that period in getting acquainted with the story and blocking out the first rough draft. He (or she) becomes saturated with the story, lives with it, so to speak, until it is virtually a part of himself.

Writer Is Attuned to Story

By degrees the story begins to take picturized form in the writer's mind. Now there begins the real work on the continuity, for the writer has put himself in full sympathy with the story—he has, in brief, attuned his nature to the key of the story and is moving along with it rhythmically.

Another four, or even five, weeks may be required to finish the continuity. Day by day the writer progresses. As he does so, he builds scene after scene, considering a multitude of details that do not appear in any other form of work. Here is where his musical sense is called upon, and the more pronounced it is, the smoother will be the finished script.

And as the continuity grows it will be found, under the hands of the best writers, to be exhaustive in covering every essential required in making the picture. No scene which does not advance the action can be allowed to have a place in the script. Every scene must be in its proper place. Likewise, with the best writers, will minute consideration be shown for whether the scene is a "wide angle" or "close up" or "semi-close up." Equal thought will be spent upon the entrances of the characters, their subsequent action and the exits—if there be any.

Sincere Director Accepts Aid

I know that many directors object to scripts in which too much detail is specified, yet no sincere director having at heart the best interests of the product will object to any suggestions that may be of help. Often, these suggestions may invite discussion out of which a "better" may ensue.

Building a motion picture scenario or continuity after the fashion herein described is the only way. And as it represents the best labor and is time consuming, it is worth being adequately paid for. Nowadays the progressive producers do not hesitate to pay from $1,200 to $1,500 for a six or seven-reel continuity. More than that, they grant as much time as is consistent—which means six or seven, or even eight, weeks for the completion of the work.

When the rank and file of motion picture producers move in this way, engaging the most competent writers obtainable and allowing them abundant time for their tasks, the picture will rise to its proper level. Then, and then only, will the criticism now aimed at motion pictures be modified and the product take on a quality inviting commendation.

Atlanta Censors Follow National Board's Lead

The Atlanta Board of Review of Motion Pictures, which is made up of a committee of the Carnegie Library of that city, and is authorized to act in such capacity by the city, has just published a synopsis of its policy. This is largely based upon the general policy of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. In the foreword of the pamphlet it states:

"The Board of Review is the official correspondent in Atlanta of the national board. The members are corresponding members of the national board, and the president of the Atlanta board is a member of the national advisory committee of the central body. The weekly official bulletin of the national board forms the basis of advance information. It is, therefore, unnecessary that all pictures reaching Atlanta should be reviewed by the local committee. Complete information regarding their character is obtained as herein described and close co-operative relations are maintained between the Atlanta board and the national board."

Picture Audiences Display Closer National Unity

"The war is greatly changing the attitude of the public of the country regarding motion pictures," said Elmer Scott, former commissioner of public welfare of Dallas, Texas, and recently elected to membership on the advisory committee of the National Board of Review, when in New York a few days ago.

"It has opened the minds of the public and tended to nationalize us all. It is blotting out provincialism. The attitude of the people in the theaters of Dallas, for instance, regarding motion pictures has changed in the last six months. We now think as you do about them. Our audiences laugh at the same things, and seem to think in the same way that the people of Manhattan and other sections of the country do. This is a clear evidence of the new national point of view which all America is gaining as a result of this tremendous conflict. It is too bad that it seems to require such a world upheaval and shedding of blood to bring about this closer community of feeling."

Jack Standing, Actor, Dies

Jack Standing, an actor on the legitimate stage and before the camera, is dead at Los Angeles, Cal. His father, Herbert Standing, is well known in the film world and his two brothers, Guy and Percy, are prominent as actors. Guy Standing, once a star on the American stage, is now fighting with the British army.

Business Is Good in the South

TRAVELERS FIND EXHIBITORS ENCOURAGED OVER PROSPECTS

A SPECIAL meeting of his sales chiefs was called last week by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distribution, at which he received a complete report on conditions in all parts of the country. For several weeks prior to the conference, which was held in the company's offices in New York, Mr. Irwin had had the company's eastern and western division managers, E. Auger and H. D. Naugle on special tours of their respective territories and A. W. Goff, assistant general manager, made a special trip to the south to study conditions there.

Mr. Goff visited New Orleans, Atlanta, Baltimore and Washington, and spent a day in Philadelphia on his way to New York. He brought back encouraging reports of conditions among the exhibitors of the South, especially in Louisiana and Mississippi. He said that the sugar situation is going to have a splendid effect on theatrical conditions, especially in the outlying parishes of the state where the greater part of the population relies on the sugar industry for its income. Mississippi, he found, is enjoying an era of prosperity as the result of the good prices for cotton. The same condition prevails in Georgia.

One of the main purposes of General Manager Irwin in sending his aides out was to have them confer with exhibitors on the federal tax problem and to assist them in any way possible to surmount the difficulties resulting from it.

Send Tax Letter to Patrons

Practically all exhibitors have reproduced in programs or on placards displayed in lobbies and over ticket windows notices that the government has ordered the collection of the tax. On the advice of the Vitagraph representatives, who followed out a previously arranged plan, many of the exhibitors have sent out letters putting the matter to their patrons in a simple proposition of dollars and cents as follows:

How Many Times a Year do you go to a Motion Picture Theater?

If you go once a week, or 52 times a year, you are only giving Uncle Sam .....$0.52

If you go twice a week, or 104 times a year, you are only giving Uncle Sam..... 1.04

If you go every night in the week, or 365 times a year, you are only giving Uncle Sam... 3.65

We Leave It to You—IS THIS TOO MUCH FOR YOU TO CONTRIBUTE IN THE FIGHT FOR WORLD FREEDOM?

REMEMBER! Our Boys are matching THEIR Lives Against YOUR Pennies!

This argument is based on the ten-cent admission and changes were made in the figures to apply to higher priced houses.

Dry Law Makes Business

Mr. Goff also reported that all the exhibitors in the District of Columbia are looking forward to a huge increase in business at the nation's capital as the result of the "bone-dry" law going into effect, and his company's salesmen are urging exhibitors to make a special drive in newspapers to make "fans" of that element of the population that heretofore made up the "regulars" in the places that specialized in first aid to the thirsty.

Olive Thomas Appears in Siren Role

"Indiscreet Corinne" Is Offered on Same Bill With Roy Stewart in "The Medicine Man"

ROY STEWART, Triangle's western comboy actor, who was the owner of a large Mexican cattle ranch before Villa bandits dispossessed him, appears in a new western drama called "The Medicine Man," on November 11th. On the same bill is Olive Thomas, the dainty Broadway comedienne, in "Indiscreet Corinne," a comedy-drama with which Triangle expects to make a new record. Miss Thomas is shown in a scene from this play on the frontispiece of this edition of MOTOGRAPHY.

"The Medicine Man" deals with the life of Jim Walton (Stewart), the adventure-loving guardian of the peace in El Dorado. A patent medicine fakir, named Doc Hamtilon, comes to El Dorado at a time when the peace and quiet of the community is beginning to pall on Walton, and in the person of the little dancing girl (Ann Kronan), whose dancing draws the crowds to hear about the bottled cure-all, the stalwart sheriff finds work cut out for him.

The beautiful little girl and a valuable gold mine, to which she has secret title, become the stakes in a gripping struggle in the cause of justice. This is Miss Kronan's second appearance under the Triangle banner, her debut being with Walt Whitman in "The Tar Heel Warrior," in September.

In "Indiscreet Corinne," Olive Thomas is a protected little butterfly of the upper social strata who tires of the quiet, conservative safety of her position. She has a French maid, and it is said that French maids and scandalous escapades are synonymous. In any event, Corinne does not seek excitement in vain. The action of the plot is rapid, too rapid at times for the little girl, whose parents have sent out detectives to end her career as a mysterious masked dancer. According to one of the sub-titles, "a marriage license covers a multitude of improprieties," and papa and mama forgive her when she brings home the man whom she was engaged to capture.

The climax of the plot, staged in the office of the publicity man who is financing the adventures of both Corinne and her supposed "victim," furnishes a genuine surprise.

As the wealthy but unknowing social climbers, Jeremiah Cotter Brown, the toothpick king, and his obese wife, contribute much humor with their designs on the bogus noblewoman (Josephine Sedgwick) and the prominent South American hero (George Chesebro).

Church Leaders Recognize Power of Films

PLAN CO-OPERATION BETWEEN PRODUCERS AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS

THE producers of motion pictures who are members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have recently entered into a plan of co-operation with a special committee representing the Board of Sunday Schools (in whose schools there are more than 4,000,000 scholars) of the Methodist Episcopal Church, through which feature pictures, scenics, comedies and short dramas are to be shown on Saturday afternoon and evening at the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, West One Hundred and Fourth street, in New York. Dr. Christian F. Reisner is the pastor of this progressive house of worship. This special committee has selected an alert young college graduate, J. V. Lacy of Chicago, who will direct the use of the pictures and study the moral, educational and recreational effects of the pictures.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry a communication requesting the co-operation of the prominent producers was presented and Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott was empowered to arrange for the various programs which this committee requires.

Special Programs Arranged

The afternoon programs are being made up for miscellaneous groups of children absolutely non-sectarian and without discrimination. These audiences range in attendance from five hundred to one thousand children. In the evening the programs comprise feature pictures for the family groups, the attendance averaging about five hundred.

The committee consists of the following: Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor Grace Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. C. M. Stuart, President Garrett Biblical Institute; Frank L. Brown, General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association; Prof. W. J. Thompson, Drew Theological Seminary, and Dr. Edgar Blake, Executive Secretary Board of Sunday Schools of Chicago.

Dr. Christian F. Reisner was the pioneer pastor to use motion pictures in connection with his Sunday night service and is thoroughly conversant with the progress and development of the film as an educational institution.

Try Pictures on Kiddies

It is proposed to form a large representative committee of Sunday school and church workers in New York which is to select and try out pictures upon different groups of children for the purpose of recommending these films all over the United States, either for Sunday school use or with advice to religious leaders that they can recommend these particular photoplays to their people as worthy of being seen.

The pictures will be studied not only from the viewpoint of their educational value, but also their use for restful recreation will be measured and published. It is believed that the church should co-operate in securing the right kind of recreation for the people, and this proper motion pictures can provide.

Dr. Reisner in his letter to President William A. Brady of the National Association stated that he and his associates fully recognized the great power and usefulness of motion pictures, and felt confident that the high ideals of the men in the business are convinced of the responsibility in molding the lives and character of the people in this country. He added that it was not their purpose to dictate, but they honestly desire to be helpful in giving wider circulation to those pictures of merit and proven usefulness.

The pictures which are recommended at large will also be referred to the International Sunday School Board, representing all Protestant denominations, and to one or two other interdenomination committees.

Magazines Will Help

The reports on the motion pictures which are shown to these associations will be the subject of published reports in the leading educational magazines including the papers and periodicals devoted to the church and Sunday schools.

The plan of co-operation was effectively put into operation recently and its success is assured so far as the support of the motion picture interests is concerned, from the fact that all the important producers have notified the National Association that they will willingly furnish photoplays in accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Several Columbia professors have expressed a keen interest in the project and a purpose to helpfully watch it. The children filled the room at the first presentation.

Dr. Reisner feels so much encouraged by the spirit in which his work is being met by the producers that he is ready and willing to take up the question seriously with the thousands of ministers throughout the country who he believes will accept this opportunity to work out in a positive way the solving of the motion picture problem instead of clinging to the idea of postponing this solution by the negative means of indiscriminate opposition and criticism.

Dr. Reisner insists that it is natural for the church workers and motion picture producers to work together. They should not be oppositional and overly critical, but since motion pictures have such large educational value the responsibility upon the producer and exhibitor should press down so strongly that they would naturally seek the advice and sympathy of religious leaders. The Doctor's mail has been full of inquiries for months since he is recognized as sponsor for the use of motion pictures in the church. This experiment, which will be heralded through all the church and social service periodicals, will undoubtedly increase inquiries and wide-spreading interest.

O. Henry Story Basis of Feature

"I Will Repay" is Blue Ribbon Picture for November, Starring Corinne Griffith

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Greater Vitagraph Company, claims that his company has produced a 100 percent feature in "I Will Repay," a Blue Ribbon feature adapted from O. Henry's widely read novel, "A Municipal Report." It is to be released the week beginning November 12, and features Corinne Griffith with Mary Maurice and William Dunn in strong supporting roles. This is a romance of the Southland. William P. S. Earle has made a special effort to obtain local color and southern atmosphere along the "eastern shore" of Maryland. The company spent several weeks on a large estate in Talbot county.

Striking lighting effects were obtained in evening scenes under the soft southern skies. The darkies used in the picture are real types caught by the camera in their everyday lives—pickaninnies leaning over rail fences watching the hacks bring new white folks up from the depot, tough blacks in "speakeasies" invoking the power of rabbit feet as they roll the bones, and the old slave type.

President Smith has favored the feature with a well-balanced cast.

"I Will Repay" is the romance of a young Northern magazine writer and the beautiful daughter of a Southern judge, linked with the emancipation of a delicate and cultured authoress from the curse of a vicious husband.

Roger Kendall is not enthusiastic when the editor of his magazine sends him to Nashville to close a contract at two cents a word with Azalea Adair, a "coming" writer. His only knowledge of the town is gained from reading a municipal report and he anticipates a few weeks of boredom. The chief impression on his arrival is made by a torn $1 bill which he gives to the negro who drives him to Miss Adair's home. The impression is accentuated when she displays the bill in sending a maid to the store.

Among his hotel acquaintances is Major Caswell, whom he dislikes but tolerates to the extent of drinking with him at the hotel bar where the major again excites Kendall's interest by producing the same torn bill. Kendall also meets Virginia Rodney, daughter of the judge, a close friend of Azalea, who is somewhat of an invalid, and the two are at once drawn toward each other.

The real tragedy in Azalea's life is hidden from Kendall—that she is the wife of Major Caswell, who abuses her, taking every cent she can get, even the money old Caesar, the negro hackman, makes and which he forces her to accept. But the passing of the torn dollar bill to Azalea and then to Caswell creates a suspicion of the true state of affairs, and through his efforts the story

Lax Film Methods Are Eliminated

R. R. NEHLS SEES NEW ERA IN MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRIES

RICHARD R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, who spoke before the Illinois State Press Women, at the College Club, in Chicago, on November 2, handed out some plain, unvarnished facts concerning the film industry in his talk on "The Psychology of the Motion Pictures." He pointed out the urgent necessity of eliminating the bad influences of suspicion and general lax standard that prevailed at one time in the business.

"Many a man who has recently been the strongest howler against infringement of copyright laws, was an offender himself in the early days," declared Mr. Nehls. They took their film where they could get it, without regard to prior rights. If an enterprising picture firm spent time and money in getting out a good picture, the pirates would scheme to get hold of a copy and before night would have the market flooded with similar prints put out as their own pictures.

Money Grabbers Get Out

"It was such conditions as these that invited the element that dominated the industry for so long. Some of them were in it only for what they could get out of it most quickly. They made no effort to establish a dignified business or an honest industry—they gathered in all the money they could—and departed. And we were glad to see them go and we hope they'll stay out."

Mr. Nehls gave a history of the industry from the time it started with four-foot reels, put out by the mail order houses, and outlined many interesting facts not generally known.

"It is not so long ago," he stated, "when actors indignantly refused to listen to any proposition that involved work on the screen. They feared it would cheapen them if it were known that they had worked in pictures. Those who did go in, surreptitiously, as it were, used other names and sought to conceal their identity.

New Art Is Built

"Thus it came about that we were compelled to train our own actors and to build up for ourselves a new art—the eighth art, for such the motion picture has become. We used to watch on the streets and in the cars and cafes for types needed in our plays. We had to use delicacy and tact in approaching these types with a proposition to play in our pictures. Sometimes they misunderstood and glared angrily at us and looked around for the nearest policeman. Sometimes they listened to our pleading and entered into a satisfactory arrangement whereby they were to report the next morning at the studio.

"From these selections there came some of our now brilliant successes on the screen. In fact, many an actor who once indignantly refused to listen to us came later begging for an engagement. And some of them have been proud enough to see their names glittering in electric lights as screen stars.

Big Profit Days Are Over

"Gradually we are eliminating from the industry the element of people who see in it only a chance to make easy money. You might be surprised if you knew how many 'angels' there are eager and anxious to invest their savings in an enterprise that they hope will bring them enormous profits. But the days of enormous profits in the picture business are over. The profits nowadays are only such as might be found in any business enterprise, carefully handled and economically conducted.

"The motion picture business, unhappily, was built upon a foundation of suspicion, mutual distrust and sometimes downright dishonesty. For this reason it was wont to attract crooked minds. It has reaped the harvest it has sown and has learned its lesson.

Better Elements Introduced

"A new era has begun for the industry. Better elements are daily being introduced. The solid men of the early days who had ideals and who clung to them in spite of everything are now seeing the reward of their endeavor, in the building up of a sound industry, based on a business integrity that is bound to have its effect."

Mr. Nehls, in response to questions asked by the members of the association, was inclined to doubt the present success of the distinctively juvenile program. He pointed out that the public could not hope to support such enterprises as exclusively "children programs" sufficiently to allow of a desirable profit.

"The exhibitors must figure on the box office values," he concluded. "But most assuredly I believe in the future of better films and in the better films movement. I believe every representative producer today is conscientiously endeavoring to bring about a better condition in the industry and an improved output of films. Pictures are steadily growing better and the time will come when the public censor will be out of a job because the producer will be his own censor and will see to it that no picture leaves his studio for which he could have cause to blush."

Eight Companies Are Making Features

Bluebird and Butterfly Productions Are Being Prepared for Distribution Next Year

EIGHT companies are busy at Universal City creating features for distribution early in the new year on the Bluebird and Butterfly programs. These programs are scheduled well into December and there are plenty of subjects ready to be listed; but the following information applies to attractions still in the making, either at Universal City or on locations.

For the Bluebird list Joseph De Grasse is completing "The Scarlet Car," made from the late Richard Harding Davis' story of the same title, in which Franklyn Farnum will star, supported by Edith Johnson, Lon Chaney and Al W. Filson. George Siegmann is directing Carmel Myers in Doris Schroder's screen version of Frank R. Adams' popular story, "Molly and I," with Kenneth Harlan leading the supporting company.

"Broadway Love" will have Dorothy Phillips, Bluebird star, in its chief role, with William Stowell her leading man. The adaptation and directing of W. Carey Wonderly's story is to be credited to Ida May Park. Juanita Hanson, Eve Southern, Gladys Tennyson, Lon Chaney, Harry Von Meter, and William Burress are supporting Miss Phillips. "The Highest Card," directed by Rupert Julian from Elliott J. Clawson's scenario, is being produced on location as a Bluebird, with Ruth Clifford the star and Monroe Salisbury to be featured as her leading man.

The stages at Universal City are also occupied for Craig Hutchinson's comedy double-reeler, "Seeing Things," to feature Stanley Laurel and Kathleen O'Connor, while the second episode of "The Bull's Eye," an Eddie Polo serial; the last chapter of "The Red Ace," the serial now running, and the seventh episode of "The Mystery Ship," just getting under way with exhibitors, complete the current list of Universal production activities on the west coast.

Educational Films Aid Fight on Tuberculosis

One of the first steps in a campaign of education to be conducted in behalf of the proposed East Tennessee Tuberculosis Hospital for Knoxville, Tenn., was a moving picture exhibition showing in detail the various stages of tubercular conditions in New York hospitals. These pictures were shown free of charge in all the city schools during the past week and proved a revelation to the students as well as to the older persons who witnessed the exhibitions. The latest and best reels were shown, having been secured from national headquarters. The truth about the dreaded disease is portrayed in a manner far more interesting and instructive than could otherwise have been impressed on the minds of the school children and others who witnessed the pictures.

Auto Comedy Is Lively

Billy Ruge and Kate Price have a highly exciting venture in the realm of fast life when they pawn the family livestock and buy an automobile, in General Film's current Sparkle Comedy release, "A Bargain—$37.60." The car shows itself incapable of traveling at a slower speed than 109 miles an hour and wrecks almost every landmark in the country until it dashed into a ditch.

Here's a New Story on Film Star

Carlyle Blackwell Is Hero of "The Tale of the Lost Chickens," a Story of Real Life

THERE is a scene in the new World-Picture Brady-Made called "The Good For Nothing," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are the star players, which took the publicity manager back to a half hour in Chicago last Summer. Mr. Blackwell had just arrived from New York to attend the Movie Exposition and was killing a little time before making his appearance on the platform, when the publicity man quite unconsciously uncovered a rich mine of newspaper material.

"What were you driving at," he asked, merely by way of keeping the conversation going, "before you became an actor?"

"Everything you ever heard of," replied the World star so seriously that his companion was impelled to ask for particulars.

"I was a youngster at Cornell," began Blackwell, "and I knew very well I was going a pace my father could not afford, but I guess I was pretty careless, and when the holidays came around I went home just as though my actions had been all right. Well, I was received as cordially as I could have wished, and everything went along as smoothly as could be. The presents were there as of old, and the happy faces, and the good cheer, and the big dinner—and then father asked me to join him in the library.

Gets $100 for Railroad Fare

When we were alone, he talked for a few minutes about nothing in particular, and then said:

"'Carl, I have a hundred-dollar bill in my pocket that I have been undecided what to do with. I have finally concluded to give it to you to buy yourself a whole lot of railroad fare.'

"That was all, and I knew it was coming to me, so I purchased a ticket to South McAlester, Indian Territory. Why I picked that particular spot, I never knew, unless perhaps it was as far as the money would go.

"Anyway, I landed in that God-forsaken hole without a cent and not knowing a soul. But I got a job at $45 a month and furnished my own grub, as assistant to the local express agent.

Nothing to Do Till Tomorrow

"The express agent's assistant kept the books, took care of the horse, cleaned the wagon and harness, swept out the office, washed the windows, delivered all express matter, and spent the rest of his time in riotous leisure.

"I was the only young fellow in the town, and there were seven girls ranging in years from ten to seventeen. I usually had from three to all of these girls on my wagon when on my route, and the agent did not think very well of that, but stood it because active young men at forty-five per and feed themselves were not so plenty.

"Well, it came to a time when there was to be a dance in South McAlester, and of course I was in demand for such an occasion. So I sent to Sears-Roebuck for a dress suit at $25, and was right on the job.

Chickens Cause Trouble

"Everything would have been entirely lovely, but when I slipped away that night to meet the eleven-fifteen as usual, the express messenger delivered six crates of live chickens to me.

"Almost the very first crate I took hold of burst open and the chickens got away and scattered all over the place, with the assistant express agent doing his best to fulfill the duties of the police reserves and round up the riot. I caught some of the flock and put them back in their crate, but another broke open, and by the time I closed up the office it was two o'clock in the morning.

"Of course I didn't go back to the dance. That was over long before the end of the chicken episode—and I couldn't have returned anyway, for I was all covered with feathers, mud and chicken vermin, my mail order fashion-plate suit was a sight, and I was mad clear through.

Railroad's Uninvited Guest

"Next day the express agent allowed that I owed him $56 for lost chickens, and that night when the eleven-fifteen pulled out, I was a passenger, an uninvited guest of the railroad company, between two of the express cars."

It was this chicken affair that the publicity man recognized during the private run of "The Good For Nothing" the other morning in the World Pictures projection room, providing a real life atmosphere to which Mr. Blackwell apparently had not intended to call attention in the advertisements.

Strike in New York Delays Lithographs

Six of the large lithographing and printing companies of New York City last week joined in an appeal, through newspaper advertising space, asking the indulgence of the theatrical and moving picture trade for delays in delivery. A half page advertisement stated that because of a sudden strike of press feeders demanding an immediate wage increase of twenty-two and one-half per cent, and refusing to work, even when the demand was granted until most of the print shops of the city consented to the new wage, all deliveries were being delayed. The firms signing the advertisement were H. C. Miner Lithographing company, J. H. Tooker Printing company, National Printing and Engraving company, Fred T. Hegeman Printing company, T. J. Hayes Printing company and the Carey Show Printing company.

Siegel New Manager for Select in New York

With the current week Henry Siegel took charge of the New York Exchange of Select Pictures. He had previously been assistant manager. Promotion was due to his efficient work in that position.

Mr. Siegel's rise to the executive command of the New York exchange was the result of ability plus hustle. His business career has been one of continuous advance. His position in the motion picture industry was with the Pittsburgh exchange of the World Film Corporation, when Lewis J. Selznick was general manager. He was promoted to the New Jersey branch, later leaving that organization to handle Bluebirds in New Jersey.

When the Selznick Enterprises were organized, Siegel was one of the first to join the Selznick forces, being for a time in charge of the New Jersey exchange. He was soon brought into the central office as assistant manager of the New York exchange.

When the Select Pictures Corporation took over these exchanges, Mr. Siegel remained in this position.

Several changes and additions to his force marked Mr. Siegel's inception of his new office. One of these changes brings into the Select organization Lester Adler, who has been with the World Film Corporation in their Newark branch. Mr. Adler will be office manager for the Select exchange. Another change marks the promotion of J. Walter Lamb, popular salesman on the Select staff, to the position of assistant manager, with direct charge of the sales force.

Universal Starts "Service Department"

Plans to Help Exhibitors Make Their Pictures Pay—Bach Visits Exchanges

WHEN W. A. Bach has finished his present tour of the United States, every Universal exchange will have in operation a "service department" that will act in an exclusive and special capacity as assistant to every exhibitor in the territory served by the various exchanges. Mr. Bach has reached Denver on his way to the Pacific Coast, his further route embracing visits to Salt Lake City, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, El Paso and back to New York, with stops arranged to cover the Southern territory.

The service, or "make it pay" department, first became operative and was tested with entire satisfaction by Mr. Bach in connection with the exchange at Toronto, Can. When it was decided to put a man on the road to build up and extend the idea to all Universal branches, Mr. Bach was appointed for the work.

He first established the department in connection with Mecca exchange, in New York, leaving C. G. Wood in charge. Taking to the road, Mr. Bach visited the following cities and appointed the following managers: Detroit, B. B. Greenburg; Chicago, M. L. Firestone; Toronto, Raymond S. Peck; St. Louis, G. H. Giebler.

Meanwhile the territory served by Portland, Spokane and Seattle was placed under the "Make It Pay" supervision of Dean Collins, with headquarters in Portland.

The plan devised and perfected by actual service and operation admits of systemizing to an extent that will allow one man, naturally selected for his peculiar and particular qualifications to do these things in assisting the exhibitor and putting the energy of the exchange behind every customer. Publicity, not alone original publicity and "stunts," but distributing, enlarging and localizing the general publicity sent out from the home office, adapting it to the requirements of the individual exhibitor; advertising, circularizing and, by letter, keeping in touch with the exhibitor to the mutual benefit of both the showman and the exchange; providing salesman with information, ideas, suggestions, material and aids to better sell the exhibitor and better start the exhibitor on his new service and account; to keep in touch with salesman on the road, and to do everything possible to aid the showman and perfect the service of the exchange.

Portrait Theft Delays Picture

THERE was a delay of four days last week in finishing "The Painted Madonna," a drama starring Mme. Sonia Markova, released November 11 as a Fox Special Feature.

The delay was occasioned by the theft of an oil painting—a portrait of Mme. Markova which John Sparrow, a well-known New York artist, had been employed to make and which he had completed only a few days previously. The portrait was used in several of "The Painted Madonna" scenes, the actor in the cast who plays the part of the artist being shown apparently at work on it.

This part of the filming had all been completed and forgotten when it was reported to the director that one short section of the film could not be found in the cutting room. Arrangements accordingly were made for Mme. Markova and Sidney Mason, who plays opposite her, to retake this portion of the picture.

They and the director and camera men reported early one day last week at the Fox studio in Grantwood, N. J., but when they looked in the property room for the essential portrait of Mme. Markova it could not be found. Three days' searching was of no avail and Mme. Markova, who will make her debut as a star in this picture, became much worried.

On the morning of the fourth day, however, just as Director O. A. C. Lund was preparing to have Mr. Sparrow duplicate his original work, word was received from the laboratory that the missing strip of film had been found there and that a re-take would be unnecessary.

Afraid to Drive Auto

Louise Fazenda, who will appear in the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Are Waitresses Safe?", soon to be released, owns a fine automobile, but she is afraid to run it. "I just let it stand in front of my bungalow so folks will know I own one," she admitted.

Petrova Has Ardent Admirer in Japan

Shinsuke Tsunashima of Tokyo, Japan, is an ardent admirer of Madame Petrova. This polite letter shows it:

"My Dear Miss Petrova:

"Allow me to inform you that I am one of the American film admirers in Japan. I was very glad to write you, but I can not write a good letter to you as I am very poor in English and please excuse me.

"I have seen many American films by American famous kinema actresses and actors. And, sorry, the films which were by you who are one of the American famous kinema actress, have not been exhibited in Japan.

"But I know your name, and all of Japanese kinema friends know your name as well as I. Because though we have not seen your films, we were known by American kinema magazines your name and the fact that your are the most skillful actress in American kinema circle.

"And I wish, eagerly, to see the films which were featured by you. I am sure that your films will come to Japan soon. Because Japanese Kinema Co. usually exhibit the films of which Japanese kinema friends wish to exhibit. Surely, I shall be satisfied and shall be one of your admirers where I saw your skillful art in your films in future.

"I am at present collecting the photograph of the American kinema actresses and actors and am very sorry to think that I have no your photograph. So I shall be very glad if you will kindly send me one of your photographs.

"If you wish I will send some Japanese motion picture magazines or a Japanese doll.

"Hoping I shall have the pleasure of hearing favorably soon from you, I am

Lee Joins the Army

Irene Hunt, Triangle film favorite, who has just completed her latest picture, "The Maternal Spark," is taking a few days' much needed rest at her cabin in Santa Anita Canyon. Director Hamilton worked his company night and day on "The Maternal Spark," so that he could release Rowland Lee, who had been called to the colors.

Forbes-Robertson Picture in Making

"Passing of the Third Floor Back" Will Be Produced by Brenon With British Star

SIR JOHNSTON FORBES-ROBERTSON has come to America to appear in the screen version of his greatest stage success, the "Passing of the Third Floor Back," which is to be produced and directed by Herbert Brenon.

Mr. Brenon has already commenced work on this new subject, and it will be completed before the first of the year.

This is the third big production to be secured by Herbert Brenon since the beginning of his career as an independent producer, and if it, together with "Kismet," with Otis Skinner, and "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," by Hall Caine, is to be taken as the type of subject to be expected, his productions will give him a high place in the industry.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is one of the most eminent actors of the English-speaking stage. He stands for all that is highest and finest in acting, and he is one of the best known and most noted actors both in this country and in England.

In his long and varied career on the stage he has had many successes, but the outstanding feature is his portrayal of the role of the stranger in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." There is little to be said of it for the simple reason that anyone who has had any interest in the stage the last few years knows just how great a sensation was caused when he played the part some several years ago.

The stranger is a man who suddenly comes into the lives of a quarreling, discontented and backbiting little community that lives in a dingy boarding house in Bloomsbury. By his kindly interest, his thoughtfulness and his gentle tact he gains an influence over them at once so powerful and so good, that he gradually works a change in the hearts of the ill-humored landlady, and her congregation of equally quarrelsome lodgers. His work accomplished, and with good planted in the hearts of his associates, and leaving nothing but happiness behind him, the stranger passes out of their lives.

There is a love story running through which is brought to a happy ending by the stranger's kindly influence, and the play is a happy blending of the human and the humorous. It is Jerome K. Jerome at his best and finest.

Leaves Family in England

In coming to this country to transfer his great success to the screen, Sir Johnston braved the dangers of the sea, leaving his family in England, feeling that no sacrifice was too great which enabled him to immortalize this appealing drama. Herbert Brenon is permitted to produce this picture as Sir Johnston knows he can fully grasp the great possibilities of the subject.

The combination of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Jerome K. Jerome and Herbert Brenon is a formidable one.

Immediately upon the completion of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" Mr. Brenon will start work upon "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," to be followed by "Kismet," with Otis Skinner, upon the conclusion of Otis Skinner's tour in "Mister Antonio."

Three Arrested as "Dupe" Negative Makers

The Cardinal Film Company has obtained a federal indictment on two counts against Fred Becker, Lewis Weiss and Leo Singer, charging conspiracy to infringe upon a copyright of "Joan The Woman," a feature film owned by Cardinal, and for actual infringement. Cardinal Film Company is a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The three men were brought before United States Commissioner Hitchcock, and after hearing were held to the grand jury in $2,000 bail each. Following the theft of one of the prints, Ralph A. Kohn, attorney for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, took the matter up with Assistant District Attorney E. A. Stanton, who conducted the criminal proceedings. It is alleged that the stolen positive was taken to New Jersey where a "duped" negative was made.

The theft and duplication of the "Joan The Woman" positive would have meant a big source of revenue to law breakers. The picture was produced by Cecil De Mille and its star was Geraldine Farrar. The feature appeared at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York, for a season. It was following the winter run that the positive was said to have been stolen from a film exchange.

The securing of indictments against Becker, Singer and Weiss is considered not only a victory for the complainants, but for the entire industry as well. Film "duping," which amounts to piracy, is one of the serious difficulties with which picture producers are forced to contend. It is believed that this action will do much toward discouraging further attempts. The complainants and their attorneys are receiving congratulations of the industry.

Suggests Only Non-Taxable Music

Triangle Will Make No Music Sheets Containing American Society's Selections

WITH taxation of one kind or another affecting all men, no matter what their vocations may be, it seems likely that the extortion planned by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers will bear small fruit. In a statement just issued to its exchanges, and through them to exhibitors, the Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced its attitude toward the proposed music tax.

"It is our policy to protect our exhibitors, in this connection, in every way we can," said Y. F. Freeman, general manager of the organization. "As in the past, all of the music cue sheets which accompany Triangle pictures will be composed of musical numbers which may be played in any theater for the purchase price of the music, and that alone. Our music expert, M. Winkler, has been instructed to bear this fact in mind when arranging Triangle music cue sheets, and we hope that our policy in this matter will be of general benefit to those the exhibitor,—just a logical phase of Triangle service."

While on the subject of picture music, Mr. Freeman further remarked a point in the compilation of cue sheets which is often lost sight of.

"We firmly believe that every musician or leader playing for pictures can compile his own cue sheet if he has a chance to see the picture at least a day before the actual performance, but of course such cues would be of service to only one individual, and would entail an enormous waste of effort. Nine times out of ten they would not serve for general distribution by a distributing company to its clients, simply because the compositions would, in all probability, not be obtainable for every possible combination of instruments. In case the compiler were a pianist, it might be expected that most of the numbers mentioned on his cue sheet would not be available for orchestra use, and likewise, the same condition would exist where an orchestra man overlooked the needs of the piano or organ soloist.

"For this reason we have been very careful to place our musical work in the hands of a man who is a musician of many years' experience in this particular field. He is also a representative of several of the largest music publishing houses, insuring exhibitors that his selections may be purchased by any musician, no matter what instrument or combination is to be used."

Two New Plays Added to Triangle Colony

Frederick Vroom, who played with Booth and Barrett as a young man, and who has been connected with the films for the last five years as actor and director, has been engaged as a member of the Triangle's Culver City playing forces. Vroom is declared to be one of the most distinguished looking men on the stage or in pictures today. He will appear with Olive Thomas in "Betty Takes a Hand."

Edward Jobson, character man with years of experience on the legitimate stage, and identified with the films for several years, is another addition to the stock actors at the Culver City studios. He will be seen as a sympathetic father and in similar character roles.

Charges Nine Cents

Nine cents admissions were announced by C. B. Yost, manager of the Royal Theater in Hutchison, Kas., as his solution of the federal war tax on admissions. The nine-cent tickets, at the box office, were valued at ten cents, but explanation was made in notices and by personal explanation that one cent of the dime was for the government. Manager Yost arranged for every pass holder entering his theater to deposit one cent as his contribution to the nation's war chest.

Mabel Condon Gets Warm Reception

Los Angeles Publicity Expert Goes East, Where Host of Friends Welcome Her With Reception

WHEN Mabel Condon, publicity expert, bureau head and western representative of MOTOGRAPHY, arrived in the East from Los Angeles, she was taken on tour by Paul N. Lazarus, advertising and publicity director of Greater Vitagraph. He had her as a guest at the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and the following day took her to Vitagraph's big Brooklyn plant where stars and studio attaches tendered her an informal reception.

Everybody made such a fuss over Mabel that Bill Painter, still cameraman, could not resist taking a photograph, a copy of which appears herewith.

Miss Condon, one of the best known and most popular publicity experts in the business, maintains a large force of assistants at her office in Hollywood. She is the Vitagraph representative at the western studio and handles all of the publicity originating at the Hollywood plant. She was formerly in New York and her trip to the metropolis at this time was a combination business and pleasure trip.

Russian Actress Makes Bow in Films

Madame Sonia Markova and Her Dog Appear in "The Painted Madonna," for Special Feature

IT is as Stella Dean in "The Painted Madonna" that Mme. Sonia Markova, the Russian actress, has her introduction to stardom on November 11. The new member of the Fox forces will portray the character of a simple country girl who goes to the city, becomes a popular and reckless member of the chorus, develops thence into a woman of the world, known widely as the Black Nightingale, and eventually reforms, turning her palatial home into a refuge for friendless girls.

There are said to be a number of highly dramatic and unusual situations in the picture, which will be released as a Fox Special Feature. Mme. Markova's dog, Miss Kerensky, has the principal part in one of the scenes. A large set, occupying nearly all of the first floor of the studio at Grantwood, and declared to be a duplicate of a suite in a New Yorker's mountain mansion, was provided for Stella Dean's home.

Here a bazaar is held during which girls disport themselves in a large natatorium in the center of the set, and here, too, are introduced a series of novel tableaux. A large oil painting of Mme. Markova, which appears in the picture as the work of the artist in the cast, really was done in the Fox studio by a well-known New York painter, who also loaned some of his best canvases for use while the artist's studio set was being photographed.

Scene from "The Painted Madonna."

The cast includes Sidney Mason, who played Jimmie in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and Blackie Daw in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and who is cast in "The Painted Madonna" as Milton Taylor, the artist; William Lampe, who plays the role of John Radon, the villain, who is killed by lightning; David Herblin, who is Frank Osborne, the artist's chum; Albert Tavernier as Rev. Charles Lamb, Anita Navaro as Helen, Edith Reeves as Fanny Ben, and Julia Stuart as Annabel Dean, Stella's mother. The story is by George M. Scarborough, and the picture was directed by Oscar A. C. Lund and photographed by Joseph Ruttenberg.

Jewel Purchases "K"

Jewel Productions Inc. will soon release "K," adapted from the novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which appeared serially in McClure's Magazine and which has been prepared for the screen and produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. Mildred Harris is seen in the leading female role, that of Sidney Page, and "K" is played by True Boardman. Albert Roscoe, Zella Caull and Carl Miller are in the cast. The production, which is on a very elaborate scale, is said to follow very closely Mrs. Rinehart's celebrated novel. It has just been purchased by Jewel Productions Inc., who will distribute it after a New York showing at the Broadway theater.

New Eltinge Play

November 12th is the date set for the release by Paramount of Julian Eltinge's next photoplay, "The Clever Mrs. Carfax."

Sessue Hayakawa and a company of fifteen may shortly go to Hawaii to film scenes in a forthcoming Paramount picture.

Everything is Irish—Even the Terrier

Everything about "Molly Entangled" is Irish—even to "Mike," the shaggy Irish terrier who appears with Vivian Martin, heroine of the dainty little drama of life on the "old sod," produced for release by Paramount.

Incidentally, Mike is a lucky dog. Miss Martin simply dotes on him, and the surest way to gain her favor is to bestow a pat upon "Mike."

"Molly Entangled," scenically, historically and in every way presents a true picture of the land of the shamrock, according to those who watched Director Robert Thornby staging the film. There are thatched houses; the smithy and the old Irish fiddler; there are colleens and Irish dances—and there is a little bit of real Irish fighting, too. There is real Irish romance—tender and refreshing. There are heartaches and joys and in the end happiness for those who deserve it. "Molly Entangled" is intended to be a picture that reaches for your heart strings, brings tears and laughter alternately, and makes one forget for the time being the workaday world outside and the great tragedy that is engrossing so many of the people today.

Edith Kennedy wrote the story. It will be released November 19.

Powerful Lights Used for First Time

For the first time in the history of motion picture work, it is stated, the new Harmer-Mark Photolight is being employed in the production of a new picture starring Marguerite Clark. Two of these lights are being used, and each has 100,000 candle power. Lights based on a similar principle, used by the government for searchlight purposes have a carrying capacity of nineteen miles.

So powerful are these lights that workmen are forced to wear dark glasses while installing and operating them. A photograph of the Woolworth tower, New York, was recently taken with a telescopic lens, both camera and light being a mile and a half distant. The result was a perfect picture in every detail.

By means of a deep crater the reflecting power is enhanced, and by electrical devices the carbons are kept revolving and the rods supporting them are automatically cooled. There is said to be a greater percentage of prismatic color obtained in these lights than in any other.

By placing one of the lamps overhead a sheet light is thrown upon the setting of a picture, which is centralized in the form of a spot by crystal mirrors.

Kinema Is Opened

The Kinema Theater, Los Angeles, which is the third house established by the Kehrlein Kinema Circuit, will open in about two weeks with Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot." This will be followed by W. S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail" and that by George M. Cohan in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." In addition to Artcraft pictures it is not improbable that the Kinema will use some Goldwyn features.

The seating capacity of the house is 2,500 and the interior of the house has been patterned after that of the Comedie Francaise of Paris.

Exploit New Vitagraph Serial

Newspapers, Trade Magazines and Hundreds of Billboards Will Advertise Duncan Play

IT is announced by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, that the company will soon inaugurate its campaign for "Vengeance—and the Woman," the new fifteen episode serial which is scheduled to start its run the last week in December. This campaign, it is said, will be wider in scope than that which attended the booking of "The Fighting Trail," Vitagraph's big outdoor serial, which has created such a sensation all over the country.

Reports received from the Western Vitagraph studio, in Hollywood, where William Duncan is directing and playing the leading role in the new serial, indicate that the strenuous actor-producer is going to duplicate his feat of turning out a big serial ahead of schedule time. The first seven episodes of "Vengeance—and the Woman" have already been shipped to the Vitagraph laboratory in Brooklyn and the work of titling and printing is well under way.

"Vengeance—and the Woman" is a story of the fight of a man and a woman against a band of heartless men who strive to get the woman as a means of wreaking vengeance on the man. It was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

The authors have provided a multitude of thrilling action, and Duncan, whose reputation as a star has been built largely on his work in roles calling for strengthful performance, is interpreting them in his usual heroic style. Carol Holloway is again featured with him in the leading feminine role, and his company includes some of the finest riders in the world.

Plan Big Billboard Display

Mr. Irwin and his executive staff, according to the announcement issued by him, are working out the details of the plan by which the picture will be introduced to the exhibitors and the public. A striking feature of the company's preliminary campaign in connection with its other serial was a nation-wide billboard campaign, involving the posting of twenty-four thousand 24-sheet stands, and it has been decided to increase the paper display for the new serial. In every town of ten thousand population and up there will be at least twice as many 24-sheets and in many places they will be treble in number.

The campaign book supplied to exhibitors who booked "The Fighting Trail" was declared to be one of the most complete works of the kind ever issued in connection with a motion picture feature. It is announced by Vitagraph that an even better one will be put forth for "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Music Gets Attention

In addition to a complete novelization for newspaper reproduction, numerous press stories built on specific features of each episode, advertising cuts and special suggestions, several new features will be included between the covers of the book. Special attention will be given to the musical feature.

It is declared by General Manager Irwin that a large number of exhibitors already have booked "Vengeance—and the Woman" on the strength of their success with "The Fighting Trail."

The Vitagraph distributing chief says that in the marketing of "Vengeance—and the Woman," the company will follow the same policy that it pursued with its other work—that of having its salesmen see the serial before they set forth to offer it to exhibitors. Also, it is planned to have as many exhibitors as possible see the various episodes in the company's home office and branch projection rooms before they are invited to book it.

John C. Flinn Is Chosen Division Chairman

At the recent annual meeting of general division, class five of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held recently, the secretary reported that there were one hundred and thirty-eight members in the general division and four publications.

John C. Flinn was elected chairman and Paul Gulick secretary of the division for the ensuing year.

C. C. Burr was unanimously elected as a member of the board of directors of the national association in the place of Arthur James, resigned.

The following executive committee was selected for the coming year: Thomas G. Wiley, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., B. P. Fineman, Julius A. Lewis, Wm. Johnston, Fred N. Rothenberg and A. MacArthur, Jr.

Bobby Will Eat No Cake While the War Lasts

Little Bobby Connelly, Vitagraph's tiny star, has made the supreme sacrifice—there'll be no more cake in his menu until Herbert Hoover, National Food Administrator, sends him word that eating cake is not national extravagance. Until last week, Bobby was one of the finest little cake eaters in the world, but he heard his father reading about "meatless Tuesday" and "wheatless Wednesday" and, after having the matter explained to him, he announced that he would "lay off" the cake until further notice.

Difficult to Find "Cleopatra" Likeness

ONE of the most serious problems connected with the production of William Fox's Theda Bara super-picture, "Cleopatra," was the obtaining of authentic information regarding the personal appearance of the siren of the Nile. There is, it was discovered, only one authentic representation of Cleopatra in the world—a bust in the British Museum. A few available coins bear a likeness of the queen, but none of these shows good workmanship.

There also is a bust in the Alexandria Museum that is credited as being of Cleopatra, but inquiries developed that most Egyptologists agree it is of some other woman. Nor could any use be made of copies of the Egyptian reliefs on the walls of Dendereh Temple, because they simply are conventionalized likenesses, not real portraits.

After a careful study of many books and copies of paintings the belief was accepted that the queen was entirely of Greek descent, and the Bara interpretation is rather of a Grecian than an Egyptian type of woman.

Plutarch, perhaps the greatest authority on the ancients, did not agree with those who considered Cleopatra a beautiful woman.

"Her beauty," he says, "was not itself altogether incomparable, nor such as to strike those who saw her." He pronounced her greatest qualities to be her "charm and personal magnetism."

LIVELY HAPPENINGS ASSEMBLED FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO KNOW

BY RICHARD WILLIS

Corinne Griffith is learning how to use the typewriter properly. I may need it some day," she says. The Lady Corinne cannot be taken seriously. There was a time when she said she had deserted the screen forever and ever. She even disappeared for a time, but the Vitagraph got on her trail and—well, she is back as a featured player with them once more, and from all accounts is not likely to be set at liberty for a long time to come. Her work in "Heredity" stamps her as one of the best actresses on the screen.

Following his two splendid photoplays, "The Son of His Father," and "His Mother's Boy," Charles Ray, Ince's "Wonder Boy," is now completing another Ray comedy-drama entitled "The Hired Man." Charlie Ray's extraordinary ability to create a character whose comedy amuses and at the same time gives a genuine heart twist has put him into a class by himself.

Richard Stanton is one of the most popular directors in pictures, and when he went to New York to direct for the Fox company he received a big send-off. He has made very good for the Fox concern and his last picture, "Responsibility," in which he had Enid Markey for his star, is one of the finest that concern has turned out. His western friends, and they are many, will watch Dick's eastern career with interest.

Grace Cunard is splendid in "Society's Driftwood" and gives an intensely dramatic performance as the sister who fights to save a sick brother from the meshes of the law. It is a "Butterfly" and will be very welcome to the many thousands who enjoy the work of this clever actress.

Doug is back on the lot and with him are Mrs. Fairbanks and young Douglas, likewise Director Alan Dwan, who will alternate with John Emerson in directing Fairbanks., Mrs. Dwan, known to the masses as Pauline Bush, will follow later. She has been quite sick.

If the reception accorded Monroe Salisbury's first Bluebird starring vehicle, "The Desire of the Moth," in Los Angeles was duplicated in other cities, his future is indeed assured. The press and public alike gave the photoplay a big reception in the Angel City, and the actor was given quite an ovation when he appeared on the stage to say "Thank you" last Monday night. Mr. Salisbury's mother was in the audience and the applause which greeted her clever son delighted her.

The services of Enid Markey are in strong demand. She no sooner finished her work in "Responsibility," in which she is starred by the Fox concern, than she received two good offers and chose the one with the National to be featured in a big feature they are making. In this Miss Enid has a very strong part and one which strongly appeals to her. She will be under the direction of Scott Sidney.

Charles is back, meaning Chaplin, of course. He had a jolly little jaunt to Honolulu and has approved the plans for the new studio, and the builders are pushing things ahead. It will be one of the prettiest as well as one of the best equipped in Los Angeles.

In "Her Country's Call," which features Mary Miles Minter, George Periolat did fine work as Jim Slocum, a bootlegger who surrenders to the law to save his "gal." The scene where he begs to learn how badly she is hurt before he is taken to jail is extremely pathetic.

Bessie Barriscale, of the Bessie Barriscale company, if you please, is sorry the baseball season is over, but is consoling herself by looking forward to the football games. She is an ardent follower of all competitive sports and never misses an opportunity to see a prominent game of football or baseball, and attends all the swimming meets at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. She gets no time to play games herself and rather regrets it.

Henry Walthall is finishing up his first feature for the company which bears his own name and in which he has Mary Charleston playing as his opposite. Being able to help select his own stories, his director and support has made it smooth sailing for the "best actor in the movies" and his productions should prove pictures worth going a long way to see.

Myrtle Stedman is finishing up one of the most successful "personal appearance" tours ever made. She has done but little talking, but a lot of singing, which has appealed hugely to her audiences. Her own pleasant personality has gone far to make the tour a big success and it is said Miss Myrtle has done very well financially.

An overcoat sauntered into the Stowell Hotel in Los Angeles and after much grunting and a fierce struggle opened itself up and disclosed Ed Sloman, the director of one Bill Russell and company. It is not known who Ed's tailor is, but whoever he may be he would not be able to find Sloman once he was hidden in his overcoat. Rumor has it that Mrs. S. asked for the collar of it to make that baby a warm bedspread.

William D. Taylor, the Famous-Lasky producer, recently was much surprised to receive a check as his share of the sale of a mining claim. Taylor grubstaked an old prospector whom he had known in southwest Colorado and had said good-bye to his money. He promptly added to his Liberty Bonds and sent the prospector the best compass he could buy.

Crane Wilbur is very much in the limelight in and around San Francisco. He is starred in the Paul Smith propaganda picture "The Finger of Justice," which is booked for several weeks in the Golden Gate City. He addressed a meeting of ministers, was called on to give an address from the pulpit, made a personal appearance on the first night of the feature, and is drawing full houses to the Bishop Theater in Oakland, where he has a special stage engagement between pictures. That is all!

Alice Howell Not Afraid of Getting Bruised

In Alice Howell, the Century company presents one of the few comediennes who is not afraid to hide her pretty face behind a comical makeup. Moreover, she is one of the few performers totally unafraid to take all the bumps and thumps that make up the life of a slapstick performer.

Alice Howell was born of Irish-American parents in New York City twenty-two years ago. She has played in pictures about two years with Keystone and the Universal.

She specializes in eccentric comedies, and plays leading roles. Anyone who has seen Miss Howell in her screen impersonations would never recognize this pretty blonde off the stage. Miss Howell makes a big asset of her wonderful hair, which is light yellow and fluffy. She doubles it into a huge knot over her forehead as a kitchen mechanic; pulls it into an enormous pompadour as a lovesick waitress; fluffs it into a high, grotesque mass of curls, as a caricature society woman.

Her face is so mobile in ordinary conversation that you understand the secret of her extraordinary power of her facial expressian on the screen.

Hodkinson Handles Paralta Plays

New Distributing Organization Will Release Productions of Carl Anderson's Corporation

W. W. HODKINSON, whose new distributing company, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was formed last week, has announced that the Paralta Plays, Inc., will furnish his first product. This announcement was not unexpected, as the connection of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, with Mr. Hodkinson during the latter's presidency of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, was known by the trade to have given him a peculiar opportunity to fit into the plans which Mr. Hodkinson has been developing through the ten years of his experience in the film business.

In commenting on his connection with Paralta, Mr. Hodkinson said that his connection with this company was both because its product appealed to him, and because its organization and ideals were such that he felt that the two companies should work together.

Brings Good Forces Together

"I am looking forward, of course," said Mr. Hodkinson, "to the time when all or nearly all the forces in the business, producers, exhibitors and individuals, who have the same ideas and ideals as I have, will be associated with me. I have felt that my greatest usefulness in this business has been my knack of bringing the forces together that can and must work toward a common goal of stability and success.

"There are many thousand successful, thinking exhibitors in the country. There are great producers, men who have linked stars and great plays, others who have been supreme in finished and detailed production, others whose direction and stage management rank with the finest the legitimate has ever known. There have also been men with vision, who have talked and written and believed in the future of this business along lines of genuine progress. But the trouble has been that there has been nobody to bring them together.

Theories Work in Practice

"That I take as my work. I have been working out the problems of the relationships of exhibitors, producers, distributors and the fellows who had ideas, for ten full years, and every circle of my life has been a complete development of my theories as far as conditions let me develop them. This new proposition of mine is my tenth circle. My theories have checked out in every one of the nine that have gone before, and today I am trying it on a scale which many will find more advanced than anything that has gone ahead of it.

"But I have faith in this business—something which I find few enough of us have. I want the men who have faith in it to work with me. I want the producers who believe that they can serve themselves best by giving the exhibitor what he can make the most money on, in his theater.

All Must Share Responsibility

"I want the exhibitors who know that they have a responsibility to the producers who make the pictures that will help them build up their business. And I want the exchange men and the other individuals who believe, as I and my organization believe, that all this sort of co-operation is possible.

"Will you take this message to the exhibitor? My distribution system is to be designed to help the exhibitor do what my previous distribution plans, fitted to other conditions, did for the producers. It is still in the process of being worked out, but my experience to date convinces me that it is not only feasible but inevitable."

Paralty Doing Big Plays

The latter part of last May Paralta secured a long lease on the big Clune studios, in Hollywood, Cal., and early in June, J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale, at the head of producing corporations of their own, began the production of Paralta plays. Mr. Kerrigan's first picture was a screen version of Peter B. Kyne's romance, "A Man's Man." Miss Barriscale's first photoplay was "Rose o' Paradise," founded on Grace Miller White's widely read story of the same title. Immediately these attractions were completed Miss Barriscale began the production of Harold MacGrath's, "Madam Who," and Mr. Kerrigan, Frederick Chapin's "Turn of a Card."

Before these pictures were completed, Paralta had arranged with Henry B. Walthall to become a star-manager and producer at the head of his own company. Shortly after, Rhea Mitchell and Clara Williams had been added to the lists of artists heading producing concerns at the Paralta studios. Today six producing organizations are at work at these studios.

Production Facilities Increased

In September it was found necessary to increase the producing facilities on the west coast. President Anderson, who was in Los Angeles at that time, gave orders that an immediate extention be made. A twenty-four-acre plot was secured directly opposite the Clune studios, on which the erection of four large stages, sixty by one hundred and fifty feet, was begun. These structures are now used as open-air stages, pending their completion with glass side-walls and roofs.

At this time all available stages of both the old and new Paralta studios are occupied by productions now being made by companies headed by Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan, Henry B. Walthall, Rhea Mitchell, Clara Williams and Howard Hickman.

Paralta has had many avenues for the release of its pictures opened to it during the past two months, but it preferred to wait to attain a medium of distribution which would have the confidence of exhibitors from the very start, and assure to them a permanent medium through which to secure Paralta plays under the most equitable conditions.

"A Man's Man" First Release

The First Paralta release which Mr. Hodkinson's new organization will make, will be J. Warren Kerrigan's "A Man's Man." This production was recently given a "try-out" of one week at Clune's auditorium in Los Angeles. It played to the second largest record of receipts in the history of this house and every critic in that city praised the attraction enthusiastically.

Mr. Hodkinson's second Paralta release will be Bessie Barriscale's production of "Madam Who." Then will follow in quick succession Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," J. Warren Kerrigan in "Turn of a Card," Bessie Barriscale in "Within the Cup" and "Rose o' Paradise," Henry B. Walthall in "Humdrum Brown" and Clara Williams and Rhea Mitchell in productions which are now known only by working titles.

Sometime ago it was officially stated that Paralta had planned to make fifty-two star-feature productions in its first year, and to this end negotiations are now in progress with several stars that this may be accomplished by June 4, 1918, which will be the first anniversary of Paralta's entry into the motion picture production field.

First National Gets Brenon Picture

Exhibitors Circuit Will Distribute "Empty Pockets," Film Version of Rupert Hughes Novel

ONE of the important transactions of the week is a deal that has just been consummated between the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., whereby the latter organization has acquired the distribution rights for Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets," by Rupert Hughes.

The Brenon-Exhibitors' combination came as a surprise. The officials of the Brenon Corporation consider it one of the highest compliments ever paid their producer and director, Herbert Brenon, because the transaction was unanimously endorsed by the entire purchasing board of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit when the picture was screened. This is doubly emphasized by the fact that the money involved is said to establish a new record for the disposal of the rights for a single production.

"I am exceedingly proud of the honor accorded me by the astute showmen of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit," says Mr. Brenon. "I realize that every director of that organization is a shrewd and keen exhibitor—each a representative man in his section of the country. An organization which has for its purchasing board such men as S. L. Rothapfel, of New York; T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles; Harry S. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia; Fred Dahnken, of San Francisco; Aaron J. Jones, of Chicago; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, and J. D. Williams, of New York, could not be otherwise."

"Empty Pockets," which is now being completed, was adapted for the screen by Mr. Brenon from Rupert Hughes' widely popular novel of that name. "Empty Pockets" has a swift and compelling mystery story which is said to be extremely effective on the screen. Being told with Mr. Hughes' unusual insight into the varying phases of New York life, it presents striking opportunities to the producer. Bert Lytel, who played the title role in "The Lone Wolf," has the principal male role, while the cast numbers Barbara Castleton, Susan Wills, Katherine Galanta, Peggy Betts and other well-known players.

"Zeppelin's Last Raid" Is Timely

THE timeliness of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Thomas H. Ince's new spectacle based upon the growth of the democratic spirit in Germany has made a profound impression upon exhibitors the country over and several prominent showmen controlling chains of theaters are negotiating with the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation for the privilege of showing the Ince production first in their territory.

The recent mutiny in the Austrian navy was anticipated by Mr. Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan, who wrote the story. They portray with vivid realism how a secret organization rouses the Teutons against imperialistic rule. In the new production the revolt extends to the army and navy.

Simultaneous with the release of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" comes the first real sign of sectional disintegration in Europe and it comes in the right place—the common people. The mutiny in the navy is a significant sign of breaking morale.

Not only did the Austrian sailors kill one or two of their own officers but they turned in the most savage fashion on the crews of the German submarines operating from the same base. The fight between the two nationalities was so bitter that the Germans have moved their headquarters to another port farther down the Adriatic. All these incidents were forcasted by Mr. Ince and Mr. Sullivan when they made "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" live upon the screen.

"Persuasive Peggy" is Selling Rapidly

"Persuasive Peggy," the Mayfair production in which Peggy Hyland is starred, is being successfully marketed. The larger part of the United States has gone in one block; the Middle West (including Chicago), has been disposed of and comparatively little territory remains for negotiation.

No Taxable Music

Almost as notable as the production itself and certainly an adjunct of the first importance is the artful music played as an acompaniment to "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the Thomas H. Ince spectacle soon to be shown as the initial release of the newly organized U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. Max Winkler, who has composed the scores for many important productions, arranged the music for the new Ince spectacle and selected only tunes against which no author's tax may be levied.

Two Big Sales Made

The W. H. Productions company has announced the sale of the rights to their release featuring William S. Hart in "The Bargain," New York City being sold to the Magnet Film Exchange, and Canada to the Regal Films, Ltd., of Toronto.

Hart Picture Proving Popular

The W. H. Productions company have announced as one of their first releases for the State Rights Market, William S. Hart as the "Two-gun Man," in "The Bargain," which gives every indication of becoming a popular picture.

Mr. Hart in this picture has created the character of a good-bad man, or at least a bad man with good instincts. Through the influence of a true woman the good side of him is triumphant over his evil self, and his regeneration is completed.

The story is of the rugged western type, full of exceptional surprises, and crammed with thrills from start to finish.

There is not a dragging moment, and the action steadily leads up to a tremendous climax, in which the hero, with a posse at his heels, leaps his horse over a great precipice, and goes crashing down with him into the gorge below.

There is an abundance of real atmosphere of the old west where men lived by the quickness of their hands. One feature is an Arizona gambling hall of the old days, done realistically and accurately.

Mr. Hart has been given a notable support. Clara Williams plays opposite him. Others in the cast are J. Frank Burke, Barney Sherry, and James Dowling.

Alma Hanlon Will Be Seen in New Mystery Play

Alma Hanlon, who has starred with success in upwards of ten big feature pictures during the past year, has been selected to create the leading role in the new mystery play now in course of production at the Raver studios, in Yonkers. The title of the picture has not been selected.

Several States Sold

Harris P. Wolfberg of Pittsburgh has acquired the rights of the Mayfair production "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland, for the territories of Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio. Shallenberger and Priest of Times Building, New York, arranged the transaction. They also have disposed of the picture for Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia, to the Peerless Feature Film Company, of Philadelphia.

Bookings Are Satisfactory

Division Manager E. T. Lux, in charge of Hoffman-Foursquare territory, including Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, is spending much of his time getting matters moving. Besides visits to the Cleveland and Cincinnati offices he stopped off, during the past week, at Indianapolis. Manager Lux reports satisfactory bookings, and particularly mentions the gratification of his patrons over the announced plan of his company to pay the positive print war tax.

Opens New Exchanges

Jerome Abrams, recently promoted to be assistant general manager of exchanges of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, has gone to Atlanta, where he will establish another branch. As soon as this office is put in running order, and the branch manager installed, Mr. Abrams will proceed to Dallas, his second objective point.

"Outcast" Draws Well in Troy

Ann Murdock, the Charles Frohman star, now appearing in Frohman successes in motion pictures released through Mutual, proved her box office value in "Outcast" when it was shown for three days at Proctor's theatre, Troy New York.

The following letter has been received by Mutual from H. R. Emde, resident manager of the theatre:

"On October 18, 19 and 20, we played the Mutual-Frohman feature, Ann Murdock in 'Outcast.' It is with much pleasure that we compliment your exchange on the excellent quality of this feature and we also trust there will be many other releases on your program which will prove of as good box office value."

"Grain of Dust" Is Completed

Interesting Figures Are Compiled Showing Unusual Requirements of Lillian Walker Play

AFTER having been engaged for a period of seven weeks, working on an average of four nights a week during that period and inclusive of four Sundays, the Ogden Pictures Corporation have completed their second Lillian Walker production, "The Grain of Dust," adapted from the novel of the same name, written by the late David Graham Phillips, which attracted wide attention. Its readers will be interested in the film.

The details of producing is not often given to the trade, but a few figures quoted from the books of the Ogden Pictures Corporation show the unusual outlay and the broad scale upon which "The Grain of Dust" was produced. Thirty-three thousand four hundred and fifty feet of lumber, exclusive of that used in flats and wings, were consumed in this production. Twenty-nine thousand seven hundred dollars worth of furniture was hired and extra lighting equipment for exterior night scenes called for the use of twelve Wohl lights, fifteen Kliegl lights, eighteen Allison & Haddaway lights and seven Majestic lights, employing the use of two and one-quarter miles of cable. Sixteen private homes were lighted, exclusive of a church and lawn and one aeroplane motor was used.

The salaries of extras amounted to $3,280.00 and the food bill for eatables actually employed in sets and scenery totalled $193.40.

It is expected that "The Grain of Dust" will be ready for release about November 15.

THE open territory on the Ogden Pictures Corporation's production, "The Lust of the Ages," starring Lillian Walker is being rapidly diminished. Contracts were negotiated by Jesse J. Goldburg of the Ogden Pictures Corporation with John H. Kunsky of Detroit for the territory of Michigan and with the Masterpiece Film attraction of Cleveland for the territory of Ohio and Kentucky.

A contract was also closed with Carle E. Carlton on the same production for the territory of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

This leaves open on "The Lust of the Ages" the Southern states and Missouri, Kansas. Iowa and Nebraska and negotiations are pending with state-right buyers for these territories.

Lester Park, vice-president and general manager of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, has received telegrams from various state-right purchasers, advising of unusual business being done on the first Walker production.

The Tivoli Theater of San Francisco reported house records broken. The Photoplay Exchange of Salt Lake City, usually operating with one print in that territory, has four prints booked solid until February, 1918. Harry Samwick of New York has booked the Fox Circuit and is operating with six prints. The Globe Films Limited of Canada, operating ordinarily with two prints, are operating with four and have advised the Ogden Pictures Corporation that the four prints have been booked solid until the middle of January.

Contracts were exchanged recently between Jewel Productions, Inc., and B. S. Moss, whereby the seven-reel feature, "The Co-Respondent," with Elaine Hammerstein, will be shown in all theaters controlled by Mr. Moss.

New Manager Is Enterprising

Nicholas O. Turner Takes Charge of Big Turner and Dahnken Theater, San Jose

THE Theater De Luxe of San Jose, California, will be operated during the 1917-18 season under the management of Nicholas O. Turner, a young and enterprising film man who formerly was connected with the William Fox interests in Chicago. Mr. Turner's experience in the theatrical and show business has been varied. At one time in his early years he controlled theaters in Oroville, Marysville and Chico, California, and two road companies playing that section of the country. Later he was associated with the Sells Floto Circus in the executive end, and for the next seven years he helped guide the destinies of John Cort productions.

He was located in Chicago when Turner and Dahnken, owners of the Theater De Luxe in San Jose obtained his services as manager of their house. Speaking of the policy he expected to put into operation in connection with the management of the theater Mr. Turner said:

"The San Jose house has always been the pet of the Turner and Dahnken circuit and to express appreciation for the splendid business here, it is planned to give the people the very best there is to be had in pictures. Turner and Dahnken are members of the National Exhibitors' circuit, recently organized, and thus have the exclusive rights for the Charlie Chaplin pictures. They also have the state rights for a number of film masterpieces which will be shown here, besides the Artcraft productions and many other worth-while pictures.

"We are planning to make a special feature of the music. There is a very fine organ and three men have been working on it for the past six weeks, getting everything in readiness for the musical programs which will be something new to San Jose. An expenditure of $2,000 has already been made for electric light equipment at the front of the theater and we will put the ticket office back. The people have not liked the pay-as-you-enter arrangement and I do not think it satisfactory myself. Turner and Dahnken want to give the people of San Jose the best they have."

They Want to See 'Em Get Killed

F. E. Dawson, manager of the Cotter Theater, of Cotter, Ark., a town of 600 inhabitants, writes that after the showing of war pictures, many persons who have been in the audience complain to him that they did not see any one killed. This complaint was made to Manager Dawson following a recent showing of the British tanks in action.

At this performance, as was the case at the presentation of other war pictures, the audience overflowed into the aisles. Last summer he turned them away with the showing of "The Fall of a Nation" at fifty cents a head. Manager Dawson, who is alive to what his patrons want, is in the market for the best war picture he can get, to be used for a Red Cross benefit performance.

Canadian Film Men Aid Food Official

Exhibitors Also Help Government in Advertising Latest Dominion War Loan

By W. M. Gladish.

W. J. HANNA, food controller for Canada, has issued the following statement to all Canadian exhibitors:

"Realizing the possibilities of the moving picture theater as an influence in almost every Canadian community, I have authorized the formation of a Motion Picture Committee to organize the educational work of the food controller's office for the screen.

"This committee consists of one representative from my office and leading representatives of the motion picture industry in Canada—Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen and Clair Hague, who have patriotically volunteered their services.

"I count on the patriotic spirit of Canadian exhibitors in asking them to cooperate with these gentlemen towards the greatest possible publicity for the special films and slides produced for the information of the public on the important war measure of food control."

Jule and J. J. Allen control the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, while Clair Hague is the President of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited. Each of these companies have offices in six of the larger cities of the Dominion.

In addition to the food control campaign, Canadian exhibitors have been asked to use a 700-foot trailer to advertise the latest Canadian war loan, popularly known as the "Victory Loan." This trailer was taken under the direction of A. S. Arranson of Toronto, a director of the Regal Films, Limited, distributors in Canada of Goldwyn, World and other releases. The principal role in this trailer was taken by Sir Thomas White, the Canadian Minister of Finance. Many prints of this picture have been distributed to theaters through the Dominion.

Publishes Fortnightly Booklet

Manager Hyman of Buffalo Writes Fable on Staying in Your Own Neighborhood

A NEIGHBORHOOD theater manager, Edward L. Hyman, of the Victoria, of Buffalo, N. Y., has published in his fortnightly booklet what he terms a fun fable, which reads thus:

"Willie Wise taught himself to like honest-to-goodness photoplays at the film theater just around the corner from the place he called home.

"Over there they gave him Mary Pickford and all the big ones, along with frisky music and the glad hand when he chucked his ticket in the chopper.

"But they were so good to him in his Neighborhood Theater that he imagined he was being bunked.

"So one night when the wind was shooting up Ferry Street like a delivery truck he nearly choked himself to death trying to swallow his dinner in one gulp; dove into his class A duds and stood up in the car until it landed in front of an open work building called a Downtown House.

"It wasn't a high class Downtown House either—but one of those cheap joints where the piano sounds like a squeaky sign swinging and the movies look like flies tangoing across the screen. A mob was trying to break down the doors because one only had to pay a dime to suffer 18 reels.

"Willie wedged himself in beside a dame who read the titles out loud and proceeded to get an eyeful of a play that was made when automobiles were just coming into being. He saw five like these and when they removed the seat from his aching limbs he was murmuring faintly: 'Out at the Victoria they can't afford to bunk me—but down here the Sucker Fishing's fine.'

"MORAL:—The Victoria was built around the corner from you to stay—and the longer it is on the square and keeps you as a friend the longer will it remain to please you."

The cover of Mr. Hyman's booklet invites patrons to join him in "pleasure excursions" and to "shake the tree of Victoria plums." The opening announcement says:

"During the next fourteen days we are going to treat you to entertainment of the highest order. Photoplays and music that you'll long remember, because it will be the best ever offered you. Just a brief insight into what has been obtained is printed upon the pages within. Every play is a journey to contentment, each player a purveyor of pleasure."

Theater Audience Sneezes

Night after night, the patrons at the Imperial Theater in Toronto were seized with violent sneezing "fits" and the attendance at the house fell off rapidly. The cause of the trouble was apparent but Manager William Sturgess could not catch the culprit. Finally, plain-clothes detectives were placed in various parts of the theater and a youth was caught in the act of blowing Chinese powder. He was arrested and in court next day was fined $10 and costs.

House Applauds Soldiers

A popular stunt arranged by the Strand Theater in Winnipeg has been a military photographic contest. Each week the portraits of twelve Winnipeg soldiers are thrown upon the screen and the picture receiving the most applause from the audience is adjudged the winner for the evening. One of the conditions of the contest is that the original of the slide which gets the applause must be a patron in the house at the time of the contest. When he applies at the box office immediately after the result is announced, he is paid a prize of $2. The photographs and slides cost the soldiers nothing, as the cost is borne by the theater. The theater manager has arranged with a nearby studio for the portraits of contestants and each of the latter is given one print free of charge whether he is a winner or not.

Regent Issues Weekly

The Regent Theater, Toronto's fine downtown theater, is now issuing "The Screen Magazine," a twelve-page weekly publication which contains newsy paragraphs about the theater, coming attractions and illustrations of stars. The magazine is self-sustaining, as it carries a number of paid advertisements. The price of the magazine is 5c but it is distributed free to patrons as they leave after a performance. A slide is used to advise them to ask for copies at the door.

Noon Hour Shows Succeed

The Province Theater, Winnipeg, now gives a noon-hour show each week-day for business men and women. The first of these special entertainments was given on Monday, October 22, and so far they have been a great success. During the hour a high-class film and musical performance is presented, the numbers during the first week being a news reel, a Nestor comedy, the overture from the "Bohemian Girl" by George Metcalfe on the concert pipe organ, Arditi's "Waltz Song" by Miss Hazel George, in Italian, and a piano solo by Miss Freda Bousefield. The house has been well filled at each mid-day show.

Sunday Fight Is On

A bitter fight is on in Claremore, Okla., over the question of Sunday motion picture shows. An effort was made last week to get the city council to take a stand in favor of the open Sunday theater, but church interests opposed the move and began the circulation of petitions praying the council not to permit any shows on the first day of the week. The church leaders' petition has been filed with the city clerk and it will be up to the council to settle the dispute.

The Circle Amusement company of Lansing, Mich., has incorporated with Howard Dunne, L. H. Karp and Mark Sugarman as directors. The capital stock of the new enterprise is $1,000.

Manager Uses Ad to Tell of Tax

With the following advertisement inserted in the newspapers of his city, George A. Bleich, of the Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky., acquainted his patrons with the operation of the ten per cent admission war tax:

NEW PRICES AT THE EMPRESS NO BURDEN

The War Tax Won't Hurt

Let us see if it will. Let us presume that you attend fairly regularly. The cost heretofore could be figured this way:

Two shows weekly at the ordinary price of 10c, totals..... 20c

Total cost of three shows..... 35c

Effective November 1st, with the imposition of the new Federal War Tax, we will sell a new form of coupon book, same containing nine admissions, costing 99c, which includes the government tax.

The cost of each coupon is 11c, and as one of same will be received for any attraction not priced in excess of 15c, it will be readily seen that the same three shows mentioned above can now be seen for 33c.

Certainly those who do not advantage themselves of the coupon plan will have to pay more, as 15c is charged for single admissions and from this Uncle Sam will receive 2c.

There is no "profiteering" in the prices I am compelled to institute at my theaters by reason of the War Tax. Lowering the charge to 4c for children, and averaging the several admission figures charged gives me very little, if any excess, over old prices. Then it must be considered that I have abandoned an extra charge for the big pictures formerly shown at 15c, and must stand the War Tax on the films themselves, imposed by the Government on the film people who have in turn placed it on the theaters.

Old Theater Now a Motion Picture House

The Castle Square Theater of Boston, famed for its stock show productions for the last two decades, has reopened its doors as a theater devoted to motion picture and musical entertainments.

The Castle Square Theater enjoyed great popularity under the direction of John Craig, but for the last two years the moving picture field has been so extended in the South End district that stock productions suffered.

Tinfoil on Films

I am an operator working on two Powers machines. About three weeks ago the manager of the house had a signaling device put on both machines so that the operators would have a warning as to when to change machines. The device has worked perfectly and is certainly a big improvement over anything that we have tried up to date. Now comes a letter from the assistant manager of a film exchange and he is complaining about the condition of his film and requests that we do not use any more tinfoil on his film. Have you had any other complaints from exchanges about the use of tinfoil? Which do you think the best—the use of tinfoil on the edge of the film or the use of the punch in the center of the film and a nice string of punch marks showing on the screen? About one-half of the film that we use in this house comes to us with the tinfoil already on the film and I use the film just as it comes to me, but on the rest of the film I put the tinfoil on myself and am always careful to see that it does not extend out into the picture. The piece of film that was damaged was sprocket run right at the tinfoil and that is the reason that the film manager does not want us to use the tinfoil any more. I am enclosing you this letter and would like to have your opinion on the use of this signaling device. P. H. P.—Ind.

Following is the manager's letter:

Gentlemen: We are enclosing herewith a sample of our film which was returned by your operator for your inspection. We do not know whether or not a piece of tinfoil was placed on this film by your operator, but this practice has caused a great deal of damage as you will notice by the sample. If your machine is equipped with this signal device, we would thank you to give such instructions that would prevent this tinfoil being placed on our films in the future.

Trusting that you will comply with our request, beg to remain,

This is the first complaint that I have heard of in regards to the use of tinfoil on film. I have made inquiry from several exchange managers, theater managers and operators, and none of them had anything to say about the device except to praise it to the skies. One exchange manager was so delighted that he is thinking seriously of having the tinfoil put on at the exchange. He said that the use of the punch by operators had caused untold loss of film by his firm and that since the signal device had come into use that he had very little trouble with the punch marks. I think that the trouble with the film that was returned to you was caused by using too heavy a tinfoil which caused the film to jump and sprocket-run the film. I do not blame the manager for complaining about the film being sprocket-run, but I think that he is a little hasty in requesting that no tinfoil be used on his films. If the several film manufacturers would get together and agree to some way in which to have a mark or an ending to every reel, so that the operators would know when to change machines, then the punch and the tinfoil could be eliminated, but they, the film manufacturers, have not done that and that leaves it up to the operator to do the best that he can. If the film manufacturers would end each reel with a subtitle and then commence the following reel with the same subtitle that would end the whole argument. Of course, that could not apply to single reels, but there are few single reels released now, and some kind of a standard mark could be used on the last scene of the single reels, so that the operators would know when to make a change with them. Of course, no exchange manager wants his film damaged, but it seems to me that the use of tinfoil causes a smaller damage to film than the punch mark and is a matter of choice between the two evils. Personally I have not a bit of time for any operator who will punch-mark a film, but I know it to be a fact that there are operators, and plenty of them, who have used the punch, and some few that are still using it. This is the first case that I have heard of where the tinfoil has caused the film to jump, and whoever put the foil on is to be blamed for this damage, because he used a very heavy piece of the foil instead of the grade that is supposed to be used with the device. I would advise operators using the signaling device to keep a supply of the regular foil on hand, and do not attempt to use any other grade. I do not believe they will have any trouble with damaged film through the use of the foil. Another thing that should be watched is —when applying the foil to the film watch that the foil does not extend into the frame of the picture but stops at the edge of the sprocket holes.

Spots on Condensers

I am a reader of the Projection Department and am an operator working in a booth with two machines. I am using direct current, 110 volts, through a rheostat for each machine. I have been using a ¾-inch soft-cored carbon above and a ⅝-inch soft-cored carbon below and have had a very satisfactory light with this combination. The manager of the house decided to change carbons and he bought some of the Silver Tip carbons to use on the lower trim and I have had quite a little trouble with them in this way: I notice that there are little spots on the condensers. Can you tell me what causes them? I clean my condensers each morning before I open the show and I notice these spots on the rear condensers every day. I like the light that I am getting with the Silver Tip carbons and really think that they are much better than the other carbon, but I do not like to have the condensers covered with the small spots or beads. If you can tell me what is the cause of this and how to remedy it I will be ever so much obliged to you for the information. Wm. T.—Iowa.

The small deposits of metal that you find on the rear condensing lens come from the metal coating on the Silver Tip carbon. To remedy the trouble change your condenser combinations so that the arc will not be so close to the condensers. Another way to remedy the trouble is to take a cover glass that is used for making slides, cut the edges round so the slide will fit into the condenser mount, and place it next to the arc. I would change the condensers if possible and get the arc farther away from the condensers. If you cannot change them, try the slide glass.

New Lamp Service

I have been having a good deal of trouble with the terminals burning off of the wires into the lamp on my projection machine and I have experimented until I think that I have hit upon a scheme that will end my troubles with terminals. If any of the readers of the department are having the same kind of trouble they can try this out and see if it does not help them. Here is the way that I got rid of my trouble: I took the back out of my lamp house and got two pieces of heavy trolley wire about eight inches long. I flattened each end of the wire back for about one inch from each end. I flattened it so that it was 3/16-inch thick. I then drilled a hole in each end of the two wires large enough to allow the lamp screw to pass through the wires. I then bolted the wires onto the lamp jaws and then bolted the lead wires to the other end of the heavy trolley wires. The heavy trolley wire extends out to the edge of the lamp house and then the lead wires join there, and since I have been using this arrangement I have not had one terminal to burn off. Yours truly. E. H.—Penn.

Your scheme may work all right, but I do not believe that you will get to use it very long if a fire inspector ever sees it. I do not know whether you have such an official in your city or not, but where they do have them I think that your invention would be ordered out in a hurry. As far as to preventing the terminals from burning off it will do, but the fact that you have two bare copper wires running from your lamp jaw to the outside of the lamp is where the objection to it would come in. If either one of these wires works loose at the lamp jaw and short across to the lamp house or to the lamp, then you will have some fireworks and some fuses to replace. If you could insulate these wires in some manner it would help some.

Grippe Delays Picture

Margarite Fischer has had a lot of delays in finishing "A Daughter of Joan." She had a bad attack of grippe which confined her to her home for the better part of a week and since she has been back at the studio she has been working nights to finish this picture and get started on a new one.

The next one will be "Molly Go Get 'Em," a comedy drama, not unlike several of Miss Fischer's previous plays and is picked for a big winner by those who have read the script written by Beatrice Van Pluym.

"The Princess Virtue"

Mae Murray's Debut in Bluebird Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picture introduces Mae Murray on the Bluebird program. The picture is elaborate in settings and out of the ordinary in story. A screen version of Louise Winter's novel of the same title, "The Princess Virtue" presents a situation really "different" and one which is well suited for picturing. The idea is to show the heroine as a very charming but very artificial and frivolous youngster, an American child reared in the hot-house atmosphere of a Parisian "smart set." At heart she remains a sweet little girl, although she appears amusingly cynical. An American youth, sent to Paris by the girl's American grandmother appears on the scene to save the girl from really becoming what she seems.

The possibilities of this situation are apparent. Director Robert Leonard and Miss Murray have made the most of many phases of the story. The settings and the characters are chosen to suggest a foreign atmosphere. These are all interesting and offer advertising points to the exhibitor. Miss Murray wears some very interesting and elaborate gowns, bathing suits and negligee. Feminine audiences in small towns, well, feminine audiences anywhere, will be interested in that fact.

The picture is really clever, clean and amusing. It is more elaborate than the usual Bluebird production and it is up to the standard in every way. Miss Murray's role is difficult, since she must appear very artificial and still suggest childishness. She does not always do this. Some of your patrons may think she is too eccentric. But in our opinion the offering is a very attractive one for any theater, especially the high-class neighborhood houses.

Among the good features of the picture is the good acting by the supporting cast. Wheeler Oakman, who plays opposite, was well chosen. Clarissa Selwynne as the heroine's worldly mother is very attractive. Gretchen Lederer, Lule Warrenton, Harry Von Meter, Paul Nicholson and Jean Hersholt all do fine work. Bluebird standard is maintained in lighting and photography.

The Story: Clara Judkins Demarest, society woman and staunch American, learns of the marriage of her dead son's wife to a nobleman in Paris, and she wonders as the days go by how her frivolous daughter-in-law is training Liane, the old lady's granddaughter, for womanhood. In the meantime, in a fashionable Parisian home, little Liane, a sensitive, clever child, is being laughed at for her Puritanical notions. Her step-father in fun dubs her "Princess Virtue," and the name sticks as the child grows up. "Princess Virtue" is clever and popular. She becomes a prominent member of the reckless, worldly set to which her mother belongs and outdoes them all in freakish costuming and behavior. Her grandmother reads an account of her in a society paper and sends Basil Demarest (Oakman), a distant relative, to take Liane away from her dangerous world.

In Paris, Basil is amazed and then amused at the girl, and is much attracted to her, although at times he becomes disgusted with her. When two noblemen fight a duel about her, and she announces her engagement to one of them, whom she does not love, Basil decides that Liane is utterly spoiled and prepares to give her up. He is called upon to get her out of an escapade and is challenged to a duel. Liane manages to stop the affair and save Basil, with whom she has fallen in love. Basil does not guess the truth, and leaves France. On shipboard he discovers that Liane is also a passenger. She has decided to give up her exciting foreign life to become an American.

"The Fighting Trail"

Episode 9, "The Bridge of Death." Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE principal thrill in this episode is a daring and highly exciting race between an automobile and a motorcycle. The steering gear of the automobile finally breaks and the machine plunges down a steep embankment into the river.

The action is rapid and, while there is a sameness to the situations throughout, they are flavored with so much that is thrilling and absorbing that the problems seem ever new. The gorgeous western scenes would alone be worth seeing even if the production weren't in every way an enthralling spectacle.

Gwyn manages to hold the bridge until Nan climbs to safety when he drops the bridge into the chasm. The outlaws succeed in gaining a place of safety by grabbing hold of a rope.

The outlaws leave off hostilities for a while, giving Gwyn time to get the mine in operation. They then plan to attack the mine and steal the deeds, and also to waylay Nan on her way from the bank with the money bags. When Gwyn finds that the deeds have been stolen there is a wild race to the recorder's office in which Von Bleck wins.

Carol Halloway continues to be delightful and daring in the role of Nan, while William Duncan, both as actor and director, is excellent.

"The Medicine Man"

Triangle Picture. Released November 11. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS feature is sure to win approval with fans who enjoy the picturization of the rugged west. It is written in a breezy western style with the Bad Man foiled at every turn by the prowess of the sheriff and his dependable six-shooter. There are some regular fights in it, good riding, typical characterizations and plenty of vigorous western disregard of the law. The story was written by Jack Cunningham and picturized by Alvin H. Nietze.

Some comedy is interspersed throughout in the shape of a deputy sheriff who always arrives upon the scene too late to be of assistance, but who tries mighty hard to be helpful and is perfectly willing to take the credit for the work.

Roy Stewart is splendid in western roles, and, although in this picture he doesn't have the opportunities he had in his previous one, he still manages to get all the value out of the role that is possible. Ann Kronan makes a pretty dancing girl, and does good work in a light part. Others in the cast who give more than satisfactory performances are Aaron Edwards and Wilbur Higbee.

The story: Jim Welton is the sheriff of El Dorado by right of his supremacy with a six-shooter. He is inspecting abandoned mines one day when he finds Joe Malone working one and orders him off the property. Joe unearths a rich vein and tries to buy the property at public auction, but fails.

A traveling quack doctor arrives in the town accompanied by a dancing girl whose duty is to attract the crowds at his meetings. Malone recognizes in her the rightful owner of the mine through her parents long since dead. He plans to marry her by force, if necessary to obtain the riches, and sends the quack doctor East to raise enough capital to work the property.

Jim scents trouble and, being interested in Edith himself, puts her in the shelter of his own home under the care of an old Indian woman. Joe kidnaps Edith and is about to marry her when Walton arrives.

The doctor returns and tries to force Edith into signing away her rich mine. The sheriff appears again and saves the day. With the doctor and Malone foiled and the mine sold to an eastern company, Edith decides to become Mrs. Sheriff. The picture was directed by Cliff Smith.

"The Adventures of Carol"

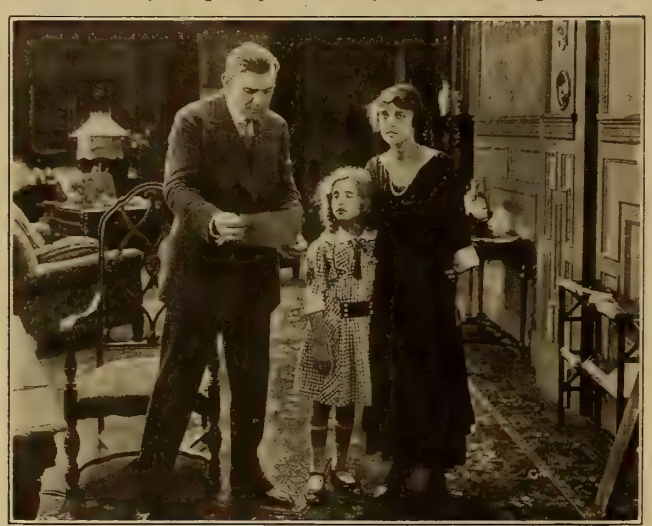
World Picture Brady-Made. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell



MADGE EVANS in this picture plays an appealing part in a most delightful manner. She is ever free from the restraint usually so noticeable in child actresses, and gives a refreshing performance because of her youthful spontaneity.

Carol, played by Madge Evans, wanders away from home and becomes lost, but she will not tell her name because her father who is a naval officer on the lookout for spies, has warned her against telling her name to strangers. Although the little girl suffers many hardships she remains true to her father's trust and will not disclose her identity.

The picture from a dramatic point of view amounts to nothing, it being merely a series of very pretty episodes which serve as a background for the youthful star. It should please all who see it because it is sweet and clean to a superlative degree.

There are many incidental scenes which will charm both young and old, a pet monkey causing much merriment and not a few gasps of surprise by his cleverness. The funeral, where the restorer of the faith in the Darwinian theory is buried with all due honors, is very humorous, or would be if it were not so pathetic. Madge Evans as the chief mourner does some very good work, rising to heights which would be commendable even in a much older actress. The supporting cast is good and includes George McQuarrie, Rosina Henley, Kate Lester, and Jack Drumier.

The story: Carol's father, a naval officer, has told his daughter to answer no questions asked her by strangers, as he is afraid of spies. Carol becomes lost one day but, when the police ask for her name, she remembers her father's command and refuses to tell. Thinking she knows her way, she wanders on and on until, completely tired out, she falls asleep in a doorway. Here Beppo, an organ grinder, finds her and takes her out on the open road where he compels her to dance to earn her living. They journey to Virginia where Carol eludes Beppo and seeks shelter at the Fairfax home. Mr. and Mrs. Fairfax have been estranged from each other for ten years. They are brought together by the love they both feel for Carol, and they decide to forgive their own daughter whom they disinherited ten years before because she married a man who was not of their choice. When the daughter arrives she proves to be none other than Carol's mother, who had been distracted because of her daughter's disappearance, but who is now joyfully united with her loved ones. Harley Knoles directed the picture.

Edison Perfection Release, Kleine System. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE first reel of this play shows an episode in the hero's college career, and was photographed at Yale university. The other four reels show his adventures in a Pennsylvania mining community. The story progresses evenly and is interesting. It has some dramatic situations and it is well supplied with humor. There are a number of excellent character roles, and in general the types are well chosen.

The picture is well adapted for the family group program. It is full of human interest and is clean and enjoyable. A story by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews served as its basis. Leslie Austin plays the leading role, John McLean. Mildred Havens plays the girl, and although her name is featured, she is not in the picture much of the time. William Wadsworth, Jessie Stevens, Ben Le Mar and Charlotte Lambert do very good work in character parts. William Calhoun, Lucia Moore and Stanley Wheatcroft complete the cast. The settings and photography are fine.

The story: On "Tap Day" at college, John McLean is not among those chosen for the senior fraternity and is greatly disappointed. The girl he loves is disappointed for him, but a misunderstanding keeps them apart.

Three years later John graduates from the Boston Tech., and is appointed superintendent of the Oriel mine. He finds conditions there very bad and does what he can to remedy them. A fire breaks out in the mine and John shows great heroism in rescuing a group of imprisoned miners. News of his exploit results in making him the hero of the hour when he returns to college at reunion time. There he meets again the girl and this time the misunderstanding is cleared away.

"Betty and the Buccaneers"

Third Juliette Day American-Mutual Release November 12. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

FANCY and fact are interwoven in this story as they were in the little heroine's mind. The picture is an unusually beautiful one, photographically, and out of the ordinary in story. As its title suggests, it has a modern "Treasure Island" theme. Juliette Day appears rather unchildlike in a child's role. Her supporting cast is good and includes three cleverly played character roles, the three pirates. Joe King plays opposite Miss Day. Other players are Charles Marriott, Tote de Crow, William Kyles, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson.

Rollin S. Sturgeon directed the picture and has emphasized its beauty and fancifulness. There isn't much to the story but there is a great deal of charm in its working out. It is best adapted to a neighborhood house, and because of its mixture of adventure and fancy, will appeal to youngsters especially.

The story: Betty is a romantic dreamer, the daughter of a retired professor, living an uneventful life with her father on his country estate called Twin Oaks and she craves excitement and adventure.

Captain Tobias Crook, a piratical mariner, induces the professor to finance and accompany a lost treasure hunting voyage.

After the departure, Betty, who was left at home against her will, spends much of her time in the walled garden of her father's home with her parrot, a present from the captian, and her favorite book, "Treasure Island."

"Dick" Winthrop, a passing motorist, is attracted by the playful parrot on the garden wall. Winthrop encounters Betty, who is surprised but immediately recognizes in him the ideal of her dreams.

Betty tells Dick of the treasure voyage and he is immediately interested, being a secret service agent on the trail of Captain Tobias, whom he knows is an old pirate in the business of promoting such expeditions, and then marooning his financial backers on desolate islands. Winthrop not wishing to alarm Betty, tells her nothing of this but resolves to capture the captain and rescue the girl's father.

Living up to his reputation, Captain Tobias forces the professor to make a will in his favor and then leaves him marooned on a small island.

The captain returns to Twin Oaks, informs Betty that her father is dead and takes charge of the estate, discharging the servants and installing members of his crew in their places.

A huge mulatto is made cook; Peg Leg, the gardener; and "Gentleman Jack" the butler. Several drunken brawls follow. The mullato and Captain Crook are killed and their bodies thrown into an abandoned well by "Peg Leg" and "Gentleman Jack." The captain out of the way, Jack seeks Betty, who is a horrified witness of the murders. She locks herself in her room and faints as Jack and Peg Leg batter down the door.

As Betty regains consciousness she finds her father and Winthrop bending over her. They arrived just in time to make prisoners of Peg Leg and Gentleman Jack.

"The Woman God Forgot"

Artcraft Production With Geraldine Farrar. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"THE WOMAN GOD FORGOT," produced by Cecil B. De Mille, is a stupendous spectacle, beautifully produced with Geraldine Farrar as Tecza, the daughter of Montezuma. The picture is an artistic treat, being a lavish production carefully worked out as to details and staged with scrupulous care.

The scenes are laid in the early Mexican days at the time of the Spanish invasion, when Montezuma The Magnificent reigned supreme and when riches were bountiful beyond belief. There is a gorgeous display of barbaric costumes and settings, and the spirit of the times has been graphically pictured, a human sacrifice being made to the gods on the slightest provocation.

A host of people has been used in staging some of the big scenes where pomp and ceremony are impressively realized, and the battle scenes are thrillingly effective, bristling with action and hand-to-hand combats. The use of bows and arrows and spears adds to the glamour and romance of the action. The introduction of suits of armor and firearms by the Spaniards makes a dazzling array not soon to be forgotten.

It is a picture which will live in one's memory, not so much for its worth from a dramatic point of view as for its grandeur as a spectacle.

Geraldine Farrar makes a striking figure 'midst so much barbaric splendor, wearing beautiful costumes and superb and unusual head-dresses. She has a chance to display her seductive charms to advantage, as well as her ability as an actress. Wallace Reid is splendid as usual. He is seen as the captain of the band of adventurous Spaniards. Raymond Hatton, Hobert Bosworth and Theodore Kosloff are others who do commendable work.

The story is of Tecza, daughter of Montezuma, who is pledged to marry Guatemoco, Montezuma's nephew. As a tribute to the gods, so they will ward off the Spanish invader, it is decided that Tecza's handmaiden, Marina, be sacrificed. Tecza, who loves the girl, allows her to escape, and is accused of having evoked the wrath of the gods.

Marina escapes to the Spanish camp and tells them that nothing but the "White God" will frighten Montezuma. Alvarado, a young captain, decides to go to the court of Montezuma and pose as the son of the "White God" to gain admittance to the city.

He is treated with no respect whatever and is taken prisoner, but is rescued by Tecza who harbors him in her own chambers. When this is discovered, Alvarado is ordered to be offered up as a sacrifice and plans are made for Tecza to marry Guatemoco immediately.

Tezca visits the Spanish camp and tells them she will open the city gates to them if they will rescue Alvarado and swear to then depart. They promise but, once within the city gates, they disregard their promise entirely and take Montezuma prisoner. Tecza is banished from her kingdom. Left alone in a little hillside cabin, she is later visited by Alvarado who avows his love. The picture was photographed by Alvin Wycoff.

"The Natural Law"

France Films Presentation With Marguerite Courtot. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE NATURAL LAW, featuring Marguerite Courtot, tells in a forceful manner that sex attractions exist and that they may prove to be pitfalls to the unsuspecting. The only fault to be found is that the girl, in this case, persists in overlooking the fact that she feels a strong attraction for the man and by this emphatic denial makes the picture seem to contradict itself. Even at the very end one isn't sure whether she goes to the man from a sense of duty or because she loves him.

The picture will appeal to women more than to men, as it is the sort of subject women love to fuss over, but which men take for granted. It is fairly well written and enacted and will hold the interest of the average picture fan, while its daring subject will call forth a host from mere curiosity.

Marguerite Courtot gives a splendid performance as the young girl in the case, while Howard Hall makes a manly doctor. George Larkin interprets the part of the college youth.

The story: Ruth Stanley is engaged to marry Dr. Webster, a man much older than she but with sterling qualities. While he is on a trip west she meets and is strongly attracted to Jack Bowling, an athletic college chap.

When the Doctor returns he realizes the danger of the situation and tells Ruth she shall choose between them. That evening Bowling calls upon the girl and, the attraction they feel for each other proving too strong, they follow the "natural law."

Ruth's engagement with the Doctor is broken, but weeks later she calls on him for assistance. The Doctor sends for Bowling and demands that a marriage ceremony be performed then and there. Ruth, however, not wishing Bowling to marry her from a sense of duty, refuses to marry him. Bowling leaves for Europe.

After quite an absence he returns and begs Ruth to reconsider her refusal. When she realizes that he really loves her, and that it is not his sense of honor which prompts him to make the request, she accepts him. Charles France directed the picture.

THIS is a good Minter subject. The exhibitor who is running the Minter series knows what that means to his house. It is a pretty, entertaining feature, with good acting, humor, fine photography, and, best of all, Miss Mary in a fitting role. It is not unusual in any one particular, but is up to the standard of the series and is a well rounded five-reel entertainment, suited especially to high-class neighborhood houses.

Miss Minter's supporting cast does very clever work. Alan Forrest appears in the role opposite the star and plays in his usual unaffected, pleasing manner. Carl Stockdale and Andrew Arbuckle enact character roles skillfully. Emma Kluge, Margaret Shelby, George Ahern, Frank C. Thompson and William Spencer complete the cast. Lloyd Ingraham directed the picture from a story by Charles and Frank Dazey, scenarioized by Elizabeth Mahoney.

The story: Peggy Manners comes from a fashionable Eastern school to the little mountain town in California where her father, who has lost his fortune, manages a general store. Peggy, who had believed her father still prosperous, overcomes her disappointment and sets to work to put things on an efficiency basis.

Roland Gardiner, a wealthy man, and his son have a summer home nearby. Gardiner has bought a large tract of land in the mountains and tries to make a game preserve of it. As a result, he is detested by the mountaineers. Peggy meets his son, Clyde, and finds him much more agreeable than his father.

"Indiscreet Corrine"

Triangle Picture With Olive Thomas. Released November 11. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS is a light, airy bit of entertainment. The spectator must relax and accept it trustingly in order to realize its best effects. As the sheltered society girl who longs for a past but who hasn't even a single sin to her credit until she disguises herself as a masked dancer and sets the town talking. Olive Thomas has an opportunity to do some graceful dancing and to wear some pretty clothes, but that is about all.

There is a funny twist at the end of the picture which explains much that has gone before and which considerably restores faith in the author's good intentions. The sub-titles are cleverly written and afford much more amusement than the situations. This picture can be summed up as a fair comedy offering, being amusing in a mild sort of way, but containing no great amount of hilarity.

The supporting company is entirely satisfactory. George Chesebro, Josie Sedgwick, Thomas H. Guise and Annette de Foe support Miss Thomas in the play.

The story, which was written by H. B. Daniels, tells of Corrine Chilvere, a sheltered daughter of the rich, who longs for a lurid past and the joys of a sinful future. She refuses to marry Rocky Van Sandt because of his respectability, and worries her French maid with questions about mistakes and indiscretions.

Seeing by an advertisement that two young women with pasts are wanted, Corrine answers at the address given. She is chosen and is given instructions to meet and win a proposal of marriage from Nicholas Fenwick, a millionaire.

Pansy Hartley, who finds it very difficult to earn an honest living, also answers the advertisement. Both young women succeed in meeting the millionaire, Pansy by posing as a Tuscany countess and Corrine as a masked dancer. They are invited to a dinner party given by Fenwick, to which Rocky Van sandt is also invited. He recognizes Corrine but keeps her secret.

Rocky and Pansy fall in love, so it is left for Corrine to win the proposal from Fenwick. This is not a difficult thing to do, as Fenwick is already madly in love with her.

Corrine's parents are highly enraged when they hear about her indiscreet conduct and turn her from the house. In Fenwick's arms she explains that she is not a creature with a past at all but a bored society girl, and he explains that he is not a millionaire but a rising young engineer. It had been the hope of the advertising concern to create a new moving picture "vamp" for Broadway but unfortunately for them their plans are unceremoniously spoiled. Corrine's parents decide that a wedding ring covers a multitude of indiscretions, so all ends happily.

"The Fettered Woman"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released November 5. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"THE Fettered Woman," starts out at a highly dramatic pace, but ends in a lighter vein which is much more acceptable. It is a picture dealing with unjust laws, and is along the line of many of the theatrical successes which have stormed Gotham recently. The story was written by Robert W. Chambers and his many followers will not be disappointed. His name, combined with Alice Joyce's, should prove a drawing power of unusually attractive dimensions.

The theme is interesting, though not irresistible. The latter part of the picture is truly delightful, the simple home scenes being so realistic as to make a lump rise in one's throat at the prospect of the loneliness which will tinge the farm when the one summer boarder has departed. The girl in the picture, Angelina, is a creature whom fate has treated so ruthlessly as to make her cry out that she has not one thing in her life for which to thank God. Alice Joyce's listless beauty admirably fits this role, and she is at all times a sweetly convincing figure.

There are some interpolated bits of humor which will be enjoyed by some but which could be dispensed with very easily. They hurt the action of the picture and give one a feeling of irritation rather than of amusement.

The Story: Old Doctor Allende commits suicide when he finds his money is gone and that he is unable to raise a loan. He leaves a daughter, Ruth, with three thousand acres of worthless land. An unscrupulous real estate broker seeks to force his unwelcome attentions upon the girl, but she repulses him. He induces her to go to New York on a business trip, his real object being to have her sign away all rights to the farm, thus getting her in his power.

He takes her to a cafe with another man and a woman posing as his wife, and attacks her in a private dining room. The other man interferes and is shot. They put the blame on Angelina and she is sent to a Samaritan home for three years.

Returning to her old hime when the three years are up, she is shunned by all the townspeople. She advertises for boarders and one young man answers the advertisement, lured by the trout fishing. He falls in love with Angelina but she refuses to marry him on account of her prison record, which she keeps a secret.

The young man believes in her innocence and, going to New York, learns the truth from the real estate broker. There is the usual happy ending with the barrier to their happiness removed. The picture was directed by Tom Terriss.

"Bab's Burglar"

Paramount Production With Marguerite Clark. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS second "Bab" picture from the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart is as good as the first, which is endorsement enough for an exhibitor. The humor is irresistible, and the production by Famous Players comes up to the highest expectations. Marguerite Clark is simply delightful. The comedy element is refreshingly wholesome, depending upon human touches in the characterizations and the well written titles which are supposed to be taken from pages of Bab's own diary. The charm of Mary Roberts Rinehart's original work has not been lost in this picturization as is so often the case when the works of popular authors are prepared for the screen. Her insight into human nature is admirably reflected throughout the whole picture.

Bab is romantic, impressionable, self-important and young. She expects to be taken seriously, having a great disregard for her own youth, and she continually keeps her family upset by plunging headlong into all sorts of complicating situations brought about by her romantic tendencies. Marguerite Clark endows Bab with all the youthful guile of the sub-debutante and her performance could not be improved upon. One has to laugh spontaneously as each new note from Bab's dairy is flashed upon the screen and all who wish to be rejuvenated by youth must not fail to see this clean, humorously written picture.

The Story: Bab Archibald is given an allowance of a thousand dollars a year. The importance she feels at having a checking account is vast and writing out checks proves to be a great temptation.

She buys an automobile one day with as much unconcern as if it were a post-card, thereby impressiong her friend Jane with a feeling of awe. Bab knows nothing about running an automobile, but confidently starts out with the guide book in her hand, and consequently runs through a barn, a milk wagon, a fence and her bank account. At the end of two months she is left with just sixteen cents to carry her through the rest of the year.

Very disconsolate at this unhappy state of affairs, Bab decides to use her car for a jitney to make some money. Her first passenger leaves his coat in her car, and, in looking for some means of identification, Bab finds plans of her own house. She decides to catch the burglar and armed with a revolver, sits up that night. Sure enough, she sees a man enter the front gate, sneak up on the veranda and disappear through the porch door.

Bab, very excited, bars his every means of exit and then fires her revolver. When her family arrives on the scene in a highly agitated condition, she discovers that the burglar is her sister Leila's newest "crush" and that she has spoiled a wonderful chance to get her sister married.

Her crowning disillusionment comes when, walking in the garden after this unhappy event, she sees her beau riding in her automobile with Jane, her best friend. She turns to her father and reflects that life is bitter, very bitter.

Second Mrs. Vernon Castle-Pathe Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MYSTERY story by Carolyn Wells is the basis for Mrs. Vernon Castle's second Pathe five-reel offering. The story does not give Mrs. Castle an opportunity to display her athletic ability as "Patria" and the first Pathe play did, but it contains a real plot which is interest-compelling, and Mrs. Castle's costumes are attractive.

The play is very well presented and has the usual appeal of a mystery plot. Its action is fast and events are clearly presented. The story will keep spectators guessing until the end. Photography, acting and settings are satisfactory, and as a whole the picture should attract and please good-sized audiences everywhere. It is not heavy or depressing, but is a cleverly picturized detective story of an entertaining nature.

Antonio Moreno plays opposite Mrs. Castle. John Sainpolis, J. H. Gilmour and Elinore Black have important roles. George Fitzmaurice directed.

Kane wishes to borrow a large sum of money from his uncle to finance a new project and is refused. Later, when the uncle is found dead in a park, Kane is accused of the murder and evidence points to him. The puzzling clews and the final unraveling of the mystery form a plot of unfailing interest.

Harry Carey in a Fine Western Butterfly Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IF your patrons like Harry Carey, they can't help liking this play, in which he is at his best and has an unusually sympathetic role. Audiences generally will accept this as a very good western picture, with fast riding, hold-ups and everything, a most likeable hero, a thrilling story, and a decidedly human appeal. Few western stories have the real sympathetic appeal that this one has. "Cheyenne" Harry, played by the star, is one of the best characterizations we've seen recently. He isn't a "bad-man," though he behaves like one, and he isn't a conventional reformed sinner. Molly Malone already has won attention from screen patrons and she will win still more in this. Her work is very good. The rest of the cast do very commendable work. Mrs. Townsend contributes a good "mother" characterization. Harry Rattenberry, Vesta Pegg and William Gettinger deserve mention. Jack Ford directed the picture from a story and scenario by George Hively. Our only adverse criticism is that the title fails to suggest the value of the picture.

A hold-up in midstream.

The Story: "Cheyenne" Harry is introduced hiding in a cave to escape capture as a bandit. He is reading a letter from his mother in which she rejoices at his account of his home and fortune. For Harry makes his mother believe that he is all he would like to be. This letter it happens is later read by Molly Young, the daughter of a rancher whose home Harry attempts to rob. Believing the man good at heart because of his love for his mother, Molly persuades her father to give him a second chance. So Harry becomes an honest cow-boy on the ranch.

But, led by a former accomplice, he slips back into the old way and plans one last hold-up. In the struggle the other man shoots and kills a driver. Harry shares his guilt and western justice sentences them both to be hanged. Then a letter arrives from Harry's mother saying that she is on her way to visit his fine home and the wife he had written about. The men read the letter and decide to postpone the execution for a week, and Molly and her father offer Harry their home in which to entertain his mother. The mother arrives and finds that Harry is living as his letters had indicated. Then she leaves and Harry is taken back to jail. But just in time comes an unexpected witness who testified to Harry's innocence and the play ends happily.

Picture Theater Construction

SOUND ADVICE FROM AN EXPERIENCED ENGINEER

By Edward B. Kinsila
Of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE picture theater is the popular bible of the fine arts for the masses and middle classes, where the screen serves as a sort of grammar school for the young, the partially educated, and those who still possess the primitive instinct of allowing themselves to be deluded by illusions that enlighten and amuse.

Perhaps the most pertinent thing I could refer to in picture theater construction would be the tendency of exhibitors to build more commodious and elegant theaters with every convenience for the accommodation of its patrons. But this would be wasting valuable time. It is always the aim of the exhibitor to present pictures in an attractive manner to a discriminating public. If the wish be to cater for the patronage of the masses, he builds a large, centrally-located theater in the main thoroughfare. If it be intended for a special or select few, he erects a smaller neighborhood playhouse in the principal shopping street of the section selected for exploitation. Sometimes both these demands are met by the establishment of a chain of magnificent theaters.

"Copying" to Be Avoided

But in the erection of photoplay houses to satisfy the ever increasing demand for improvement and better accommodation, there is too great a tendency toward repetition, too evident a desire to blindly copy, without giving the question sufficient or serious thought. It is my desire to correct these faults.

Therefore I prefer to discuss the scientific and artistic aspects that govern the whole subject. The phenomena of motion pictures has reference to motion, that interesting phase of existence that is responsible for all progress in every sphere of life. Until recently it has not been appreciated at all, and is still indifferently understood throughout the world.

Almost every phase of existence is dependent on motion. Heat, sound, light and other forms that it would be a transgression to mention, are dependent upon it. When movement ceases, all interest is lost. When we cease to move we are dead, and soon are forgotten. A higher appreciation of these forces will bring a better knowledge and a clearer understanding to the entire subject of picture playhouse construction. Avoiding the question of size and relation, such as whether to build large or small to accommodate one's patrons—really matters of detail that are thoroughly discussed in my book, entitled "Modern Theater Construction," recently published by the Moving Picture World—I shall pass on to more important matters.

Few people realize that the picture industry is an art wholly dependent on phychology, and by "psychology" I do not mean the name of a racehorse that will win the third race today. I am merely suggesting a business trip which, if followed, will bring handsome profits. The very basis of this industry rests on mental conditions, and its early development was the result of scientific research begun nearly a century ago.

Pictures Are an Independent Art

Another error that producers and exhibitors often make is the assumption that pictures are a cheap substitute for the spoken drama of the stage. This is not true at all. The motion picture is an entirely independent art, capable of telling its story in a far better manner than the spoken drama. On the real stage the period and duration of the play is limited, and events, to be logical, must occur in sequence. Attention to the story is directed by the spoken word of the actor. In the screen play there are no such restrictions. By the aid of flash-backs and visions the spectators may be carried back to any period of time or even conveyed into the very inner minds of the players on the screen. The brutal and revolting scenes of crime are not essential upon the screen.

The visualization of an action properly associated with connecting events will sufficiently stimulate the mind of the spectator to a true appreciation of the act itself. A close-up of a nervous hand fingering the trigger of a revolver will picture murder most vividly, if correctly introduced with the associated actions shown on the screen. The absence of disconcerting words, and the introduction of a wealth of ideas that enrich our imaginations by awakening remnants of earlier experience, are all that are necessary. At the so-called real theater the actions and suggestions of the players are external. They come from without ourselves, while in the screen play everything comes from within, and in consequence is far more realistic. Visual simulation for the purpose of mental stimulation should be the endeavor.

The sooner the problem is viewed from this standpoint the better it will be for the entire industry.

Build Aids to Illusion

If the picture art is a psychic problem and its success depends upon the effect produced on the mind of the spectator, why not adopt every rational means that will cause the spectator's mind to become perfectly receptive to these illusions? It should, therefore, be the first duty of the exhibitor to provide a pleasing playhouse, one that by its exterior design will suggest the form of entertainment housed therein, and with an interior plan adaptable to its class of patronage, the presentations given and the comfort of its patrons. I might say right here that the price of admission very materially affects one's appreciation of a presentation. No one ever heard complaint at the performance of a twenty-five-cent circus, although the same show at the regular circus admission prices might have provoked universal complaint.

There are many incidental methods of contributing toward the comfort of theater patrons and thereby influencing their mental attitude, trifling perhaps in themselves, but amounting to a great deal in the aggregate. Uniforming the attendant, no matter what his position, will insure courtesy and thereby add toward the patrons satisfaction. Proper heating and ventilation also help. The manner in which fresh air is supplied to an auditorium is more important than the amount of supply, as air that traverses a room without reaching the breathing zone is of no practical value. One thousand cubic feet of air well distributed is worth ten times that amount introduced without mixing with the air in the breathing zone.

Few persons realize that in most picture houses they inhale for about two hours the vitiated exhalations of those seated about them. And many of them are fastidious persons who insist upon drinking filtered water from sanitary cups, and yet do not object to paying for seats in a germ-laden atmosphere often so foul that it gives off an offensive odor.

Insufficient coat hanging space is another inconvenience too generally imposed on a patient public with a false notion of conserving seating space. A very small display of ingenuity would provide ample coat hanging facilities in most theaters without the sacrifice of valuable seating space. To encumber patrons with their wraps for the period of an entire entertainment will surely not improve their mental attitude.

Problem of Seating Arrangement

The seating arrangement presents a far more serious problem in a motion picture playhouse than in a regulation theater. In the latter, persons arising to permit the passage of others only obstruct the view of the stage for a moment, which is not always important, as one can usually hear the dialogue and continue to follow the thread of the story; but with a photoplay the same obstruction masks the view and breaks the continuity of thought and, if often repeated, is likely to entirely ruin one's appreciation of the entire photoplay.

This is so much so that it has led to the agitation for a law limiting the number of continuous chairs in a picture theater to eight seats, instead of twelve, thirteen or fourteen as now exist. If the distance between seats were increased four inches from back to back it would permit the free passage of persons without the necessity of anyone arising, only diminishing the total number of seats in an auditorium one row in every ten. In England, where no one is expected to arise or be disturbed to admit another, the distance from chair back to chair back is thirty-six inches instead of the thirty-two inches allowed in this country, and the rows of chairs there extend the full width of the auditorium without center aisles of any description.

Great care should be taken in the establishment of correct sight lines. Greediness for more balcony seats should never tempt the addition of a balcony row that will hang so low as to interfere with a full view of the stage.

Light the balcony steps with electric lights placed behind translucent colored glass prevents stumbling in the dark. An entrance tunnel piercing the balcony from a mezzanine floor facilitates access to the upper tiers of a balcony.

An orchestra well that conceals the musicians is preferable to one that exposes them. The charm of music apparently coming from a distance is more likely to produce a contemplative and receptive state of mind than the blaring of a brass band, exposed in full view.

Full Lights Help Comedies

The elimination of useless stage boxes that serve to attract attention at the expense of the picture on the stage, and a proper proportioning of the auditorium and stage, together with the possibility of brilliantly illuminating the audience hall during the showing of a comedy picture, are all influences that contribute to a patron's receptive state of mind. Spectators are impelled to laugh when they see others laughing by the aid of brilliant illumination.

There are no definite rules for the design or plan of a theater. After the site has been chosen, due regard must be given to the size and scale of the building. Different neighborhoods, the class of patrons sought, and the nature of the entertainment must be carefully considered. The exterior of a theater should be designed with sobriety and offer an inviting appearance to the eye reflecting the ideals housed therein, and the interior should be formed as a setting or frame for the same presented on the stage. There should be no attempt on the part of the architect to perpetuate his fame at the expense of the enterprise.

Avoid Fanciness

There should be no "fussiness" in design, especially of the interior. All unnecessary ornament should be avoided as tending to distract attention from the dominating architectural motive. Every feature should be subordinated to this central motive. When a single architectural ideal is well expressed, the result is always simple and good.

It is often possible to finish the interior in blocked stone or a clever plaster imitation of grey Caen stone, which will give an added sense of security to the patrons. A fan shaped audience hall is ideal and offers the greatest opportunities for a motion picture playhouse. Its very formation also tends toward centering attention on the proscenium opening, the main constructive feature of auditorium and the one closest to the action shown on the stage. Incompetent architects, instead of designing this opening in lines that are simple, harmonious and unobtrusive, often overload it with old-fashioned and meaningless bands of ribbon and inartistic wreaths.

While art really admits of the standardization advocated by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, it clearly calls for specialization, which may be considered by some as standardization in another form.

As I have pointed out in my work on "Modern Theater Construction," specialization is as needful in theater architecture as in other lines of commercial endeavor. Most of the theater deficiencies in this country today are the result of a woeful lack of qualified specialists in this line of work, and a consequent inclinaiton to copy blind the work of others, mistakes included.

Projection Room of Tile

Ordinary humanity, however, demands that the general arrangement of a theater conform to the safety of the inmates, whether patrons or employes. As nearly all fires in motion picture playhouses originate in the projection room, this department should be made absolutely fire safe, which is not always the case today.

Whether the projection room be placed aloft in the balcony, or above it like a turret on a battleship, or whether it be placed in a position to insure level projection, as is now being ably advocated by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, there should be some method of standardization that would demand the construction of this source of danger absolutely fire-resisting, not built of flimsy asbestos cardboard, as is now the case in many motion picture houses. The projection room and its devices are mechanical and, therefore, will permit of standardization.

Its entrance and exit should never be direct from the audience hall, but should be from without the auditorium, as required by law in every European country. Then, if the walls are formed of heavy hollow building tile, to my mind the best and cheapest fire-resisting and soundproof material known, all danger from an explosion or blaze within its walls being heard by the audience and creating panic will be eliminated.

I trust that my remarks have instilled in your minds the important fact that the motion picture is an art founded on science; that its original development was through scientific research; that the problem of its presentation is a psychic one, and should be always treated as such to secure the best results.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

Latest Ideas Are Used

The latest ideas in architecture will be embodied in the construction of the new Rialto theater building in Tacoma, Wash. John S. Baker, a local capitalist who is interested in the project, has commissioned Roland E. Borhek, a Tacoma architect, to tour the Pacific Coast cities and inspect the newest moving picture theaters, to obtain the best ideas for inclusion in his plans for the Rialto. The preliminary drawings for the building provide for a structure measuring 90 by 120 feet, embracing an auditorium with a seating capacity of between 1,600 and 1,700.

Fire Damages Theater

The Wenonah Theater, one of the largest houses in Bayside, Mich., was damaged by fire recently. The blaze started at 7:15 a. m. when the theater was empty, and although the fire was confined to the basement, smoke and water did considerable damage. The $1,500 screen was cracked by the heat. The music pit and part of the seating floor was flooded. Manager R. P. Leahy was unable to determine the cause of the fire, as he said the heating plant of the building was not started until late in the forenoon.

Exhibitor Dies Suddenly

H. H. Dean, manager of the Dreamland Theater, Vancouver, B. C., and one of the oldest exhibitors in that city, dropped dead in his theater after the close of the performance on Saturday night, October 20, from heart failure. He stooped to the floor to examine the leg of a seat and fell dead.

Ladies Admitted Free

To introduce the first chapter of "The Great Secret" at the Liberty Theater, Calgary, Alberta, during the week of October 22, ladies were admitted free to the theater each afternoon between the hours of two and four-thirty. There was a crush each day.

Opera House Reopened

The Loomis Opera House, in Waverly, N. Y., after several months of idleness, has been reopened by Manager William E. Dillon. For the opening night he presented a road show production along with the regular motion picture bill.

Rush Building Operations

The Wyoming Feature Film company which owns a string of theaters in central Wyoming, is rushing to completion the work on its new playhouse in Greybull. The theater will have a seating capacity of 500 and will be modern in every respect.

New Theaters Are Building

A number of new theaters are to be opened in Canada shortly. The finest of these probably is the new Allen Theater, Toronto, which is a veritable palace. This will be opened in November with Mary Pickford's, "The Little American." Ben Cronk, formerly a Calgary exhibitor, is the manager of the Allen at Toronto. Other new Canadian houses include new Loew Theaters at Hamilton, Ontario, and Montreal, Quebec, the New Princess Theater at Montreal and the Oakwood Theater at Toronto. The latter will be a large suburban house with a seating capacity of 1,400.

Authorities Seize Films

The Ontario provincial authorities seized thirty-two films at Toronto theater on October 25 and 26, claiming that the pictures had not been viewed by the Ontario Board of Censors. Local exhibitors claim, however, that the films had been viewed and passed by the board and the imprint of the official seal on the films was shown as proof of their contention. The government representative argued that the censor board certificates were missing when they should have been attached to the reels. Exchange managers declared that the "tags" had become worn out.

Iris Theater Opens

The Iris Theater in Topeka, Kas., was opened on November 5 by I. Feltenstein, who has been an orchestra leader in Topeka for more than a year. Until two years ago the Iris was the most popular motion picture theater in the Kansas capital. Mr. Feltenstein personally supervised the redecoration of the house, and by showing pictures of the highest class, hopes to restore the Iris to the favor it formerly enjoyed.

Sells Tickets in Advance

The Princess Theater, Edmonton, Alberta, has made considerable success of the policy of selling strips of admission tickets to patrons who wish to avoid delay at the box office. The regular admission at this theater is ten cents and the tickets are sold in strips of ten for $1.00. There is no reduction for quantity purchases but many persons take advantage of the policy for their own convenience.

House Seats 1,500 Persons

The Hippodrome, a new theater in Herrin, Ill., will open about Thanksgiving. It is a model theater, fashioned after the old Roman Hippodrome of Julius Caesar's day. It seats 1,500 persons and is equipped with thirteen exits which make it possible to empty the building in less than five minutes. A big pipe organ is part of its equipment. High class pictures and vaudeville will be shown.

Crush Damages Theater

The crush at the Colonial Theater, City Hall Square, Toronto, for the final episode of the "Gray Ghost" was so great that new poster frames were broken and the lobby was otherwise disfigured. The theater was recently redecorated and refitted throughout by Manager McMillan.

Open on Sunday

Hugh MacPhail and Jack Thompson, owners of the North Side theater in Bryan, O., started on November 1 to manage the East Side theater in the same city. The first change in policy inaugurated by the new management was to keep the theater open on Sunday. Because patronage does not justify continual operation of both theaters, each will be open only part of the week.

Turns Theater Over to Women

Manager Conover of the Imperial Theater, one of the largest picture houses in Montreal, permitted the members of the Margaret Murray Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire to select the film feature for a special benefit performance at that theater on October 24 for patriotic purposes. They chose a recent release, "Bab's Diary," featuring Marguerite Clark.

Careless with Tacks

Small town exhibitors generally should take a lesson from a paragraph printed recently in the automobile section of the Montreal Star. This paper declared that automobile owners should avoid the vicinity of picture theaters in small places because exhibitors were in the habit of throwing tacks on sidewalks and roaddays when they changed posters on their theater fronts.

Closes Property Deal

Howard V. Colon, of Omaha, has closed a deal by which he becomes the holder of the title to a valuable property in Hamburg, Ia. Using this newly acquired property and a corner site which he already owned, it is understood Mr. Colon will erect an up to date motion picture theater.

Opens First of Year

A new picture theater will be opened on January 1, by W. J. Boody in Harrison, Ark. Mr. Boody has been successfully operating show houses in Eureka Springs, Berryville and Green Forest.

Remodel Old Theater

Workmen under the direction of C. G. Vaughan, are engaged in remodeling the Kelso Theater block in Kelso, Wash. A new theater for motion pictures is scheduled to be opened there within a short time.

Building Is Progressing

Work of construction on the New Dayton theater, on North Main street in Dayton, O., is progressing. Steel for the structure has been delivered and the brick laying is going forward rapidly.

Two Houses Are Combined

The two motion picture theaters of Cadillac, Mich., the Rex, owned by S. J. Keefe, and the Savoy, owned by G. W. Turner, have been consolidated, under the name of the Rex theater. Both men will be identified with the merged property.

Closes Theater for Night

When "The Slacker" reels failed to arrive in time for the evening performance, the management of the Orpheum theater in Titusville, Pa., refused to substitute another bill, and closed their house for the night.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

IN one of the scenes of "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," a William Fox Sunshine Comedy made by Henry Lehrman, it was necessary that two negroes lies in bed and be awakened by a lioness swishing her tail and tickling their feet.

"Lie still," Lehman admonished the two men. "You know the lion won't hurt you."

"Yassir, we knows, but do the lion know?" anxiously inquired one of the coal black comedians.

There was a small part to be filled in "His Mother's Boy," Charles Ray's second Paramount picture, produced by Thomas H. Ince. None seemed to fill the requirements until a modest little stenographer knocked at the office door. Immediately it was evident that she was the ideal type for the part and so in the picture Miss Charlotte Woods lays aside pencil and notebook to portray the role of a New England village girl.

Herbert Warren, chief of the scenario department of the "Fatty" Arbuckle company, was recently married to Valerie Bergere, the original "Madam Butterfly" on the legitimate stage.

Lewis Sargent, one of the clever juveniles in "Jack and the Beanstalk," William Fox's spectacular film, is the greatest 13-year-old short story writer in the world. Lewis spends his time away from the camera in composing blood-and-thunder stories. He writes them on the typewriter, and when he comes to the bloodiest passages, he uses that part of the ribbon which writes in red. Parts of Lewis' stories are therefore always sure to be read!

Two lions, a flock of ostriches, an elephant, one duck, a trained bee and—

The above is not an inventory of the chief stock in trade of a circus, but is merely a list of some of the animals used by Henry Lehrman in making a Sunshine Comedy for William Fox.

Nell Shipman, who has rejoined Vitagraph, purchased $500 worth of clothes for use in her first picture, "The Eighth Great Grand Parent," in which she is starred. Already, one of her new gowns has been partly ruined, for while Miss Shipman is an accomplished horsewoman, riding a bareback circus horse and wearing a slippery, shiny satin evening gown meanwhile is one of the things that almost "can't be done." However, Miss Shipman overcame the handicap long enough to register some good scenes.

Robert Walker, who plays the role of Perry Bascom in the Metro screen version of Joseph Arthur's popular old melodrama, "Blue Jeans," in which Viola Dana is the star, plays the same role that his famous uncle, Robert Hilliard, played in the original stage production.

Emmy Wehlen was a musical comedy star before she entered motion pictures. She was a star of such well known productions as "The Merry Widow," and "The Dollar Princess" at the Gaiety Theater in London.

The great Nazimova, who has been at New Orleans enacting scenes for "God's Message," has been widely entertained by society in the southern city.

Sidney Drew and Mrs. Drew have already completed their Christmas comedy picture which will be released at the holiday season.

Claire Vernon, who performs a classic solo dance in the festive ball room scene of Emmy Wehlen's coming Metro play, is a pupil of Adolph Rohm, the famous Russian dancer. Miss Vernon arranged her graceful interpretive dance in slow deliberate movements, which photographed well and are revealed in all their art on the screen.

A squad of trained girl soldiers with Margarita Fischer in command will be one of the features of the new American star's initial production, "A Daughter of Joan."

Annette Kellermann is practically tireless, and does not believe in wasting a single precious moment. When she is not working in the Fox studio at Fort Lee, N. J., she is practicing either ballet and toe dancing or wire walking. She concludes the day with a ten-mile walk and is in bed by 8:30 P. M.

Marian Fairfax, the author of "The Secret Game," which William C. DeMille is directing with Sessue Hayakawa as his star, laid much of the action in a Japanese curio shop. Hayakawa offered to supply the necessary curios for this from his own collection, which includes beautiful and delicate old ivories, lacquers, jades, paintings, statuary, as well as furniture made by Japanese artists and workers in rich and rare woods. There was plenty of this included in the consignment, and the setting is unusually beautiful.

Beautiful Lina Cavalieri, whose first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," will be a December release, has many hobbies, but one of the most pronounced in her case consists in the possession and wearing of wonderful pearls.

Mary Miles Minter had the time of her young life at a street carnival in Santa Barbara recently. She spied a side show where you throw balls at buckets and if you get five balls in the buckets you get a live duck. Miss Minter won three nice, fat, squawking ducks. In fact they squawked all the way home and mortified everybody in the party but Mary.

Doctor Fleming, a Los Angeles physician and surgeon, has been added to the regular staff of the Douglas Fairbanks organization, so that in case of accident prompt medical aid would be available. Fairbanks himself is in splendid physical condition and does not anticipate using the services of the M. D., but he was led to take this step when Frank Campeau after a strenuous screen fight with Fairbanks complained of severe pains and was found to have sustained a broken rib. A miniature hospital has been equipped, and is now one of the points of interest along Fairbanks Alley.

Director J. Searle Dawley has been marching through Georgia looking up locations for Marguerite Clark's next Paramount picture following "Bab's Matinee Idol." Some of the scenes will probably be filmed in the Sunny Southland.

Easterners are anxiously awaiting news of a tidal wave or other disaster on the California beaches as a result of Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's threatened plunges into the inoffensive surf.

The success of Douglas Fairbanks' first book, "Laugh and Live," has prompted him to begin writing another book along similar lines. Britton Publishing Company will publish his second contribution to the literary world.

William Russell, American Film star, is trying to force the money on Douglas Fairbanks, who spurns it. "Bull" Montana, who stands between them, is not displeased.

The Fable of the Toilsome Ascent and the Shining Table Land—(Two Reels) — November 10.—George Ade fable series. Then he came home and opened up a law office as a place to hang out between campaigns and the whole world was a political cinch for him after that. In the beginning he met defeat, which taught him to hang onto the machine. He went to Congress, of course, and there we leave our hero. As George Ade says, "There is always board and room at the top."

Film from America Is Welcome in China

Yes, these are chicken scratches—that is, in the sense that the artist who did the work is one of the cleverest young women in the business.

Really, however, the illustration is the main title of "A Daughter of the Gods," done into Chinese for the accommodation of one of the exhibitors of William Fox pictures in the Celestial Kingdom.

The first line, according to the exhibitor, meets a requirement of Chinese law and consists of the words, "United States, New York City," indicating the origin of the film. The second line is Chinese for "Fox Film Corporation" and the lonesome little fraction-like character with the pollywogs on the side is to be translated "presents."

The fourth line, as may be seen, gets quickly over the alphabet taxing name of "Miss Annette Kellermann," and the fifth line, which looks as if it might be a biff scene in an encounter between microbes, is nothing but the word "in."

The last line probably would remind a farmer—or a politician—of the way his fences looked the morning after a cyclone, but really is nothing more serious than "A Daughter of the Gods."

The artist affirms that her work has been verified by persons who said it was perfectly intelligible to them. Her own idea, however, after spending half a day carefully placing all the curleycues and finding places for the dots and dashes, all in accordance with the copy, was that the work was entirely impressionistic.

"The Hungry Heart" Written From Best Seller

An attractive feature of the November Paramount releases will be found in "The Hungry Heart," it is promised, with Pauline Frederick in the role of Courtney, wife of a scientist, who is neglected soon after the honeymoon.

When David Graham Phillips' novel, from which this picture was adapted, first appeared it jumped to the top list of best sellers. It was one of the most popular novels of its year, was regarded in many circles as mirroring a situation in real life that is prevalent in many American homes, as well as in other countries where the interest in research is developed almost to the point of a mania by those who go in for scientific study.

Miss Frederick has also completed "Mrs. Dane's Defense," from the Henry Arthur Jones drama, which will be a Paramount release for the near future. This was directed by Hugh Ford. She is now at work on a third picture, full details of which will be forthcoming shortly. Robert G. Vignola is director.

Latest News Notes of Chicago

Two New Theaters Open in Chicago

The Central Park theater is one of the latest additions to the amusement centers in Chicago and one of the finest picture theaters in Chicago. Many unusual features have been incorporated into it by the builders. One of the most important is a new development of the projection machine which makes it practically impossible for the operator to give anything but perfect projection.

Another interesting feature is the arrangement of the theater which allows the easy introduction of a stage for large dramatic productions at very small expense. This is accomplished architecturally by the building of the proscenium arch well forward into the body of the house, a feature which also makes for the "intimate" effect and adds much to the coziness of a very large theater.

The Central Park Theater is located in the heart of a unified "home" neighborhood, and expects to draw its capacity of 2,600 persons from the immediate district. The equipment of the Central Park was installed by the Amusement Supply Company.

Another new Chicago house equipped by the same firm is the Broadway Strand theater which will seat 1,800 persons. It was opened last week, owned by Mars & Co.

Now Fox Is After Him

William Fox is the latest film producer to take a legal slap at Major Funkhouser, Chicago's second deputy superintendent of police and motion picture censor. The Fox company is suing for an injunction to restrain Funkhouser from interfering with the showing of "Camille," with Theda Bara as star. The petition alleges that Miss Bara's services cost the company $100,000 and that contracts for $15,000 are involved in the showing of the film in Chicago, which will be cancelled if only adults are permitted to view the picture. The company alleges that the major is prejudiced against it because it recently obtained an injunction compelling the Chicago censor to keep his hands off "The Spy."

Gish Sisters and Their Mother Visit City

The Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, who have been in Europe with D. W. Griffith helping to film real war scenes along the western front, were in Chicago with their mother one day last week. After spending the day shopping they rested at the Blackstone Hotel.

"I've had enough excitement to last a lifetime," said Miss Dorothy, speaking of her experiences in the war zone.

With Bobby Harron, who had come along with them from New York, the Gishes departed for Los Angeles.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing company, has been appointed a member of the Advisory Board of the American Cinema Commission, whose purpose it will be to arrange for the circulation of motion pictures in Russia, France and Italy under the supervision of Commissioners Irwin, Powers and Marion. These pictures are intended for the entertainment of the soldiers at the front, and also for the general instruction of the public in France, Italy and Russia covering the industrial life of America.

Fred and Frank Schaefer are the owners of the New Crystal Theater, at North avenue and Washtenaw street, which was scheduled to open November 8. The location is in the busiest section of the northwest section of the city. The theater is part of a newly constructed building that comprises a modern lodge hall capable of seating 400 persons, and a dance floor that will accommodate 250 couples, six store rooms and twelve offices. The theater has 3,000 electric lights on its front and tower, and seats 2,000 persons. Thomas McKenzie is the manager of the theater.

All the members of the King-Bee Films Corporation, comedy makers, on their way to Hollywood stopped off in Chicago one day last week. During their stay they were entertained by the members of the Standard Films Corporation. Billy West and Arvid E. Gillstrom joined the party here. More than twenty persons were in the party, including Babe Hardy, Leo White, Ethel Gibson, Budd Ross, Fred Baine, Henry Bard, Susie Bard, Bennie Berk, Rex Taylor, Henry Obrock, Millie Burstein and Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Co.

War Tax Problems Continue Unsolved

PRODUCERS MAKE DECIDED STAND ON FIFTEEN-CENT ASSESSMENT

THE war tax situation took an interesting turn during the last week, and with the problems created by the fifteen cents per reel a day assessment still unsolved, the producers and exhibitors were deadlocked in firm stands on the question.

In a double page advertisement several individual producers in this week's MOTOGRAPHY set forth their views on the subject of the fifteen-cent levy. In a lengthy statement to the exhibitors of the country, Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, speaking for the exhibitors of the country, declared they would not pay the imposed tax. Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, in a statement made public from his office in the Times building, New York City, advised all members of the association to refuse to pay any distributor the demanded fifteen-cent tax.

Accountants Study Tax

The producers employed the accounting firm of Price, Waterhouse & Co. of New York to make an analysis of the cost of the footage tax assessed by the government against the film industry, and made public a letter by the accountants showing that the tax represents an outlay of sixteen cents a day for every reel of film produced.

P. A. Powers, paying a visit to Chicago one day last week, addressed the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and informed the members that there would be no way out of the payment of the fifteen cents tax by the exhibitors of the country.

Exhibitors Congratulate Mutual

The announcement by the Mutual Film Corporation that it would absorb the fifteen-cent tax resulted in a flood of letters and telegrams of congratulation and commendation from exhibitors all over the country. A number of resolutions adopted by branches of the Exhibitors' League and the American Exhibitors' Association were received by John R. Freuler, Mutual's president. The following are typical of the spirit of the communications:

Frank Rembusch, president of the American Exhibitors' Association of Indiana, and one of the best known exhibitors in the country, wrote Mr. Freuler:

"On the behalf of the American Exhibitors' Association of Indiana, let me compliment and express to you our gratification and appreciation of the stand the Mutual Film Corporation has taken with reference to the war film tax.

"The fact that you are going to absorb this tax of 15 cents a reel yourself and not charge it to the exhibitors, is evidence of your continued consideration and co-operative work with the exhibitors as it has always been in the past. The Mutual Film Corporation are eminently fair in their dealings and willing to go more than half way with the exhibitors.

"It is my belief that many exhibitors will appreciate your attitude by giving you preference in their booking. Let us hope so."

Philip Levy, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Montana, wrote:

"I wish to thank you in behalf of the Montana Exhibitors' League for the notice sent us regarding the war excise tax on films, as we have been annoyed by all film corporations that we have been doing business with in this state to pay fifteen cents per day tax on each and every reel exhibited in our houses. The directors at large on the league met yesterday and decided that under no circumstances will the Montana Exhibitors pay this war tax on films as we believe the taxation on our gross receipts of twenty per cent is heavy enough burden to carry in these war times. I therefore thank you kindly for the stand you have taken in this matter."

Ochs Says Refuse to Pay

President Ochs of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America addressed the following communication to the distributors of the United States:

"As the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and acting as the mouthpiece of the exhibitors of the country, I feel it my duty to advise you that the exhibitors of the United States will not submit to your arbitrary action of recent date, namely, the imposition of a charge of fifteen cents per day per reel on all film leased by you, as a means of providing revenue with which to meet the footage tax on film as provided in section six hundred of the War Revenue Tax Law.

"I base this opinion on the hundreds of telegrams and letters which I have received and upon the action of exhibitor organizations all over the country since the

Introducing Mr. C. W. Brennan

Mr. Charles W. Brennan this week becomes advertising manager of MOTOGRAPHY with headquarters in New York. He has taken charge of the offices in the Longacre Building.

Mr. Brennan is an advertising man of many years experience in newspaper, magazine and trade journal fields, and with a record of achievement that has given him the reputation of being a "live one" among advertising folk.

first brief, curt, mandatory, notes were sent out by your exchange managers advising exhibitors of your arbitrary action.

Exhibitors Are United

"It is only through careful study and consideration of the mass of material that has come to me on this subject that I have felt the necessity of transmitting to you that what in reality amounts to a consensus of opinion of the exhibitors of the United States on this vitally important subject. I will endeavor to present to you the various arguments that have been advanced as to why this tax should be paid by you and not by the exhibitor.

"In doing this I am acting merely as the mouthpiece of the exhibitors and take this means of pointing out to you that, if you persist in the attempt to collect this unjust charge, it will result in a period of strife and disharmony between distributor and exhibitor at a time when the interests of the industry, patriotism, and civilization, demand a united and coordinated body working in the closest co-operation and harmony.

Fail to Understand Attitude

"The exhibitors of the country cannot understand why you consider it necessary to gracefully slide out from under this tax and attempt to place it on their already overburdened shoulders. In many instances they call you slackers and other uncomplimentary names, insisting that your attempted action is unpatriotic, and an attempt on your part to shirk the burden which each and every business, each and every individual, must bear as their share of the hardships imposed by the war.

"You have made statements in your meetings and in your advertising to the effect that you cannot pay this tax out of your own pockets and remain in business.

Exhibitors' Pockets Not Overfull

"Do you think that the exhibitor is in any better condition to pay the tax out of his pocket and remain in business, or do you think that he can arbitrarily collect it from his patrons without sacrificing a large part of his business? If you do, you have little knowledge of the business of entertaining the public.

"And you must remember in this respect that congress also passed a law imposing an admission tax, and stated explicitly that this tax should be collected from the public. There is not this provision in the section of the law covering your tax. Do you think for a moment that the motion picture going public will cheerfully pay its own tax and yours too?

Ochs Compiles Figures

"It is by no means clear in the minds of exhibitors, although a statement often reiterated, that if you pay this tax you will be forced out of business. Let us, say for example that 30,000 feet of negative are used in taking the average five-reel feature. This would demand a tax of $75. Let us assume that the average feature uses forty prints. This would demand a tax of $1,500, a total of $1,575 for a five-reel feature. Do you mean to contend that it is impossible for you or your producers as business men to save the small sum of $1,575 in the production of a picture, a sum amounting to merely five and one-quarter per cent in a picture costing $30,000 and a much smaller percentage in a product of higher cost. The exhibitors of the country find it very hard to believe that such is the case.

"The statement has been made that this is a tax on film and not a tax on value or on production. Such may be the strict verbiage of the law, but it is a well known principle of taxation that the same object should not be taxed twice. The tax of one-quarter of a cent is a tax on film, but the exhibitors believe that in placing the tax of one-half cent on positives it was the intent of Congress that this should be a tax on production, and as such should be born by the producer, irrespective of the alleged statement of the President that the tax should be passed on.

"Because Congress in its ignorance of the motion picture business saw fit to pass a law, the meaning of which is subject to various interpretations, is no reason why the producer and distributor should seek to shift the burden.

"The exhibitors of the country believe that it is the patriotic duty of every producer and distributor of motion pictures to assume and pay this tax, and judging from the high prices which the exhibitors are called upon to pay for film, believe that the producers and distributors can well afford to pay it.

Exhibitors Unquestionably Patriotic

"The exhibitors point with pride to the fact that in every instance where they have been called upon to do something to aid the government they have responded willingly and enthusiastically. Much of the credit for the successful flotation of the first and second Liberty Loans is due to the motion picture exhibitors, who placed their screens at the disposal of the government.

"At present they are rendering great aid in the food conservation campaign of Mr. Hoover, and are materially aiding in all of the work which the Red Cross is calling upon them to do. They have lent their screens to the army and navy in the recruiting campaign, and are at present booking and paying for the picture put out by the Military Training Camp Association.

"They stand ready to lend their enthusiastic cooperation in the campaign for the flotation of the two billion dollar war savings certificate loan, which is to be launched in the near future under the direction of Frank A. Vanderlip. In fact they have responded whole-heartedly to every patriotic demand that has been made upon them in the past and will respond in like manner to every demand of like nature that is made upon them in the future.

None Dares Call Exhibitor Slacker

"No one dare accuse the motion picture exhibitor of being a slacker or failing to perform the full measure of his patriotic duty. It is their belief that the producer and distributor should likewise do their share.

"The exhibitors emphatically call the attention of the other two branches of the industry to the fact that they are already overburdened with taxes. They have been paying a war tax on seating capacity without protest ever since the war was first started. In addition to this they are paying both state and local taxes and all of the Federal taxes imposed by the present law. And all of this in addition to the increasing price of labor, materials and film. They believe that they are laboring under a heavy enough burden without assuming the tax laid upon the producer and distributor.

"It is their opinion that they should refuse to pay this charge of fifteen cents per day per reel because it is unjust in its method of application. They believe that the "average method" as worked out by the expert accountants employed by the distributors is unfair to everyone concerned, the producer, distributor and exhibitor.

"They cannot believe that the average life of an average picture is only fifty to fifty-five days, especially when they are booking pictures that are two and three years old.

"They point out that some concerns specializing almost entirely in feature pictures, the average life of which is ninety to one hundred days, are in reality making over one hundred per cent in the collection of this fifteen-cent charge, whereas the concerns having a large and varied product, including news weeklies, cartoons, scenics and short subjects generally, having a shorter life are amply protected.

Discriminations Against Small Exhibitor

"They believe the charge is unjust because it is discriminatory against the small exhibitor, forcing him to pay a high percentage of taxation, while the first-run man with the big house pays an infinitesmal percentage. In the case of the exhibitor renting a film at five dollars per feature, and their number is legion, he is forced to pay a tax of fifteen per cent, while an exhibitor renting a film at fifty dollars per feature only pays a tax of one and one-half per cent.

"This is a direct reversal of the cardinal principles of taxation. The injustice is readily apparent. If the distributors have as their object the driving out of business of the eighty per cent of the small houses of the country in favor of the twenty per cent of larger houses they have taken a sure method of achieving their object.

"The exhibitors from all parts of this country hotly resent the arbitrary manner in which the distributors sought to impose this fifteen-cent charge upon them. They believe that before any such action was taken representative exhibitors should have been called into consultation, and that any action contemplated should have been thoroughly explained to these representatives, that they should have been thoroughly convinced of its equity and justice and that before it was actually put into operation it should have been explained in detail to the exhibitors of the country.

Exhibitors Were Not Consulted

"As it was the distributors merely called in a firm of accountants, accepted their figures without even an examination of the books of their own individual companies, and then endeavored to force, arbitrarily, the fifteen-cent charge down the exhibitor's throat. Since that time only one concern has announced through the trade papers that if, upon examination of its books, this charge was found to be too high it would reduce it and refund the excess.

"The exhibitors are deeply stirred over the fact that when a body of them met with a sub-committee of the distributors, after the exhibitors had insisted that such a meeting and consultation be held, even the simple recommendations made at that meeting were not carried out by the main committee, which the sub-committee represented.

"It was proposed and agreed to at this meeting that the distributors as a body should submit to an examination of their books by a firm of accountants representing the exhibitors, with an idea of determining whether or not the distributors were merely collecting the tax due the government by means of this fifteen-cent charge or whether or not there was an excess.

Reduction and Refund Promised

"This sub-committee also agreed that should such a reputable firm of accountants discover that the fifteen-cent charge was in excess of the actual tax due the government, the distributors would reduce the charge and refund the excess.

"Since the meeting of this sub-committee over a week ago, which promised instantaneous action on these two propositions, the exhibitors have had no word or communication from the distributors on these two very important propositions. This has only served to increase the belief in the minds of the exhibitors that the fifteen-cent charge is exorbitant, and they look with suspicion upon any concern that seeks, arbitrarily, to promulgate such a policy and refuses to consent to a verification of its accuracy.

More Equitable Way Can Be Found

"The exhibitors believe, granting for the sake of argument that it was impossible for the distributors to pay this tax and remain in business, and that he was forced to pass it on to the exhibitor, that a more just and equitable way could have been found of apportioning it, instead of displaying the crass fear of the big first-run theater, which is manifest in the method they adopted.

"They are deeply incensed over the fact that when a simple, direct method of apportioning this tax was presented the distributors absolutely refused to consider it, taking the stand that they had decided on their course of procedure and would not change.

"This method is what might be called the percentage method to distinguish it from the average method insisted upon by the distributors. It is a simple and direct application, places no burden on the small exhibitor and entails no elaborate bookkeeping. Each and every distributor knows the gross amount of the tax, which he is called upon to pay each week.

"He also knows the amount of his gross business for the week. It is a simple act of calculation to determine the percentage which his gross tax bears to his gross business. All that is necessary for him to do to collect the tax is to add that percentage to the price of film.

Must Live Up to Contracts

"Those exhibitors having contracts made subsequently to May 9, 1917, which contain no clause providing for the collection of a tax, feel, that as the distributors and producers have sought every loophole of the law and also the alleged statement of the President, to evade and stand from under the burden that has been placed upon them, that as exhibitors they can do no more than stand on the exact provisions of the law and refuse to pay the tax.

"The exhibitors call your attention to the fact that many of your exchanges are endeavoring to collect the tax on pictures that were released prior to October 4, 1917, the day on which the law went into effect. This, in their opinion, is nothing more or less than an attempt to collect money under false pretenses, as you, as distributors or producers are not compelled to pay a tax on such pictures.

"Commissioner of Internal Revenue Rover has ruled that the tax should be paid only once when film was sold or leased from the day the law went into effect. All film released prior to October 4 was sold or leased by the producer to the distributor and as such is not subject to taxation.

"William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has pleaded time after time for a united industry, in order that every ounce of the enormous power of the motion picture may be exerted in aid of the government, in aid of democracy, and in aid of civilization. He has repeatedly excoriated exhibitors for the friction that has developed among themselves. And now, at a time when that friction shows signs of being eliminated, you, in a highly arbitrary manner, presume to promulgate a policy that will breed distrust, discontent, disharmony and certain friction.

"As high-minded gentlemen working for the best interests of the industry as a whole, I appeal to you in the name of the exhibitors of the United States to give up this attempt to slide from under the burden which has been placed upon you.

"Trusting that you will receive this communication in the spirit in which it is written, I beg to remain,

"Yours most sincerely,

"(Signed) LEE A. OCHS."

The accounting firm of Price, Waterhouse and Company made the following report on its investigation into the footage tax to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry

"1. The tax will be imposed only on film released after October 4, 1917.

"2. The tax—one-half cent per foot—Sec. 600 D—will be paid only once on each print, not paid each time the print is leased.

"Upon this basis the cost would be nearly nine-tenths cent per foot of released positive, the taxes being one-half cent on released prints, one-fourth cent on raw stock including waste and prints not released, together with one-fourth cent on negative raw film, none of which is leased.

"Section 1007 provides that where contracts are made prior to May 9, 1917, the film owner may collect the tax from the lessee. We understand that you have agreed that the manufacturer or producer must in some way make a charge to the lessee to cover this footage tax. This can be done in several ways, some of which are as follows:

"1. Collect the whole tax from the exhibitor who first leases a print. This would be easy for the manufacturer but unjust to the exhibitor. If the latter happened to get a new copy he would pay the whole tax. Sec. 1007 of the law cited, however, seems to contemplate just this method.

"2. Division of the tax among the successive lessees of a print. Unfortunately no one can tell in advance how many times a given print will be leased; the accounting would be burdensome; the plan is not easily worked.

"3. An average charge on all film leased; the charge to be sufficient to reimburse the manufacturer for taxes paid.

"Plan No. 1 is too unjust for serious thought.

"Plan No. 2 is theoretically correct, but the work it would entail would double the total cost of the tax. It would offer special difficulty in the case of replacements of reels or parts of reels, because such replacements if made after October 1, 1917, would pay footage tax. You would have the anomaly of subjects, some copies of which were not taxed, some partly and some wholly taxable.

"Upon the whole the third method appears to be best. If adopted, the charge to exhibitors would take the form of an addition to the rental of a fixed amount per reel per day, the amount being computed as follows:

"Cost (per reel) of taxes—approximately $3.75.

"Number of rental days earned by each print per estimate furnished to us and according to the best information we can obtain—average 50.

"Cost of tax per rental day, per reel—16 cents.

"So far as we can ascertain the average of rental days given above is reasonable.

"The charge would apply on all film, old or new; the manufacturer pays the full tax upon release, and the charge would have to be applied on all film to reimburse the manufacturer's outlay. On the other hand, upon the repeal of the law the charge should cease immediately, although there would then be much film in use on which tax had been paid.

"Even this plan would entail much additional clerical work. The number of tax items would be the same as the number of entries of film rentals, the individual amounts being very small.

"Yours very truly,

"PRICE, WATERHOUSE & COMPANY."

The people upon whom are loaded all war tax seem to be perfectly willing to pay for their amusement in the popular priced theatetrs. Managers of the $2.00 theaters complain that business is not as good as it has been. Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, explains the case in this manner: The people who patronize the $2.00 plays are the men and women of big income. The stock market and large taxes on incomes have caused this class of people to retrench, while the common people earning salaries are only too glad to help the country, and in the low priced vaudeville theaters, the salaried man gets more than his money's worth.

Brady Will Visit Chicago

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, along with a dozen or more prominent eastern film men, will be in Chicago on November 19 and 20, when public hearings will be held on the proposed new picture censorship measure for the city. The ordinance changing Chicago's present faulty method of censoring films was introduced in the city council of that city by Alderman Steffen. The coming of President Brady and his associates, it is believed, will add considerable weight to the arguments already prepared by friends of the proposed ordinance.

On arriving here, President Brady will address at a luncheon all the four-minute men who have been working in Chicago, addressing motion picture audiences. At a dinner on November 19, he and the eastern men who accompany him will be guests of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The censorship hearing will be held on the following day.

Henry Ford Joins Music Crusade

Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer, has taken a stand against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and has announced that his band will not play any music on which the society demands a tribute. Mr. Ford was led to take this attitude by John H. Kunsky, head of the moving picture enterprises in Detroit that bears his name.

The Film Tax—A Question of Accounting

AN argument in display type which we are printing at the request of the producing companies who sign it, declares that the film stock war tax costs the producers sixteen cents a day for every film in active service. This in extenuation, of course, of the fifteen cent per day tax which these same producers propose adding to film rentals.

Here is a discrepancy in cost figures as between the producer and the consumer—not the first time that a difference of that kind has arisen in industry. The president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, as related last week, figures the cost per reel-day at seven and a half cents; the producers' auditors figure it at sixteen cents. The discord of calculations carries the situation beyond the possibility of outside mediation.

It should not be very difficult, as between the two extremies of seven and one-half and sixteen cents, to locate an approximately correct figure. However, if the discrepancy persists, it is an added argument for distributing the tax charge as transportation and other overhead expense items are distributed. There is really no more reason for making the tax charge a separate item on the invoice than there would be for the item of electric light or water. But because it is a new charge, not contemplated in previous cost budgets and prices, the line of least resistance seems to be to pass it on in its primitive shape.

We question if this be indeed the line of least resistance. It seems possible, if not probable, that considerable opposition may develop among exhibitors to the segregration of this tax claim from the service charge. We say this not in defense of such opposition, but because it exists, and ignoring it will serve little purpose.

As we have said before, no reasonable exhibitor thinks to avoid payment of this tax. The last link in the merchandising chain always pays everything. That is the only condition on which merchandising can exist. The last link, of course, is the public; but the public is outside of the trade circle. So far as the trade is concerned, the exhibitor is the last link, and he pays the tax. If he is a good business man, he knows he pays the tax, and that he must pay it and all other cost items, or he will disrupt the industry.

But it is that very fact, that he must and does pay all cost items anyway, that makes him resent the idea of listing one of them separately (just because it is a new one) and burying all the others in the service charge.

If it were known that the film tax was a six months affair, to be discontinued at some sudden, indefinite and early date, there might be good bookkeeping reasons for itemizing it as an extra charge.

But there is nothing to bear out that theory. The tax is likely to be there for a number of years, as a fixed and established part of production cost.

Viewed in that light, it takes its place alongside of real estate taxes and corporation taxes —none of which appears on the exhibitors' bill as an item, yet for all of which the exhibitor pays.

The nub of the whole argument is that if the tax item is properly accounted for, it does not make a cent's worth of difference in the end whether it is charged as an extra or buried. Charging it as an extra is the easier, but it may not be the better way.

The American Picture Mission to Russia

BECAUSE of an apparent misunderstanding between representatives of the government and representatives of the film industry, the project of sending an American motion picture mission to Russia is facing serious delay and embarrassment. The way in which the present situation evolved may be read in the correspondence between the principals, an abstract of which is presented a few pages over. The record relieves us of the necessity of commenting on causes, but we feel that there is still something to be said to the trade at large on the importance of the plan itself.

It should be thoroughly understood in the first place that the purpose of the mission is not in any sense industrial or commercial. Any trade advantage which might accrue would be incidental, unexpected and immaterial. The function of an American motion picture mission to Russia would be wholly patriotic—and more than patriotic. It would be the first adventure of the picture in international diplomacy; its first opportunity to turn the movement of the world.

We who are associated with the motion picture perhaps are prejudiced for it; yet reason itself bears out our sanguine view. Our prejudice is not so much for our art as against any detraction of it which our logic tells us is futile. The simple fact that it is the only universal language guarantees its international power.

Universality in language generally means merely comprehensibility to all races of men. With the motion picture it means much more than that. It means comprehensibility as well to all classes of men—the most ignorant as well as the most erudite; the most stupid as well as the most alert; the most suspicious as well as the most credulous. The picture carries everywhere its own explanation, its own proof of veracity.

The weakness of Russia's hundred and eighty millions is ignorance and credulity; ignorance of what the rest of the world is doing, credulity in the reception of treacherous propaganda. The power of printer's ink turns to water among a people who do not read, and the spoken word, if it be not overwhelmed by its gigantic task, falls before suspicion of its genuineness and the competition of opposing testimony just as cleverly delivered.

The wrong of Russia's huge bulk lies in the fact that when we speak of Russia, or read of Russia, we are dealing with less, probably, than five per cent of Russia. The revolution itself is scarcely more than a rumor to the great body of the people. Just now the bolsheviki is in power—or was this morning. The majority of Russia does not know there is a bolsheviki or what it is. Why doubt that the Russian people are loyal to Russia and to Russia's allies?

The motion picture confronts a sublime task. It is the only agent of intelligence that can redeem the forces behind the northern battle front. There is no need here to tell what that means in measures of war-years and of American, British, French and Italian lives.

We must not say that the American motion picture mission to Russia is the most important of America's diplomatic activities; but we do believe it tremendously potent, and needed at once. It is a task for only the biggest men in the industry, and those who volunteer for the work should have, it seems to us, practically carte blanche in all respects.

We suggest, most respectfully, that occassion be made as soon as possible for the leaders of the industry and the men of the government department, working together, to untie or cut the knots that are retarding progress and get the picture mission into service.

Recompense for Government Publicity

IN England the picture theater trade just now is discussing the question of payment for government publicity. As in this country, the exhibitors have given their screens freely for government propaganda; for recruiting men, for raising money, for the aid of charities and ambulance funds, for all the unusual activities of a nation at war. And, also as here, the way of the exhibitor is becoming harder and his taxes higher every year.

When the United States has been at war for three years, our own situation may need some adjustment. But we are confident that no American theater man at this time has any thought of asking pay for his assistance to the nation, valuable as everyone knows it is. The exhibitors are glad that their profession gives them more opportunity than others to be helpful. They know that not the least of their functions, as instructors of the people, is to uphold patriotism by their own example. That is its own recompense.

Barter Quits Films to Assist Government

Technical Director at Culver City Plant Accepts Call to Place on Shipbuilding Corporation

RECOGNITION as one of the foremost constructing engineers in the country has come to H. H. Barter, engineering and technical director of the Triangle Film Corporation's large producing plant at Culver City, Cal., in the form of a call to a responsible executive position in the American International Shipbuilding Corporation of Philadelphia, active agent for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. Mr. Barter's acceptance of the position marks another instance where the necessity of the nation has brought forward the motion picture business as a ranking industry whose close co-operation with the government is proving invaluable.

Mr. Barter's departure from Triangle is in the nature of a response to an emergency summons from Washington. At the present time the shipbuilding corporation is undertaking a tremendous enterprise for the allied cause, and is enlisting the services of the ablest technical experts in every engineering line. For seven years Mr. Barter was a member of the technical staff of Stone and Webster, a prominent Boston firm of constructing engineers, and while thus employed he had charge of the development of several large waterpower projects in the states of Washington and Nevada.

He is a graduate of the University of Illinois, and began his professional career in Springfield, Ill., with the mechanical department of the Racine-Sattley Manufacturing Corporation. During the beginning of the railroad extension activity in the northwest, he went to Seattle, Wash., and was afterward sent to Alaska to build the Seward Peninsula railway.

When the Panama-California Exposition opened at San Diego, Cal., in 1915, Mr. Barter became chief electrical engineer of the exposition and later director of works. H. C. Davis, now vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, was director-general of the exposition, and through his influence Barter was persuaded to enter the motion picture production field. The two men have been associated in the industry for several years, lately with Triangle.

Accompanied by his wife and two children, Mr. Barter will leave Culver City immediately for Philadelphia. He has not yet been informed of his ultimate destination, and for obvious reasons his future headquarters will be unknown. He expects to be engaged in the government work for at least two years, at the end of which time, or when the termination of the war makes it possible, he expects to return to his work at Triangle. Mr. Barter is a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and an associate member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

The appointee who will take over Mr. Barter's work has not yet been announced. The $500,000 building campaign at Culver City, which is increasing the area of the Triangle plant to twenty-six acres, and includes a closed comedy stage 304 by 80 feet, now nearing completion, and two new glass and concrete drama stages, costing $50,000 each; a scene dock, a three-story concrete electric power plant, a camera vault with locker and accommodations for twenty-five cameramen and their assistants, and a branch office building for the engineering and production staff, beside the enlargement of the dressing room building to accommodate 600 players, all of which Mr. Barter has been directing, will be continued for the present under the personal supervision of Mr. Davis.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

Sunday Shows Prohibited

Sunday moving picture shows in Cleveland are put under the ban by an order issued by the court of appeals. Under the ruling William Standen, of Medina, is ordered to pay a fine for operating his theater illegally on Sunday. Judge Lieghley, writing the court's opinion, held that a moving picture show must be classed as a theatrical or dramatic performance, which is prohibited on the first day of the week. Enforcement of the law, the court declared, is up to the police.

"It is true," said the judge in handing down the opinion, "that this law was written thirty years before moving pictures were ever dreamed of, but the legislature made no mention of moving pictures when the law was amended to permit Sunday baseball games."

Owners Object to City Tax

Motion picture theater owners of Mount Carmel, Ill., have made a vigorous protest against the municipal tax law of that city. Under the law every theater must pay a city tax of 20 cents a day. If more than 20 cents admission is charged, each house will be compelled to pay $1 daily license fee into the coffers of the municipality. Theater managers who are advancing their admissions from 20 to 22 cents to meet the federal war tax are making themselves liable for a 500 per cent increase in their city tax.

Dallas Will Pay $60,000

Robert H. Campbell, secretary of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, has estimated that the moving picture theaters of Dallas will turn over to the government $60,000 in admission war tax within the next year.

Little Theater is Opened

Seattle, Wash., now has a unique amusement house in the Little Theater, at 416 Pike street, which was opened recently. The theater is for moving pictures, exclusively, and it is patterned after the Little Theater of New York City. The decorations are expensive and in keeping with the high class house of entertainment which John Hamrick, its owner, pledges to give his patrons. The comfort of the theater's guests is a matter that has been given minute attention. Mr. Hamrick was deluged with floral gifts on the day of the opening.

Women Four-Minute Speakers

Women have been added to the four-minute speakers appearing in the moving picture theaters of St. Louis, Mo. E. M. Grossman, state chairman for Missouri of the four-minute men, accepted their services and assigned more than a score of them to different theaters in the city. They were well received, and as the result of their appeals, hundreds of food conservation pledges were signed.

Manager Goes to War

Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick Theater in Minneapolis, has arranged his business so he can leave to join the national army on short notice. He has received notice that his services may be required within a few days.

Baseball Magnate Builds Theater

Charles W. Murphy, formerly owner of the Chicago National League baseball club, is building a $150,000 moving picture theater in his old home town of Wilmington, O. The theater will be opened on the night of December 30 with war pictures. Half the proceeds of the first night will go to the Red Cross. The theater will be operated by Frank and Jim Murphy, brothers of the owner. Mr. Murphy hopes to have Governor Cox attend the opening. The theater will be named the Clinton.

More Taxes for Theater Owners

Plans are under way in Little Rock, Ark., to find some new way to tax the moving picture theaters in that county. Judge Lee Miles, of the county court, has ordered a canvass of theater audiences by a force of deputy sheriffs to get a line on how much money the theaters take in, so he can arrange a new system of county license that will bring more revenue to the county.

Seeks Relief in Court

The Stanley Theatrical Company of Pottsville, Pa., has obtained an injunction against Phillip Brenneman, preventing him from interfering with their management of the American moving picture theater. Brenneman owns the theater and the Stanley company leases it. The Stanley company charged that Brenneman interfered with their attempts to install John Delmar as cashier and Charles Hausman as manager.

Barbara Castleton and Bert Lytell are co-stars in Herbert Brenon's forthcoming "Empty Pockets."

Opens New Playhouse

J. Walter Lowenhaupt and E. McCreery Donehoo have reopened the Strand Theater in Washington, Pa. The house is newly decorated and a large pipe organ is included in its new equipment. The Strand will show only high class attractions, according to the management, who announced that the annual rentals of the theater will amount to $30,000. Each feature booked will be run for two days.

Making Theaters Safe

James E. Marvin, fire warden of Kansas City, Mo., is making an inspection of every moving picture theater in that city, with a view to safeguarding audiences against fire. The general inspection was ordered by Fire Chief John C. Egner following the discovery that a small theater was operating without proper exit equipment. The house was permitted to reopen after changes had been made that complied with the law.

Clover Is New Manager

Emery Clover has become the manager of the new Turner and Dahnken theater, in Oakland, Cal. Mr. Clover formerly lived in Oakland, and is popular with the theater-going public of that city. For many years he has managed T. & D. enterprises in Alameda, San Jose, San Francisco, Berkeley, Oakland and Sacramento.

Buys Plaza Theater

Tax Is $500 Daily

Statistics compiled by the amusement interests of Erie, Pa., have figured that the war tax assessments that will be levied on motion picture and legitimate theaters will amount to $500 a day.

Theater Costs $100,000

One hundred thousand dollars is the architects' estimate of the cost of the proposed new motion picture theater to be erected for Miller Brothers in Los Angeles. Construction work will start shortly.

Disease Closes Show Houses

On order of Dr. E. A. Johnston, city health physician of Helena, Mont., all moving picture theaters in the city were closed recently as a step in the health department's crusade against scarlet fever. No public gatherings of any kind were permitted for several days.

New Theater Will Cost $50,000

The Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company, owners of a string of theaters in Michigan, have purchased property in Cadillac, Mich., and begun construction of a $50,000 moving picture theater.

Postmaster Buys Theater

Sam Mullen, formerly postmaster of Ozark, Ark., has bought the Joyland Theater of J. H. Mackey.

Cowboy Star Admits His Birthday—"Chapped"

Roy Stewart, cowboy star, made a fatal mistake while working in his most recent picture. "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," at the Triangle's big ranch studio at Hartville. Between scenes Stewart suddenly realized that it was his birthday and made the mistake of thinking out loud. One of the punchers employed on the ranch overheard the star's soliloquy and the cowboys quickly planned and executed a "surprise party," one of the real old-fashioned kind which were common on the range. Without warning they "chapped" the husky Stewart. This sounds harmless enough until one learns that it consists of binding the victim over a barrel and then applying a painful number of leather "chaps" to the most handy part of his anatomy.

"When I reached home I found myself 'branded' with everything from horseshoes to stars," said Stewart.

"Over Here" Is Replete with Action

Patriotic Subject Shows Actual Building of One of Uncle Sam's Army Cantonments

"OVER HERE" is the title of an exceptionally timely and unusual motion picture of contemporary patriotic interest about to be distributed by the World Film Corporation. This picture, which is in two reels, shows the building of one of the great United States army cantonments, from an actual wilderness to a city housing 40,000 troops, in a period of only fifty-two days' time.

This does not mean merely throwing so many frail wooden buildings together, but making a complete, up-to-date city with water, light and sanitary systems, breaking every construction record and ready for occupation on the specified time.

In the course of the 2,000 feet of film employed in illustrating the progress of this story, one huge building to hold an entire company is put together by 450 workmen in precisely two hours and forty-five minutes, and later, three other similar structures are completed as an intentionally record performance in thirty-eight minutes.

Some of the accomplishments shown in this photographic narrative are the building of more than four miles of railroad in two weeks; the construction of a water pipe twenty-seven miles long, crossing one large river and a range of high hills; the grading and laying out of modern streets covering a tract of 6,000 acres of woodland; the operation of huge power tractors and thousands of mule teams and automobile trucks, and huge bodies of skilled and unskilled laborers, all working at top speed and under such control as to give a machine-like precision to every move.

"Over Here" is an official picture showing Camp Pike, situated in Arkansas, not far from Little Rock. The commercial body of this city bought the land for the cantonment and presented it to the War Department, and then had the present moving picture made to record the progress of a wholly remarkable achievement in cantonment construction.

Extends Organization Into Canada

THE Herbert Brenon Film Corporation is opening a Canadian Branch of the organization in Canada—of which Chandos Brenon, of Montreal, brother of the producer, will be in charge. Chandos Brenon made a hurried trip to New York last week, to make the final plans for the opening of the Canadian offices, arrangements for which have been pending for some time. Mr. Brenon will have his headquarters in Montreal, and will have complete charge of the exploitation of Brenon pictures in Canada.

Chandos Brenon is widely known in the film world of Canada, having been the Canadian representative of several big American moving picture concerns in that territory. He is thoroughly familiar with every angle of the film business, and is responsible for many big deals that have been accomplished between producers in this country and exhibitors in Canada. He is also very well known in newspaper circles, having devoted many years of his life to newspaper work, both in eastern and western Canada.

Mr. Brenon's first report from the headquarters in Montreal concerned the success of Herbert Brenon's recent production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs." In a recent letter he spoke of the enthusiasm with which it was received in that territory. It has been booked at all the leading theaters, he says, opening at the St. Regis last week.

Margaret Mayo Disproves False Theories

Appears Before Century Theater Club as Example of What Women Are Not Believed Capable of Doing

THE CENTURY THEATER CLUB, for the first time in its fifteen years of existence, recently turned over its monthly social meeting to the consideration of the play and the screen. It selected the Goldwyn organization to present its ideas to the members.

Margaret Mayo, chosen as the most notable figure operating today in screen productions, was introduced by Edith Ellis, head of the Goldwyn literary department, who was one of the three founders of the Century Theater Club. In introducing Miss Mayo to 700 women, Miss Ellis emphasized the fact that to her mind Miss Mayo stands for something more than merely a renowned artist. She called her the perfect symbol of the woman in evolution.

"Throughout the ages three things have been marked up against women," said Miss Ellis; "one is that they are not fair in business; another that they have not the staying power to endure physical strain; and the third, that they lack the power of vision."

Upsets Opinions of Women

Miss Ellis dwelt in some length upon the qualities of Miss Mayo which have completely upset the set opinions regarding women.

"Miss Mayo's fairness of judgment," she said, "her freedom from prejudice in dealing with both men and women, has become an axiom in the theatrical and film world.

"In the Goldwyn studio, where hundreds of men are at work in various departments Miss Mayo's capacity for seeing things through has become a grim joke. If it is necessary, her motor stands in front of the studio all night while she reviews film, cuts, fills in, edits and revises in order to meet the demand for her product on the following day. This seemingly delicate physique must be made of Toledo steel to withstand the demands for sleep and food and rest. I doubt if the soldiers in the trenches have any greater resources of vitality than Miss Mayo.

"The third count—that women have not the universal vision in art—was long ago disposed of by Miss Mayo in the absolutely universal quality of her writing. It would be impossible to say, if one did not see the author's name, whether her plays were written by a man or woman.

"Added to this is Miss Mayo's sensitive woman's nature she is bringing into the studio world the delicate sensibilities of her sex, the understanding that is intuitive as well as intellectual."

Producers Try to Make the Best

Miss Mayo spoke warmly on the need of co-operation among the workers in the studio, and the great help she had thus received in her attempt to make her own pictures more human, more in line with the best of artistic endeavor in other art fields.

"The producers," she said, "who never know until a film has passed out of their hands into the exhibitors' whether the public will be with them or not, are doing their best to make the picture a definite and distinct thing apart from the drama.

"The moving picture is a wonderful and beautiful substitute for the lecture platform, a hidden love story, a tale of adventure, a creation awakening the larger sympathies and understandings."

Before Miss Mayo made way for the showing of her picture, "Baby Mine," she appealed to the members of the Century Club to take the photoplay world more seriously and to help in every possible way to make the films not only wholesome entertainment but a field for the highest ideals in sympathy with the creation of a great co-operative world of art and living in the time when the great world conflict is over.

Use Unique Ad Plan

The Avenue and the Royal theaters in Cincinnati report that they used with success an unusual advertising plan in connection with "Who Is Number One?" Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford. These theaters advertised that they would present a pass for "Who Is Number One?" to the "Number one employee" in all Cincinnati's largest stores and to the "Number ones" in the police and fire departments and to conductors and motormen. The "number ones," persons who were so designated on the pay rolls or time clocks, applied at the theaters and were given their tickets.

The plan worked out well and caused much discussion of the picture. A majority of the "number ones" took advantage of the free ticket and brought their families and friends along.

"Treasure Island" To Be Filmed

Robert Louis Stevenson's Story Will Be Another Fox Offering During Month of November

WILLIAM FOX announces that "Treasure Island," the third of the new series of pictures featuring Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, will be released November 18.

The picture is based on the Robert Louis Stevenson classic, which has endeared itself to millions of people in all parts of the world, and is reported to be the same sort of elaborate production as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp." The directors, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, have laid considerable more emphasis on humor than in the previous pictures.

"Treasure Island" was published in book form in November, 1883. The novel was Stevenson's first great success. It was brought to the attention of the English public by Young Folks, a magazine, which ran it serially, crediting it to "Captain George North." The author received only $500 for the rights to the story, but subsequently this total was increased to $9,500.

The story was the outgrowth of Stevenson's attempt to entertain his stepson, Lloyd Osbourne. For the boy's edification one stormy day, he drew a map of an imaginary island, which he labeled "Treasure Island." He peopled this island with characters who later took life in his book, and almost without realizing it, the story was outlined as it was subsequently published.

It was a success from the first and has maintained its high place in English literature, being included in every important list of recommended readings since compiled. Statesmen, jurists, the clergy, men of letters—the chief figures in scores of professions—have paid their tribute to the novel. Gladstone, on finding a copy of the book at a friend's house, forgot Great Britain and diplomacy long enough to complete the absorbing story.

William Fox is strong for youthful players. That they justify his attitude is apparent from his success with pictures in which the Fox Kiddies appear. This scene is from "Treasure Island," adapted from Robert Louis Stevenson's famous novel.

Irwin Declines Russian Film Mission

General Manager of Vitagraph Turns Down Government Offer, Asserting Washington Influence Would Hinder

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of Greater Vitagraph, has declined the government's request that he go to Russia and spread among the people of that benighted country the United States doctrine of democracy. It was the national administration's wish that Mr. Irwin go to the troubled republic with specially made moving pictures intended to teach the people of Russia through the medium of the screen, the activity of this government in the war, and to win for the allied cause a more united support.

The action of Mr. Irwin, as explained in a lengthy letter to George W. Creel, head of the committee on public information, was prompted by the belief that influences in Washington, to which he would be responsible would greatly handicap his efforts and contribute to the failure of his mission. Mr. Irwin's letter in part follows:

"October 29, 1917.

"Hon George Creel, Chairman,
"Committee on Public Information,
"Washington, D. C.

"My Dear Mr. Creel:

"Your favor of October 24th was duly received.

"When five or six representatives of the Motion Picture Industry, including myself, conferred with you at your office in Washington about September 18th, you stated in effect, that innumerable German agents, together with from twelve to fifteen thousand people who had left this country or were deported from it, were spreading the propaganda among the Russian people and troops, that this country is not in fact a democracy, but on the contrary, is an autocracy of wealth, with autocratic principles equal to those of Germany; that accordingly, the United States is devoid of justice; that it is not preparing for war, nor has it any intention of participating actively as an Ally, for its entrance into the war is a mere bluff; that this country does not intend to assist Russia either to win the war or to establish herself as a democracy, and that these false preachments were partly responsible for the demoralization of the Russian army; that in the judgment of the Government, the wide exhibition of motion pictures demonstrating that this country is a democracy, and showing the social and economic results obtained under a democratic form of government, and the preparedness of this country to actively participate in the war until its successful conclusion, such pictures as our troops in the French trenches, our tremendous training camps in this country, our great aeroplane fields and factories, our schools and school children, our factories and industries, the life of our workmen and the conditions under which they work, the kind of homes they occupy, clean rooms, clean clothes, the President walking at the head of the parade of those drawn by conscription, the parade of the Red Cross nurses, the great western farms with the farming done by machinery, munition factories, big railroad stations, tall buildings, cattle herds, chicken farms, with incubators, railroads running through mountains, the railroad crossing Salt Lake at Lucin Cut-off, big bridges, etc., would be a most effective medium of counteracting the propaganda of our enemies, by educating the Russian people and troops as to the real facts of our democracy, the results to the people obtained under a democratic form of government, and of our gigantic preparations to make democracy safe; and thereby so increase the morale of the Russian people and troops, as to cause the latter to remain in the trenches, and thus prevent the transfer of the Germans from the Eastern front to the Western front; that if this result could be obtained through the motion picture, it would not only mean the shortening of the war and the saving of hundreds of thousands of lives, but the saving of the lives of tens of thousands of American boys, in fact, that the educational motion picture by aiding in keeping the Russian troops in the trenches, would be an important factor in assuring victory, and likewise would be a decided influence in enabling Russia to more quickly become a stable republic after the war; and that the government desired the motion picture industry to recommend a competent man to establish in Russia an organization for the distribution of these pictures, as well as a man for each of the countries of France and Italy to undertake work along similar lines.

"From the moment that this country entered into the war, I think there is hardly a man who has not felt every time he met another in khaki, that he would like to find a way to do his 'bit,' and who has not been turning over in his mind the question as to how he can actively support the President, and thus do his part not only for the American people, but in the cause of democracy.

"In my own case, I am too old to be a private, and am likewise too old for a commission as a lieutenant, and could not hope to be a captain without a very long period of study and training. Therefore, I was troubled because at a loss to know what I could do. But from the moment I listened to your recital, I realized that here was a splendid work in which I was thoroughly competent, just as much as I would be for an officership, had I graduated from West Point or Annapolis, and that accordingly, I had no right to consider my family, my personal responsibilities, or my business, or permit these factors to influence me in not undertaking a work which I knew I could accomplish to the fullest extent possible under the conditions existing in Russia; in other words, obtain the exhibition of educational motion picture subjects to the largest possible percentage of the Russian public and to all of the Russian troops within the shortest possible space of time.

"The endeavor to make the motion picture a factor in the saving of the lives of thousands of American boys by exhibiting to the largest percentage of the Russian public and to all of the Russian troops within the shortest period of time, in other words, by getting the largest percentage of the people to thinking upon the subject at the same time, involves a tremendous responsibility to the cause of democracy, to the support of the President, and to the American people. Even now, the Italian lines are being crushed by the Germans withdrawn from the Eastern front.

"However, you say in your favor of October 24th, that Mr. E. G. Sisson 'will be the absolute authority,' and that 'all expenditures before being incurred must receive his approval.'

"It is to be assumed that the recommendation by the Motion Picture Industry of me as the proper person to undertake this work in Russia, means that by training and experience, I am an expert, qualified to form the best judgment to accomplish the end under the conditions as I find them, and likewise fully qualified to accomplish the execution of the plan determined upon. It is also to be assumed that Mr. Sisson, who is an accountant, who knows nothing about the motion picture business, and who has never undertaken the execution of a business plan of this kind, is not as well qualified to exercise judgment or to dictate its administration.

"Yet, in the final analysis, it would be Mr. Sisson's judgment which would control, for at all times, he would be privileged to exercise the power of veto, so that in reality, I could carry out no plans without keeping in close touch with him and using the time and energy of explaining them to him and convincing him; instead of meeting conditions as they arose; and at all times, would be subject to his approval either of execution or of expenditures involved.

"To thus jeopardize the cause of democracy by placing this work under the authority and control of one incompetent by training or experience to judge or to execute, would in my judgment be unpatriotic.

"I and my associates would at times be several thousand miles away from Mr. Sisson, and therefore unable to properly explain to him, or if necessary, convince him of the desirability or necessity of certain expenditures or procedure, or may be, unable to communicate with him at all.

"Such conditions would be both impracticable and intolerable in the interest of the results to be attained.

"With regard to receiving an appointment by the President, I beg to refresh your recollection upon our conversation at your office, the morning of September 18, in which you stated, in reply to questions, that the executives would be responsible solely to the President; that all expenditures would be paid from the Presidential Emergency Fund, and that we would be under the full responsibility of establishing a distribution organization in the respective countries to which we would be sent, and in executing the work of distribution.

"This Mr. Brady confirmed by assuring us that we would be appointed for the work by the President. Moreover, my understanding from you was, that the pictures to be exhibited in these foreign countries, were to be presented as the pictures sent by the United States Government.

"As to the matter of salary, this item can be entirely eliminated as far as I am concerned, and I have no doubt that this statement applies as well to Mr. Powers and Mr. Marian. The $5,000 per year, as you know, was considered for the purpose of partly covering personal expenses. With most necessary articles practically unobtainable, and with the price of those that are obtainable, advanced from several hundred to several thousands of per cent, and with the necessity of the American Unit to take with it even stable articles of food, such as flour, tea and coffee, it is reasonable to assume that my personal expenses for which in traveling about Russia, I could not always account to the Government by voucher, would several times exceed the amount of my compensation. As I explained to you, I looked upon this item merely as one which would partially cover expenses out of my own pocket.

"As to being given supreme power in Russia to conduct the business at hand, and to direct the expenditures necessary to produce the quickest and best results, such authority would follow as a matter of course, otherwise no competent man could undertake the work.

"As I explained to you, I would only attempt to handle the matter in a big way, fully consistent with the presentation by the United States Government, and with getting the largest percentage of people to thinking upon the same subject at the same time; and I assume that the Government would want me to conduct its business in just such a manner, for my observation is that governments at war make all expenditures necessary to produce all possible influences in the winning of the war, whether such influences be large or small.

"If the Government desires me to undertake this work in a manner that will mean success, I shall be only too happy to do so; if it does not desire me so to do, I will be very greatly disappointed, in not being able to do my 'bit.' But as a patriot, I feel that it would not be the part of good conscience for me to undertake a work involving such splendid possibilities under conditions which, in my judgment, would make for failure.

"Sincerely,
"Walter W. Irwin."

Mr. Creel in his reply to this letter accepted Mr. Irwin's resignation and expressed regret that the government will be deprived of his services in this matter. Answering this letter of acceptance Mr. Irwin said: "If anything new arises in which I can be of service, I beg of you to call upon me with the assurance of my eagerness to be of assistance."

Mr. Roberts is ready to leave for France at any time.

Lee Kiddies Have Specially Equipped Studio

WHEN recently, through General Manager Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation it was announced that hereafter Jane and Katherine Lee, the "Baby Grand" stars, would be starred in Fox Standard Pictures, there was set aside for them a special studio at Fort Lee where they will work for a solid year.

Dressing rooms such as are provided for the most important stars in filmdom are at their disposal; rest rooms furnished with everything in which children delight are there; playing quarters were not overlooked and should they want to remain over night at the studio, sleeping rooms are ready for them.

Millionaires' children are not more carefully looked after than these charming little artists. They are tutored by nuns and regular hours designated for daily studies. Teachers of dancing have them in charge five hours each week and their music teacher has claim on certain hours of their time.

Jane and Katherine have regular "at home" days too and no more charming hostesses can be found than they, one afternoon of every week when they entertain their children friends at the Lee Kiddies studios.

The Lee children have just completed "Troublemakers," a comedy drama, scheduled for early release.

Confident that in Jane and Katherine he has the two best juvenille film comediennes on the screen Mr. Fox is formulating plans insuring for these little celebrities everything that can possibly be of aid to them in their endeavors.

Writers of note in the comedy scenario field have been asked to submit to Mr. Fox stories especially adapted to the Lee Kiddies and they have been told that no price would be considered too high for suitable material.

Writers making a specialty of stories in which children are prominent are busy now preparing script along lines suggested by Mr. Fox and from this material there will be selected scenarios that will best afford opportunities for the Lee Kiddies exploitation.

No other children in film have received more favorable notice in newspapers throughout the country than the Lee children and they have sustained this popularity in every production in which they appear.

Industry Will Suppress Anti-War Films

TAKES DECIDED STAND AGAINST PICTURES THAT HINDER PROSECUTION OF WAR

FILM producers of the country have agreed to aid the government in the suppression of any motion pictures that will hinder the successful operation of the war. The action was decided upon last week at the request of the department of justice.

The request was presented by United States Attorney Caffey in an address to a gathering of film men in the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in New York last week. In his address Attorney Chaffey said:

"Several months ago complaints came into the Department of Justice as to the effect that was being had on certain portions of the community in various parts of the country by some of the films at the moving picture shows.

Government Gets Hearty Response

"We immediately took it up with the officials of the companies here, and had the heartiest response in respect to the matter.

"My assistant, Mr. Barnes, had the matter in immediate charge and had several conversations with the officials of the companies and intended to be here this morning.

"Mr. Elliott was kind enough to notify us of this meeting and as Mr. Barnes has carried on the matter I designated him to attend, but he is prevented, and I came without full knowledge of all the details of his conversations with the officials of the various companies; but I do know the general purport of those conversations, and the general idea of the government in dealing with this matter."

Co-operation Assured

"It is nothing more than this:

"That they wanted to bring the matter to the attention of the people at the source, who had the power to control the general character of the picture shows, feeling assured that they would have in respect to this matter, as they have had in respect to other requests, the fullest co-operation of the organizations.

"Now, I haven't any specific complaints to lay before you, or any specific problems, but I merely want to repeat to you what has been said in detail to some of the officials, that in some parts of the country it had been felt that some of the pictures were having an adverse influence on the state of mind of the people with respect to the war.

"You have knowledge of the general character of the shows in your control, I assume, and I am sure feel the responsibility of what is perhaps the greatest single educational influence in this country today.

"Speaking from my own standpoint, as going occasionally to your shows, I can hardly conceive a greater demonstration of the fine spirit that animates the conduct of your industry in respect to the war than I personally have witnessed in your shows."

Support Is Pledged

Arthur S. Friend, who presided at the meeting, replied for the manufacturers that anything of an adverse nature which had appeared upon the screen must have been inadvertent, as every producer in the country was endeavoring to further the wishes of the administration in the conduct of the war.

He offered the services of the National Association and of the producers' branch in any steps which might be taken and said that if concrete examples of adverse screen literature were presented to the association, prompt measures would be taken.

Spirit of the Moment Caught by Film

IF there is one thing which the art of the moving picture capitalizes above another in its stories it is timeliness. The Russian autocracy crashes into the dust, and at least four films are flung upon the screens of America recording the greatest modern revolution in story form. Famous crimes, great cataclysms, new discoveries, almost every angle of the day's news, find their way quickly to the screen.

For this reason the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which is bringing Mabel Normand back to the films after a year's absence, is proud of the fact that in the words of the newspaper office, it has "beaten" the industry and scored a "scoop" in the case of Miss Normand's first vehicle, Porter Emerson Browne's "Joan of Plattsburg," which will be released December 2.

It is not alone the first film to utilize that much talked-of camp of the student officers. It is also the first to show the life of our new army in training and the first to handle the stirring theme of America's part in the war, in a way that is both inspiriting and yet untouched by powder, guns and death.

"Joan of Plattsburg" is primarily a comedy, as befits its star, first of screen comediennes. But it is also, if one may coin a phrase, idealistic comedy. Its heroine is a "charter orphan" in one of those grim institutions where parentless children lighten their lonely little lives with pranks and mischievous laughter. Into her existence comes a book, "Joan of Arc,"—and a soldier. Little Joan of Plattsburg, N. Y., would be a second Jeanne d'Arc. She finds an old clothes boiler and makes herself armor. She plans great deeds for her country. And then—comes the great Chance. There in her own home she stumbles upon a spy-plot involving grave disaster to her country. Still a funny little figure out of comedy, she rises to necessity and becomes indeed a modern Joan.

"As common as an old shoe" is an eloquent comparison. And what could be more common than the old shoe Mabel Normand is wearing in this scene from "Joan of Plattsburg."

Exhibitors Give Too Much Entertainment

HEAD OF PRODUCING COMPANY SAYS PRICES MUST ASCEND

MOTION picture patrons are going to have to pay more for their entertainment during the next year, just as they are now paying more for everything they wear, eat and use. That is the declaration last week of Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. Accompanied by B. P. Schulburg, general manager of Paramount, he is making a four months' tour of the country to study film conditions.

"The photoplay follower must pay more for his screen amusement if he wants us to continue to make the best motion pictures that it is possible to create, and if he wants his favorite photoplay theater to continue in business and to provide a suitable setting for the picture as well as good and appropriate music.

Do Not See Dimes in Dollar

"We must realize that the whole economic standard of the country has changed, that a dollar is no longer ten dimes, but four quarters.

"It is wartime.

"The dime has lost its buying power, and besides this decrease in the value of the dollar the increase in the cost of producing motion pictures has advanced to a startling extent.

"The motion picture industry is the very last one to ask an increase for its product—clothiers, shoe manufacturers, magazine publishers and food distributors have already obtained an increase in the purchase price from the consumer, but the motion picture, which we include among the necessities of life, has waited until it could wait no longer.

Industry Hard Hit by Taxes

"Our industry is being hard hit by taxes and there are more to come. It is giving a good deal to the government and it must receive something in return in order to advance with the same rapid strides that have characterized its past progress.

"I have not the slighest fear of the industry's ability to indicate its justification to the public for this increase in price for admission.

Public Supports Pictures

"From what I have already seen on this trip exhibitors in other parts of the country have already made the increase and are receiving the support of their patrons in the movement.

"It is acknowledged that the motion picture theater offers the best and the cheapest amusement that the public can buy during wartime.

"It is giving education, enlightenment and entertainment to the great public. It has been a splendid medium for the government's propaganda, both in connection with the Liberty Loan and with Hoover's food commission.

"There is no reason why the photoplay follower should not wish to permit exhibitors throughout the country to continue in business, even if it costs 5 cents more for each admission to do so.

"The only thing to guard against is an unfair increase—the possible effort of some one to profit by the country's troubles and the condition of public affairs in wartime—and that we are safe against, because of the government's excess profit tax, which will very conveniently take care of any unusual increase in our or the exhibitor's profit over last year's."

Triangle Is Ahead of Release Schedule

Work Is Progressing Rapidly for Early 1918 Plays; Six Directors Are Resting for Renewed Attack

WITH two new stories cast during the present week, three films completed and two pictures, "The Ship of Doom" and "The Sudden Gentleman," starring William Desmond, shipped, Triangle's Culver City studio is easily keeping pace with the production schedule set some weeks ago. Things are humming, especially in the scenario department, where stories are being prepared for the six directors who have recently completed their last assignments and are awaiting new subjects.

Director Raymond Wells has started shooting on "Man Above the Law," a story of life with the Navajo Indians on the painted desert. In this thrilling tale of the southwest, in which a squaw man rules an entire Indian nation, Jack Richardson has the leading role. He is supported by Josie Sedgwick, Claire McDowell, Olga Grey and Dark Cloud, a full-blooded Indian with several years' screen experience. One of Triangle's most beautiful child performers will be seen in this picture as the halfbreed child of the "Navajo king."

An unusual western story has been chosen as the next vehicle for Roy Stewart, cowboy star. Director Cliff Smith will work with such well-known favorites as Fritzie Ridgeway and George Hernandes, in support of his popular western star. The screen adaptation for the picture was made from the magazine story, "The Law's Outlaw," by Alvin N. Nietz. It is a tense mystery drama dealing with the war between the cattle men and the nesters, or small farmers, who threatened their range, with an ambitious young deputy sheriff as the lead and a tense love theme throughout.

As the young deputy sheriff, in love with the beautiful daughter of the nesters' boss, Roy Stewart overcomes many obstacles and in the end wins the favor of the crusty old father, who opposed the ambitions of the young cowman.

Director Wyndham Gittens, who has just completed a maritime drama, "The Ship of Doom," which is said to be full of tense action and death-defying situations, and he is preparing the continuity for another original story, the working title of which has as yet not been decided.

This story deals with the thrilling experiences of a central office man on the trail of a band of river pirates and counterfeiters. Gittens expects to take his company to San Francisco for the water front locations. Included in the cast will be many of the same people who worked with Gittins in his last picture. It is likely that Monte Blue and Claire McDowell will have the leads.

Director Jack Dillon is nearing the completion of his latest offering, "Betty Takes a Hand," in which Olive Thomas appears. The exterior settings include one of the handsomest homes in Los Angeles' most fashionable district. The story tells how the breach which grew up between two old miners was spanned by the romance between their only children, one the son of wealth and the other a dainty little miss seeking to make a living by running a boarding house.

An elaborate setting is being directed for Director Walter Edwards' picture, "The Passion Flower," in which Alma Ruebens and Wheeler Oakman have the leads. A bit of Venice is being transplanted to the lot at considerable expense and gondolas will soon be plying on the canal surrounded by quaint Venetian homes. A full force of carpenters is rushing work on this beautiful set and it will be in use by the end of the week.

Turn Them Away at Utah Opening

The re-opening of the Utah Theater, after the show house had been closed for three months for remodelling, marked an event in the moving picture history of Ogden, Utah.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on opening night the show house was crowded, every seat taken and standing room at a premium. A new pipe organ with orchestral equipment was a drawing card.

The re-opening of the theater proved such an attraction that several hundred people were turned away during the evening.

After spending $15,000, Manager H. A. Flynn has made his theater one of the most modern moving picture houses in the state. The floor is graded gradually to descend toward the stage in old Roman ampitheater style and new upholstered seats with plenty of room in the chair and leg space between the rows.

A beautiful lighting effect was worked into the ceiling and side walls, green tinted lights being suspended from the ceiling and golden window effects adorning the side walls. The aisles are carpeted and the lobby will be beautified with new tapestries that the urgency of opening would not permit being put in.

Joe King, well-known leading man of the screen, has been added to the Triangle playing force at Culver City.

Gives Ten Reasons for Petrova Success

Brochure Sets Forth Explanation of Why Pictures Contain Patron-Pulling Power

THE Petrova Picture Company, which during the forthcoming year will present Madame Petrova in a series of eight great starring vehicles, has in course of preparation a handsome brochure which will set forth "The Ten Reasons Why" Petrova Picture Productions will offer to the exhibitors of the entire world a series of pictures de luxe which will be the last word in artistic effort and patron-pulling power.

Among the various subjects dealt with throughout the interesting length of the brochure, the following points are scored regarding the emotional actress and the eight productions of the company in which she will appear:

I. The star herself. Madame Olga Petrova is conceded by newspaper critics and the theater-going public alike to be not only the "most beautiful woman in the world" but the greatest exponent of dramatic roles now appearing in the shadow world.

II. The extraordinary world-wide advertising and exploitation campaign which has been inaugurated in behalf of the Petrova Picture Company by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova organization. Together with the advertising display which will appear in twenty-five national magazines, a $50,000 newspaper campaign will be intensively applied so as to effectively reach every motion picture patron of every town in the United States. Madame Petrova, herself an accomplished writer, will contribute regularly a series of articles to The Ladies' World, a magazine of wide circulation.

III. The selection of the vehicles in which Madame Petrova will star. The celebrated actress will personally supervise the choice of all of her screen mediums and the most infinite and painstaking care will be exerted to have these plays the acme of screen technique and scenario perfection.

IV. Pre-Production Counsel. Frederick L. Collins, president of Superpictures Distributing Corporation and the Petrova Picture Company, has especially engaged America's leading exhibitor, Samuel L. Rothapfel, to act in the capacity of "Pre-Production Counsel." The famous presiding genius of the Rialto Theater will assist in the judging of scenarios and offer his varied showmanship experience to attain the highest possible perfection in the matter of "pictures for the public."

V. Cost of Production. Absolutely no expense will be spared in the working of Petrova's eight starring vehicles. To this end, no limit will be placed on the production cost, which will be governed solely by the requirements of the picture in hand. The results artistically should leave nothing to be desired.

VI. Public Popularity. Although the first Petrova Picture "Daughter of Destiny" has been but recently completed, the offices of the Petrova Picture Company have been deluged with mail from all points of the country, asking when Madame Petrova will make her appearance in her own productions. This mass of correspondence has come from exhibitor and patron alike and is a wonderful tribute to the popularity of the beautiful star.

VII. The supporting cast. The artists who will support the famous star in her eight great productions will be literally of the "hand-picked" variety. Expert attention will be given to the suitability of type and acting capabilities of each player, in order that the various roles may be perfectly cast.

VIII. The mechanical system which has been installed for the laboratory treatment of Petrova pictures. The latest devices for tinting and toning, together with the highest perfection of the developing and printing process will assure a finished product of a beauty new to the motion picture screen.

IX. Editing and titling. These two important phases of motion picture production will receive the utmost consideration in all Petrova Pictures. The highest class cutters available have been secured to handle this end and Madame Petrova herself will personally supervise the work of several title-writers among whom are two prominent magazine authors and a famous scenario builder.

X. The staff of studio assistants which will figure in the making of every Petrova Production. The various departments which enter into the studio work have been assigned to the charge of individual experts. This fine regard for detail has been carried out to the point of a special staff of modistes for the creation of the gowns which Madame Petrova will wear, and a "make-up" expert who will judge of the blending of the lighting with the facial make-up.

The first production of the Petrova Picture Company, "Daughter of Destiny," has been announced for release in the near future. It will have its initial presentation at the Rialto Theater, New York, under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel.

Weekly Cameraman Makes Remarkable Aero Film

One of the most amazing series of aeroplane pictures ever shown constitute the main feature of Universal Animated Weekly No. 96. The pictures were made at the Curtiss Aviation School at Newport News, Va., by F. J. Conway and the men who made the flights are Ed. Stinson and Carl Batts, instructors at the school.

The fliers are shown in loop-the-loops, nose dives, spirals, tailspins and all the other hair-raising feats which have become a necessary part of the equipment of every air scout on the French front. Most aviators, however, insist upon an altitude of at least 3,000 feet for these stunts, but Stinson and Batts are shown doing them only 400 feet up.

For some of the shots the cameraman went up in one of the aeroplanes and took the pictures while the other machine performed astonishing gyrations within easy camera range. Many of the shots are veritable close-ups. In one instance the flier is clearly seen waving his hand to the operator, while the solid earth and Hampton Roads lie thousands of feet below him.

Another picture of timely interest shows the 12,000 jackies of the Great Lakes naval training station marching in solid mass in review before Secretary Daniels.

Woman Manager Puts Courtesy First

Most Essential in Selling Amusement to the Public and Must Begin at the Box Office

BY GEORGIA C. RICHARDSON

Manager of the Colonial Theater Circuit, Saco, Me.

COURTESY seems to me one of the most essential things in selling amusement to the public.

In the first place it should begin at the box office. The cashier should have information in regard to the day's program so that she may talk intelligently with those who ask questions. She should be taught to do this in an agreeable manner—with a smile—even though it sometimes hurts.

Special attention should be given to those calling by phone, asking all the thousand and one things that we think they ought to know, but don't. Answering these questions in a short, curt manner, and slamming down the receiver will never get business, but a few pleasant words of explanation will go a good way and win friends for your house.

The door man should also be taught to have a pleasant word for all, especially strangers. Rich or poor, one's dime is as good as another, and all should be shown every courtesy until they are comfortably seated. I find if you are in sight when they come out, just give them a pleasant smile, "How did you like the show?" "Hope you'll come again" and "Good night," that they will come again and they mention to others how courteously they are treated at this theater.

Here are two instances that prove that old and young appreciate courtesy. On a Marguerite Clark night recently I found two tiny tots sitting in the back row of all, with hundreds of big folks ahead. It was impossible for them to see over the seat. I asked them if they didn't want to come down front. They did. I took them to a place of safety where nothing could escape their gaze, and much to my surprise the smallest one (who couldn't have been over seven summers) said, "Thank you."

I already make it a point to assist elderly people to seats, especially at the matinees, when we don't have ushers. Only one day last week a woman came to me and wanted to thank me for being so kind to her mother as she always came in the afternoon and planned to get here before the lights were out, otherwise she couldn't see a thing, as she was extremely nearsighted. She had told her daughter not to worry about her for if she was late she was always taken care of.

These things all help to bring you more business, for if they are treated well once they will come again, while if you pay no attention to them but just grab their money and let them get in and out the best they can, with things happening around them to disturb and detract their attention from the show, they are apt not to come again.

I also believe that courtesy to your help goes a long way, for the majority of employees will do things willingly if asked to do so in a pleasant way, while if you are cranky and cross they won't do half as much for you, nor as well.

As I said in the beginning, courtesy is one of the best advertisements for your house, and costs you nothing.

Display it freely.

Bold Bandit Robs Zukor and Lasky on Train

Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky, moving picture magnates, while on their way to attend the opening of the new California theater, in San Francisco, were made the victims of hold-up men. Their train was stopped at Hasson, a small town south of Ventura, Cal., by a band of fifty desperadoes, who waved a red lantern. Volleys of pistol shots kept the train crew cowed while the leader of the gang entered the observation car. Frantic passengers hid their valuables in every conceivable place. Only two were molested, however, Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky—who were relieved of their valuables. As the train was about to start the bandit leader's identity was revealed. It was Wm. S. Hart, the noted actor, who adopted this sensational means of paying his respects to Zukor and Lasky. Hart and his company are at Hasson taking scenes for a picture.

Deitrich Leaves Hearst Service

Theodore C. Deitrich, for many years connected with the editorial departments of the Hearst newspapers and who during the last two years has been advertising and publicity director of Hearst's International Film Service, has tendered his resignation, effective about November 22.

Mr. Deitrich, it is understood, will enter the motion picture producing field, as president and general manager of a recently incorporated film concern.

Novel Idea Embraced in "The Dream Doll"

A NOVELTY will be given exhibitors by Essanay December 17, when "The Dream Doll" will be released on the Perfection Picture program through the George Kleine System.

The novelty is the invention of Howard S. Moss, an expert in the work of making and handling dolls. His collection of midgets, many imported, is worth thousands of dollars. When a picture calls for dolls of a type he can't find in stock he promptly makes the proper type.

Mr. Moss' invention is patented and the many little secrets of the trade are closely guarded. But he does tell this much—how he animates the dolls. On the screen the dolls apparently move about without the aid of human hand as naturally as humans would move. Here is how it is done. If Mr. Moss wants the cook to walk to the kitchen door he moves one foot probably an eighth of an inch and the cameraman takes a tiny bit of film. This process is repeated until the cook reaches the door. It is tedious work, and it takes weeks to make a picture.

In "The Dream Doll" both living characters and dolls are used. Marguerite Clayton plays the role of Ruby, the daughter of the Toy King, John Cossar. Bobby Bolder appears as A. Knutt, a crack-brain chemist. Rod LaRocque is Ruby's fiance.

The chemist, working in the Toy King's factory, claims the discovery of a mixture that will bring dolls to life. Ruby enters the laboratory while the chemist is out. A doll the chemist has given life pours the mixture on her and she shrinks into a living doll. The dolls next bring to life a doll justice of peace and are married. Meanwhile, Ruby's father, fiance and friends are frantically searching the city. Then Ruby awakes.

Old Masters Are Music Tax Weapons

Director Suggests Exhibitors Ignore Publications of American Society Authors Who Demand Tribute

THAT the exhibitor should eliminate all taxable music from his program, is the suggestion of Joseph O'Sullivan, Director of Music Service for the Mutual Film Corporation, who has made an exhaustive study of the exhibitor's music tax problem.

"There is no reason for the exhibitor to feel alarmed over the activities of the American Society of Authors and Composers in enforcing the tax on music composed and published by members of that society. However, precautions should be taken that no taxable music is used, as the simplest and most effective means of eliminating this rapacious element from the motion picture sphere, is by ignoring their output and using only nontaxable music.

"The exhibitor who is using Mutual cue-sheets is protected in this matter, as in all the musical settings only nontaxable music is cued in. By following the suggestions in these cue-sheets the exhibitor can rest assured that he will not be liable to litigation on account of music tax.

"Service to be of real benefit to the exhibitor should be all that the name implies, and of this service the music suggestions have become an important element.

"Under present conditions it is up to the music service department of the film distributors to eliminate all taxable music from their cue-sheets so as to protect the exhibitor. For screen purposes the so-called 'popular' music is not essential, except in light comedies and direct cues for up-to-date dances, and even of this class of music there is plenty available that is not subject to tax.

"The motion picture theater caters to a public that is primarily interested in seeing a good picture—drama, comedy or scenic—effectively presented, and anything that distracts the attention from the subject thrown on the screen, minimizes the effectiveness of the production.

"I have called attention before to the wealth of the dramatic music material to be found in the works of such masters as Beethoven, Wagner, Grieg, Chopin, etc. For dramatic, pathetic and love situations, as well as descriptive scenes, nothing better or more effective can be found than excerpts from their compositions, and the leader who confines himself to such music and to the compositions of present day composers such as Chaminade, Nevin, Borch, Gruenwald, Kriens, Frommel, etc., will never lack for music that will add tremendously to the effect of the screened action."

Tropical Storm Filmed for First Time

A TROPICAL storm is one of the most terrifying of natural phenomena. Up to a few years ago only those who had been in the tropics and witnessed one of these raging, tearing typhoons that look like the end of the world while they last, were able to form any correct estimate of the spectacle.

Since motion picture adventurers have been invading odd corners of the globe wider knowledge of the strange sights of the tropics has been gained, but the first real tropical storm ever shown on the screen so far as can be traced is that terrific maelstrom of wind and water that descends on the Southern Mexican rubber plantation in the Mutual's picturization of Herman Whitaker's novel "The Planter."

In some parts of Mexico they have sand storms that blow the top off the landscape and deposit it three hundred miles away in the form of whirling sand columns that alter the face of the country they invade, so that a man away from home a week is unable to tell his own township from the next one when he returns.

The real southern Mexican tropical outburst, though, beats the sandstorm hollow. It is preceded by a sudden darkening of the sky, a low moaning wind that rustles the dense undergrowth and bows the heads of the rubber palms. Then, like a flash, the skies open and the rain comes.

Rain! Why every drop is as big as a bucket and the deluge drives down with such force that it seems the matted foliage can never rise again. In fifteen minutes it is all over. The sun comes out a blaze of molten yellow—the sodden ground emits dense clouds of steam, and there you are—that's the rubber country.

Tyrone Power, the famous Shakespearean actor who is starred in "The Planter," fits in admirably with this tumultuous territory. "The Planter" is one of the most fascinating of Mutual special features.

Change Opening Scene of "Cleopatra"

A change was made last week in the opening scenes of "Cleopatra," the spectacular William Fox film drama, to give the production a more effective introduction.

The first scene of the picture, as it now is being shown at the Lyric theater in New York City, shows the great desert outside Alexandria, the capital of Cleopatra's kingdom. In the distance are the Sphinx and two of the pyramids. The view changes quickly to a close-up of the inscrutable face of the Sphinx, which then fades slowly into the features of Miss Theda Bara, the star of the picture.

In this way, J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the photoplay, registers at once the thoroughly essential Egyptian atmosphere.

After this innovation, the original opening which the film had is presented. Cleopatra sits pondering in her tent as a messenger comes to announce that Caesar is on the throne in Alexandria.

"The Heart of a Lion" is the name of the picture from which this scene is taken. William Farnum does not find his part difficult.

Hayden Talbot Becomes Scenario Writer

Hayden Talbot, well-known journalist, foreign correspondent and playwright, is the most recent addition to the scenario writing forces at the Triangle's Culver City studios. In addition to his newspaper experience, Talbot is well-known in the theatrical world and has met with considerable success in the motion picture industry. Among Talbot's plays are "The Little Joker," and "The Truth Wagon," both produced by Oliver Morosco. He also wrote "O Joe," produced by Oliver Morosco at the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles, with Walter Edwards, now a Triangle director, in the title role.

Miss Hazel MacDonald, formerly on the Photoplay Magazine staff, and a well-known newspaper woman has been added to the force of readers in the Triangle scenario department. Miss MacDonald is now working on the large number of manuscripts.

George du Bois Porter, of the scenario staff at Culver City, has left for New York for a six weeks' vacation. Proctor is making the trip East to say good-bye to his brother, Edward E. Proctor, a member of the U. S. Aviation Corps now stationed at Passaic, N. J., which is expected to sail in the near future to join Pershing's forces in France.

Lee Kids Make New Picture

The "Baby Grand" stars—Jane and Katherine Lee—five and seven years old respectively, featured in William Fox Standard Pictures, will soon be seen in a comedy-drama, "Troublemakers," written especially for them, and which gives these "kiddies" many opportunities to employ their talent.

Jane, abetted by her sister, is chief fun-maker.

Three scenes from Vitagraph's "I Will Repay," which is based on one of O. Henry's stories. Corinne Griffith, "Mother" Mary Maurice and William Dunn are featured.

Freuler Corporations Pay Dividends

Three Subsidiaries of Mutual Film Corporation Make Substantial Returns to Their Stockholders

THREE of the Mutual Film Corporation's subsidiary and allied corporations have declared important dividends and stock redemptions involving large sums in profits paid over to stockholders in these Freuler enterprises.

The Lone Star Corporation, the concern which produced the Mutual-Chaplin comedies, through the office of John R. Freuler, president, announces for November 10, the redemption of ten per cent of the preferred stock outstanding at 110 plus the preferred stock dividends at seven per cent accrued to date. This means that approximately two-thirds of the preferred stock has been redeemed by the corporation, including the payment of the 10 per cent redemption premium and the payment of the 7 per cent dividends. Meanwhile the Mutual-Chaplin comedies have a long period in which to work and take profits.

"The marked success of the Mutual-Chaplin project has contributed largely to the present sound position of the Mutual Film Corporation," observed Mr. Freuler.

Another subsidiary, the Lincoln Film Corporation, the corporation financing the production of the Helen Holmes serial entitled "A Lass of the Lumberlands," has redeemed ten per cent of the outstanding preferred stock at 110, plus the accrued 7 per cent dividends. The serial continues booking at a satisfactory rate.

The States Film Corporation, the subsidiary concerned with the Helen Holmes serial "The Girl and the Game," first of her Mutual efforts, announces the payment of a two per cent dividend on the common stock, all of the preferred issue having been long since redeemed.

Mrs. William Desmond Dies in West

Mrs. William Desmond, wife of the Triangle star, and sister of Nance O'Neil, the famous actress, died at the Desmond home in Hollywood, Cal., last week, after a period of invalidity lasting several years. Desmond has just returned to Culver City from Santa Barbara, where the remains were interred.

Mrs. Desmond was an actress before her marriage about twelve years ago, and was well known both as a brilliant woman and a talented stage favorite. She made her stage debut at the old California Theater, in San Francisco, her native city, and subsequently played leading holes in "Blue Jeans," "The Ruby," and "Sporting Life."

She met Desmond while they were playing in Ella Wheeler Wilcox's play, "Mizpah," at the Burbank Theatre in Los Angeles several years ago. When Desmond went to Australia, she accompanied him, and it was at the time of his stage debut there that she was injured by falling down a flight of marble steps. At first it was thought that one of her limbs would have to be amputated to prevent blood poisoning. The case baffled physicians and surgeons of tw continents, and for some time she was under the care of specialists of Johns Hopkins Institute, in Baltimore.

About three weeks ago she suffered a nervous breakdown brought on by the discouragement which met her efforts to regain health, and friends say that a growing despondency probably hastened her death. Mrs. Desmond's mother. Mrs. Lamson, who has also been a confirmed invalid for years, has made her home with her daughter since the Desmonds moved to Hollywood.

Is This a New Ford Story?

Mal St. Clair, Keystone-Triangle comedian, purchased a Ford. He initiated the new flivver by driving it to Venice, Cal. He parked the car and when he returned a few hours later, was chagrined to find a score of the same familiar make where he had left his new toy. "Slim" isn't sure that the car he now has is the same one he drove to Venice.

This Is What He Thinks of MOTOGRAPHY

The following letter reached us this week from the manager of the Auditorium Theater, Marblehead, Ohio:

"What the Picture Did for Me" is well worth alone the price of your magazine. That is what made me subscribe for it. No exhibitor can do without it, especially the small town exhibitor. If he will be governed by it he will never sting his audience with a poor picture.

Storm Wrecks Grecian City in New Jersey

Icy Blast Topples Goldwyn Settings for Mary Garden's "Thais"—Rebuilding Begins at Once

THE icy blasts and downpour of rain that struck Manhattan Island one recent morning not only destroyed property there, but over on the Jersey side blew down an entire Grecian city that had been erected at the Goldwyn studio, atop the Palisades, for Mary Garden's forthcoming production of "Thais."

This "city" had been built at considerable expense on a plot of ground measuring nearly half an acre. At one end was a temple with six sixty-foot columns surmounted by an elaborately ornamented pediment, constituting the front elevation, and a wide and deep portico which formed a splendid pocket for the wind. At left was the public market, with room for five or six booths of merchants doing business there. At right was the dwelling of Thais herself. And in the foreground was the well.

What the storm did was cordially appreciated when, at the first cessation of the hurricane a veritable army of workmen appeared to repair the damage. The entire "city" had to be rebuilt. The wooden part was virtually all intact, and this was speedily "shored up" to its original position. But fresh stucco was required in many places, and not a little brushing up with paint in others.

All this time an army of extra people, in costume of ancient Greek priests, civilians, dance-girls and so forth, was kept waiting; and their pay represented a very considerable item in the bill of costs. The principals were able to continue their work with some of the interior scenes under artificial light on the enclosed glass stage.

Miss Garden, who has become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of motion picture work, felt as keenly disappointed when she heard of the destruction of the set as the director himself.

Only Pictures That Count Are Good Ones

NOTED AUTHOR OF PLAYS SPEAKS OF FILMS AS SIDE-LINE OBSERVER

BY EDWIN MILTON ROYLE

A noted playwright

LET me say I am only an observer on the side lines, and I do not pretend to speak with authority as to the great moving picture business, which is both an art and an industry. Its evolution is so constant and so swift I doubt if any one can catch any very definite idea and pin it securely to the wall for observation. However, here are same vagrant impressions:

Old things are past or are passing. All or most of the tricks have been played. All the situations have been used. The public can no longer be astonished. Production is no longer an object but an accessory. The trade mark of the big producers no longer means very much, for they produce pictures that are good, bad and indifferent, and only the good count.

Public Is Seduced by Actor

For the moment the public is seduced by the actor, his or her reputation and personality. Even that is passing or will pass. The very success of Apollo Jones in one picture makes it increasingly difficult for Apollo to repeat in the next. The picture is going through the same evolution already accomplished by the spoken drama. Once they went to see John Drew. Now they ask what he is playing.

Hitherto the author has been conspicuous by his insignificance. The manager paid the acting celebrity a salary equivalent to an important slice of the British national debt, and gave the author a meal ticket—perhaps neither was worth the price. The business methods are changing, and must change.

Undoubtedly some second story men have jimmied their way into the moving picture industry, but in the long run such men cannot compete with legitimate business men.

Must Have Good Story Well Told

There have been and will be changes but the one essential thing that has not and will not change is the demand for—a good story well told, and so the authors will eventually come into their own. From the authors' standpoint the one encouraging feature of the present situation is the independent producer.

The big firms with large staffs, huge plants, and enormous output no longer beckon to the author. In the first place they treat him with curious want of consideration. We will admit that there is "Nothing new under the sun." The only thing that is new is the individual's point of view.

Author Gives Way to Re-writer

There are lots of men who know as much and many who know a great deal more about the American than I do. The only thing that could make "The Squaw Man" of value was my point of view, but the average manager, having bought the author's point of view, waives the author aside and employs a re-writer to deliberately change that point of view.

The essential thing that made the work different and unique consequently disappears. I do not wish to give the impression that this happened to "The Squaw Man," but I have had the unpleasant experience of seeing what I though was a big story absolutely disappear in the hands of the re-writer.

Author's Advice Is Unsought

The big firms having bought the author's ideas apparently do not want the author's co-operation or advice as to the further exploitation of these ideas.

The big firms, making good, bad and indifferent pictures, can, by and through the good, force the bad and indifferent on the market, but that does not compensate the author who has a book or a play kicked into the bad and indifferent class to the detriment of his reputation and the further sale of his product.

Independent Producer Author's Hope

The independent producer is the author's present hope, for the independent producer must make good. His only chance is to make a picture that everybody wants, and he gives it a personal care, a personal touch that is of great value if he is a man with an instinct for beauty and for drama.

I have been having an agreeable and a hopeful experience with one of our most important independents, Mr. Harry Rapf. Mr. Rapf exhibited great courage and initiative in even thinking of doing my play, "The Struggle Everlasting," which stars Florence Reed. It is a modern morality play and if he succeeds in translating its symbolism into pictures he will have done something new and original and perhaps important.

Again, I have had the unusual experience of having my advice and co-operation invited, almost welcomed by Mr. Rapf and his very able director, Mr. Kirkwood, in the working out of this difficult subject. Mr. Rapf took me into the wilds of Maine and treated me as a person of almost human intelligence—a new and delightful experience.

Brother of Enid Bennett Is Killed in Battle

The shadow of the great war has fallen upon Enid Bennett, the young Australian screen star, who has just been relieved of her contract with the New York Motion Picture Corporation through a decision by Judge Russ Avery in the Los Angeles courts, whereby she is free to continue her work with Thomas H. Ince, in Paramount pictures.

While the trial was in progress Ingle Carpenter, an attorney, was handed a cablegram reading, "Lieut. Reginald Bennett killed in action on western front. Please inform his sisters, Enid and Marjorie Bennett."

When Miss Bennett stepped from the witness sttand, her attorney gently escorted her to the judge's chambers where, in as kindly a manner as possible, he informed her of the sad fact. Miss Bennett collapsed and was cared for by a physician. Lieut. Bennett was the oldest brother of Enid and Marjorie and a member of a western contingent on the European battle front. He had been in France for more than two years.

Billie Burke's Next Picture Is "Land of Promise"

For the cast of "The Land of Promise," in which Billie Burke will be starred by Paramount shortly, Thomas Meighan will appear opposite the star, in the leading male role. Helen T. Tracy, J. W. Johnson, Mary Alden, Margaret Seddon, Walter McEwen, Grace Studeford and John Raymond complete the cast.

"The Land of Promise," written for Miss Burke's starring vehicle on the speaking stage, several seasons ago, is the work of W. Somerset Maughan. The screen production was directed by Joseph Kaufman, who also directed "Arms and the Girl," Miss Burke's most recent Paramount picture.

"The Widow's Might," New Eltinge Play

Following "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," Julian Eltinge's second Paramount play, released this month, the famous impersonator of feminine characters will be seen in "The Widow's Might," written especially for him by Marion Fairfax and directed by William C. De Mille.

Theda Bara appeared in person on election night at the Academy of Music in New York where the latest William Fox Standard Picture, "The Rose of Blood," is playing.

Film Play and Music Go Hand in Hand

ORCHESTRA DIRECTOR SEES OPPORTUNITY TO ENHANCE VALUE OF PICTURES

BY LOUIS VAN ES

Musical Director of the Regent Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

A RECENT feature picture at the Regent emphasized more than has any other single event since I have been connected with orchestras, the importance of music in the motion picture theater. It gave me an opportunity to demonstrate that the film play and music go hand in hand.

The picture in question was the release featuring Olga Petrova in "The Black Butterfly," and by a judicious selection of the music I enhanced the intensity of the dramatic climax so that the audience actually gasped, and then held its breath in anticipation.

Those who have seen the picture may recall that the hero steps into a telephone booth and calls up the "black butterfly." When she says she will not have him he shoots himself. The picture then flashes from the telephone booth back to where Mme. Petrova is listening. She hears the shot over the wire and then drops the receiver.

Makes Music Suit Action of Play

The way I have handled this picture is a clear example of what can be done by any musical director who loves his work. I started the reel with the "Poet and Peasant" overture, primarily because it is so well known, and too, because it fits in perfectly with the action of the film.

At the point where the telephone conversation begins the orchestra is playing the "allegro." Just as the shot is fired and the scene flashes back, I cut the music absolutely short. The pause, coming on top of the climax of the play, and showing the terror on the actress' face, produced the most wonderful effect I have ever been able to attain.

No Doubt as to Music Value

This one example should eliminate forever all doubt from the minds of any who are not certain that an orchestra has its proper place in the motion picture theater.

The "problems" which confronted me when I first took up my duties soon resolved themselves into simple matters. Films divide themselves, generally, into three classes: feature, comedy, scenic. One classes cartoons with the comics, and educationals with the scenics.

Few Selections Are Needed

In the presentation of the feature picture, I find that the following formula works well. Music selected from the following repertoire, with a discriminating eye for its suitability to the play, will solve every problem:

Novelettes (little popular compositions).
French waltzes.
Andantes.
Caprices.
Allegros from overtures for the "hurries."
And last, but by all means most important, love songs.

Herbert Music Fits Love Plot

Every feature film has its love plot and the problem is to select that particular song which is best suited to the character of the play. Wherever possible I choose one of Victor Herbert's, because they are so well known, and because they are of the highest musical quality. In certain instances one of Ball's compositions or something even lighter, is preferable.

Louis Van Es

The one thing to bear in mind, always, is to exercise care in modulating from one selection to another. Be gentle in your transitions from fast to slow, loud to soft, one key to another. The reason for this is obvious: it is less of a jar upon the audience, which is intent upon watching the picture.

Waltz Best for Scenics

A good waltz, selections from light operas, and solos for the violin or 'cello, make the best accompaniments to the scenic and educational pictures, while popular marches, dances and "rags" keep the comics and animated cartoons going lively. If there is a drummer in the orchestra he can assist greatly by a judicious use of the traps.

Care should always be taken not to attempt a result from an instrument that does not come naturally. Keep every instrument in its place, is a safe motto.

One Musician for Each 100 Seats

It is very easy to determine on the size of the orchestra. Just engage one musician for every 100 seats and you have an orchestra suited to every demand of your pictures, and one that will not be too unwieldly in your house.

At the Regent we have a seating capacity of a little more than 400, and our orchestra consists of two violins, a 'cello and a piano. An organist plays while the orchestra is off duty.

A theater with a seating capacity of from 750 to 1,000 is probably best served by an orchestra composed of two or three violins, one 'cello, contrabass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, piano and drums. An organist is of great help in an orchestra of this size and larger.

The same care exercised in the other phases of the music problem should be shown in handling the organist. Unless he is a great transcriptive genius his improvisations will fall flat. So it is the best practice to have him play standard works adapted to his instrument. Small compositions are undoubtedly preferable to overtures and symphonies, for usually these resolve themselves into a mere jumble of sound and rumble of noise.

Four-Minute Men Celebrate Success With Outing

Chicago "Four-Minute Men," including many Essanay executives and actors, who helped boost the sale of Liberty Bonds during the recent campaign, celebrated the success of their work with a field day and dinner at the Edgewater Golf club, Saturday, November 10.

Running races, a socker football game and other athletic matches were indulged in during the afternoon, after which came the dinner and stunt show. Taylor Holmes, former famous stage comedian, gave several humorous recitations and Jack Gardner, former musical comedy favorite, gave several numbers from his stage successes. Both are now being featured in Essanay productions.

The Chicago "Four-Minute Men" are now bending their efforts to support Food Administrator Hoover's economy campaign. Mr. Holmes, Mr. Gardner, and the other volunteers are speaking nightly at some Chicago picture house. Mr. Holmes has added a number of short recitations to his program and Mr. Gardner is winning the plaudits of film fans singing "Over There."

Miss Helen Ferguson, who has played the leading feminine role in pictures featuring both Mr. Holmes and Mr. Gardner, has added to her war activities by accompanying the "Four-Minute Men" and distributing food economy pledge cards and food conservation literature.

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay and chairman of the Illinois Motion Picture Bureau of Food Administration, has practically completed his organization of the exhibitors of the state. Mr. Spoor reports exhibitors have given the work their sincere co-operation and that much aid to the food campaign is bound to result. Mr. Spoor recently received a letter of commendation from State Food Administrator Harry Wheeler praising him for the success gained in the organization and co-operation of the exhibitors of the State.

Two Comedians Go West

Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, Big V comedians, have shaken the dust of New York and pointed for the land of perpetual sunshine. These two young men, who graduated from the Big V riot squad of Vitagraph, are now being featured in these comedies by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and for the next few months they will work at the company's Hollywood plant under the direction of Dave Smith, brother of the Vitagraph chief.

Suit Demands $400,000 Damages

Mutual Film President Charges Circulation of Prints Illegally by New York Corporation

A SUIT demanding $400,000 damages has been filed against the New York Motion Picture Corporation and a group of related concerns by the Mutual Film Corporation. The suit was instituted in the Superior Court of New York.

The action includes a prayer for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant concerns from the further circulation of various motion pictures.

The defendants include the Broncho Motion Picture Company, the Keystone Film Company and the Domino Motion Picture Corporation.

The Mutual Film Corporation charges that the New York Motion Picture Corporation and its allies have violated contracts for the exclusive sale of the pictures in question to the Mutual Film Corporation and that they have further refused to deliver to the Mutual additional print copies of the pictures as stipulated in the contract.

"The motion pictures involved," remarked President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, "include all of the pictures made for the Mutual by the defendants in the period of 1912 to 1915, which means the old Keystone comedies, W. S. Hart pictures of that period, Charles Chaplin comedies made by Keystone, early Max Sennett comedies and the western productions by Broncho and all Domino pictures.

"The contracts covering these pictures provided that the Mutual Film Corporation was to have exclusive right of distribution in the United States and Canada and that the Mutual was to be supplied with additional positive prints of any of the pictures at any time.

"Last July the Mutual Film Corporation began placing orders for new prints of large numbers of these pictures. The orders were ignored. We made tender of payment in advance in gold, calling at the offices of the concerns now sued with the money in gold coin for that express purpose. The orders were still ignored.

"We now charge that the defendants are engaged in circulating a number of these pictures through obscure channels, and in obvious violation of the Mutual's contract rights. Not a few of these pictures are through some channel again reaching the market and conspicuous among them are the W. S. Hart two-part dramas.

"The Mutual Film Corporation planned and announced the coming of the release of reissues of some of the most desirable of these pictures and this corporation has been materially injured because of the refusal of the defendant motion picture concerns to live up to their contracts."

The suit is under the supervision of President Freuler and Samuel M. Field, general counsel for the Mutual Film Corporation. The suit is being handled in New York by John G. Turnbull, eastern counsel for the Mutual Film Corporation.

The striking beauty of Olive Thomas is one attribute that makes her successful in doing her part as "Indiscreet Corinne," in the Triangle picture of that name.

Direct Chinese Actors in Their Own Tongue

More than a dozen Chinamen were required as actors in one of the forthcoming episodes of "The Mystery Ship," Universal serial, in which Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber appear. The laundries of Los Angeles furnished the Celestial actors and the resources of Universal City provided the man to direct them—Thomas H. Gubbins being called from his other duties in the executive department to talk to the Mongolians in their own language.

Mr. Gubbins speaks Chinese like a native, having spent eight years in the land of the Gold Dragon. Attacked by the wanderlust while still a youngster, he worked as a cabin boy on a sailing vessel bound for China. He took French leave of the boat in Hong Kong and lived and worked among the Chinese until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. On the arrival of Admiral Dewey's squadron at Hong Kong to coal, preparatory to the battle of Manila Bay, Gubbins stowed away on the gunboat, Concord, and worked as a coal-passer during the scrap. Then, at the first opportunity, he left the Concord and worked on the Manila American as reporter, circulation manager, collector and delivery boy, all in one.

Subscribers were mostly volunteer soldiers, so it necessitated his being at the front much of the time. He became very much attached to the firing line; so much so that for two weeks he forgot to come back to work and consequently was fired. Mr. Gubbins has been with the Universal company several years, learning the motion picture business inside out.

"Why" Is New Book Written by W. H. Hoffman

Among the forthcoming publications early in the new year, is a book on salesmanship entitled "Why," by M. H. Hoffman, president of the M. H. Hoffman, Inc. "Why" is virtually a handbook for those interested in selling, and covers its many angles with a wide grasp of the opposing contingencies and obstacles to be met with. Among the chapters may be found the Science of Salesmanship, Helpful Dialogues, Advertising Mediums, Answers to Objections, What Constitutes a Salesman, and Personality Plus Proof.

"Grizzlies" Appear In Film

Santa Barbara had a few busy and happy hours recently when the famous "Grizzlies," as the California Artillery Corps are called, passed through on their way to the Linda Vista camp. The citizens of Santa Barbara gave them a royal entertainment. After the elaborate breakfast and welcoming speeches had been disposed of, the soldier boys enjoyed the novelty of being a part of the initial Margarita Fischer production, "A Daughter of Joan." The "Grizzlies" greatly appreciated the opportunity to pose before the picture camera and had bushels of fun in their highly impromptu but effective roles.

Seelye Leaves Pathe

It was announced at the offices of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., this week that C. R. Seelye, who has been business manager for Pathe for the past year, is no longer connected with the organization.

Begins Production of New Brand of Comedies

Vitagraph Will Star Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres in Series of One-Reel Productions

GREATER VITAGRAPH is going to add to its program in a few weeks a brand new line of comedies, according to a statement given out by Albert E. Smith, president of the company.

These comedies, which will be one-reelers, will not interfere with the production of Big V's, because Mr. Smith has just recently put two new companies to work on this brand of slapstick, now having three in action. The new brand will be a higher grade of comedy, made from the works of some of the best known humorists of the present day, and will be produced under the direction of Graham Baker.

Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, two Blue Ribbon feature stars, will be featured in this new series of humorous productions. Mr. Earle, who appeared in many successful musical comedies before he went into motion pictures, will be remembered for the fine shading of humor which he gave to the role of the young American in "For France," a recent five-reel feature issued by Vitagraph.

Miss Ayres, who has been seen in O. Henry stories and Blue Ribbon productions, is regarded by President Smith as one of the most promising young actresses on the screen today. She was chosen for the leading feminine roles in the new comedies because of her extraordinary versatility and her adaptability to any role which she is called upon to delineate.

These comedies will mark the transition of Graham Baker from slapstick to legitimate fun. Mr. Baker, who was associated with Lawrence Semon in the production of the Big V's as author and assistant producer, was, like Mr. Semon, a cartoonist before he took up the work of providing laughs for picture fans. During the two years he has been writing comedies he has come to be known as one of the leading humorists of the picture business.

President Smith, discussing the new comedies, said:

"We were moved to return to this line of production by reason of the fact that the people must be afforded laughs. Slapstick comedy does not appeal to everyone. Vitagraph was the first company to produce one-reel drawing room comedies, featuring John Bunny and Flora Finch, Wally Van and Lillian Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Hughie Mack, Kate Price and others. These were all popular with the public. The pictures in which they appeared still measure up to the best standards. So good are they that they are today among our most popular offerings and they are getting laughs all over the country under the title of Favorite Film Features. In addition, we have the Frank Daniels comedies—the Kernel Nutt and Mr. Jack series—which are also drawing well.

"In spite of all these different comedies and those of other producing companies, there seems to be an apparently unending demand for happy pictures and we hope, with these new parlor comedies, to satisfy this demand, in part at least. There is plenty of slapstick comedy available but there is a dearth of the higher class of humor and we are combing the country for good short stories with the same degree of sincerity that magazines are continually on the lookout for short humorous fiction.

"The popularity of our various little comedy subjects, which are remarkable for their sparkle and clean humor, has satisfied us that there is an increasing demand for comedies of all kinds and we intend to add to our programs at once the new brand of light stories featuring Mr. Earle and Miss Ayres. The first one will be released on December 3."

---

December 3 has been set as the release date for Harold Lockwood's recently completed Metro play, "The Square Deceiver."

Mr. Lockwood's supporting cast includes Pauline Curley, William Clifford, Dora Mills Adams, Dick L'Estrange, Betty Marvin and Kathryn Hutchison.

Sheridan Bickers Will Write Mae Murray Pictures

After purchasing two plays written especially for Mae Murray, Carl Laemmle has entered into an agreement with H. Sheridan Bickers, by which the well known English playwright and dramatic critic will write exclusively hereafter for Bluebird's newest star. Mr. Bickers has previously been engaged as staff writer and title editor for Paralta, and lately has been acting as scenario and publicity director for Lois Weber.

Mr. Bickers was formerly well known in London under the sobriquet of "Yorick," in which name his dramatic criticisms for years have been featured in the London press and leading magazines. Work has already been started on the first of the Bickers stories for Miss Murray, which will be produced by her director, Robert Leonard. The plot of this is being carefully handled, as it is intended as a novelty in photodrama and will, in part, mark the screen's incursion into the hitherto unexploited field of classic pantomime.

In "The Eternal Columbine" as this story is called, Miss Murray will for the first time in motion pictures return to the sphere of her many former triumphs as a dancer. Mr. Bickers was secured by Bluebird Photoplays for a scenario writer, at the special request of Director Leonard who believes that in this versatile writer he has found a collaborator as energetic as himself.

Serial Bookings Show Big Gains

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, received a summary from the company's statistical department last week showing some remarkable facts about the run of the fifteen-episode serial, "The Fighting Trail," which is now in its ninth week. The report, among other things revealed:

Ninety-seven theaters which never before had run a serial are showing "The Fighting Trail."

In the Dallas territory, which has 213 cities and towns of 1,000 or more population, 208 theaters are showing the serial.

In St. Johns, N. B., every theater in the town has booked it.

Last week 183 theaters were added to the list of several thousand already presenting "The Fighting Trail."

"The record made by 'The Fighting Trail,'" said Mr. Irwin, "convinces us that the motion picture public wants serials and that there is virtually an unlimited field for such pictures. However, I believe that serials, to be successful, must be made with the same smoothness that characterizes regular features; that there must be a good story, plenty of strong action and capable acting."

Actor Becomes Ship Builder

Donald Fullen is the latest Triangle employe to heed the call of war, though this actor has chosen an unusual field in which to "do his bit." He will leave soon for Seattle to enter the employ of a shipbuilding concern and will help increase Uncle Sam's merchant marine. This was Fullen's line of work before becoming a screen actor.

Exhibitors Fail to Realize Opportunities

THINKING THEATER OWNER IS POTENT FACTOR IN HIS COMMUNITY

Dr. Sam Atkinson is a live motion picture exhibitor. He owns the Hoyburn Theater in Evanston, Ill. What he says carries weight.

BY SAM ATKINSON

THE average exhibitor has failed to realize what a potent factor he is becoming in present day politics. Thus far he has been too much interested in the development of his business to pay much attention to the political, industrial and economic upheaval going on all around him. Suddenly, however, he finds that the government has recognized the potency of the screen.

Eyes Get Lasting Impression

Impressions are carried through the eye to the brain that neither the written or spoken word can equal.

Consequently our services are being sought. Our loyalty to the country and the flag being unquestioned, we find that the motion picture screen has been requisitioned and second only to the newspapers we have popularized the Liberty loan and made it a wonderful success.

Later the government conceived the idea of sending its representatives into our theaters to speak directly to our audiences upon vital questions of national import.

Four-Minute Men Are Valuable

Every few days a "four-minute man" appears, presents his slide, and expresses the desire of the government. Here is an opportunity for the exhibitor to carry on propaganda work of his own which will eventually result in great good to our industry.

The writer was one of the first exhibitors to welcome these men and grant them the privilege of speech. But he always insists that every "four-minute man" shall give him a few minutes' time before leaving. Then a rapid fire, one-sided conversation goes on as follows:

Plant Some Good Ideas

"When you are visiting the photoplay houses do you never stop to think how much sentiment we are creating in favor of the war and the ideals of democracy?

"You come in as a representative of the government and find yourself cordially received. You see slides thrown upon the screen urging the people to buy Liberty bonds. You see the weeklies showing the heroes that are and the heroes that are to be. You hear our musicians playing national airs. You find us creating sentiment in favor of 'making the world safe for democracy.'

"Do you realize that we never refuse to do what you ask us, but that the very liberty we are fighting for is denied us? In future, will you use your influence in our favor against the injustices that are continually being heaped upon us?"

Help Democracy at Home

The "four-minute man" usually asks what those injustices are, and then he receives an argument against censorship that makes him feel ashamed, and he leaves the theater with the impression that we need not only to fight for democracy in Europe but to fight to establish it here in the United States.

If every exhibitor will speak kindly but firmly to every person who hands him a slide and each "four-minute man" who speaks in his theater, he will be sowing seed that will eventually bring forth fruit.

Sentiment Overrules Censor

During the last "Liberty Loan campaign" public sentiment was aroused to such a degree by the presentation of these views before an audience after the local censor had made a "cut" that prompt action was at once taken and within fifteen minutes the portion was restored.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

After the opponents of free pictures have become active we get busy. Then we are enthusiastic in our denunciation of those who wish to bind us, but the moment their activities cease we go our several ways and forget the injustice of it. The country is carried away with its demand for liberty.

Exhibitors Should Know Their Power

Liberty is the watchword everywhere.

Let us take advantage of our opportunity.

In our programs, upon our screens, and where possible before our audience by word of mouth, let us inform the public how much we are doing to help safeguard the country, and appeal at the same time to be allowed to work out our own salvation as an industry.

We are the most potent power for the spread of democratic principles.

Now is the time to demand for ourselves the liberty we are asking for others.

Army Pictures Nail Seditious Lies

Reports That National Army Men Are Not Well Cared For Are Disproved by Camera

ESSANAY has just closed a contract with the United States government to make moving pictures of many of the military cantonments in various parts of the country. Already two directors with their cameramen and other assistants are in the field, and others will follow soon.

The government will show the pictures throughout the country. The proceeds will be turned into the Divisional Staff for soldiers in training in this country and those at the front in France.

Essanay recently sent a squad of cameramen to Rockford, Ill., where the government has built its great Illinois cantonment and where thousands of selected men are in training for war. This picture was not made for the government, but because Essanay wanted to show by living pictures how the men are treated and how they enjoy the life, so their friends and relatives back home may rest at ease regarding their welfare.

Agents unfriendly to the United States government have circulated reports that the men are underfed, have poor quarters, and otherwise suffer, and that they don't dare write home about it. Moving pictures will give the lie to that story quicker than anything else that could be devised.

The men are shown at mess, in their sleeping quarters, playing outdoor games, drilling, at bayonet practice, and in other forms of their work. The picture gives an excellent view of the buildings, both inside and out.

Picture Will Boost Soldiers' Smokes Fund

Newspaper Makes Fifteen-Hundred-Foot Special Camp Film to Help Raise Money for Tobacco

A FIFTEEN hundred foot special motion picture of "Our Boys at Camp Grant" has been made by the Chicago Daily News to be circulated among the Chicago theaters for the benefit of the newspaper's Tobacco Fund, a fund to supply smokes to the soldiers in France.

The picture is released November 19, through the Chicago exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation, which is rendering free service in the handling of the film as a contribution to the patriotic fund. All of the proceeds go to the fund.

The picture was made under the supervision of A. Chester Keel, of the promotion department of the Chicago Daily News. It shows the various incidents and phases of life in the training trenches of Camp Grant, picturing thousands of the drafted men from Chicago and vicinity.

Essanay Offers Four New Comedy-Dramas

Late November and December Releases Feature Mary McAlister, Taylor Holmes and Jack Gardner

FOUR new comedy-dramas are ready for release by Essanay late in November and in December, in addition to the usual weekly releases and other pictures that are released monthly. Little Mary McAlister, the six-year-old actress, is featured in two of the comedy-dramas, Taylor Holmes, the former stage comedian of "Bunker Bean" fame, in another, and Jack Gardner in the fourth.

The first released is "The Kill-Joy," featuring Little Mary. The picture is unique, in view of the fact that the little actress has the only feminine role. The plot deals with a group of confirmed woman-haters who have founded a village and passed laws making hanging the penalty for bringing a person of the opposite sex into the town. One of the woman-haters finds Little Mary lost in the desert. Her father had died while hunting water. His heart touched, the woman hater decides to keep the child in his hut over-night, then smuggle her to another town before daylight. Other citizens, suspicious, look in his window and see blond hair on the pillow. They think it is a woman, and storm the cabin. Little Mary pleads for her rescuer's life and wins. Finally she wins the heart of everyone and is adopted by the town. The release date is November 19.

"Gift o' Gab," featuring Jack Gardner, details the side-splitting adventures of an ambitions young man who can talk most anyone into most anything. He invents a tunneling machine which he claims can be started at one end of a mountain and will bore through to the other side without the aid of man. He sells it to a big manufacturer through smooth conversation. It proves a failure, but he has his money. There were just two people on earth Jack couldn't win by his gift o' gab. They were the parents of Helen. He couldn't go near the home. Then one day Helen was taken to the hospital with appendicitis. Helen and Jack were quick to see their opportunity, and a minister did the rest. The release date is November 26.

Mr. Holmes is featured in the third comedy-drama, "The Small-Town Guy." It was adapted from the Munsey magazine story, "The Picture of Innocence," by Freeman Tilden. This picture carries a dramatic plot, yet humorous situations are not sacrificed. The picture unfolds the story of an unsophisticated village hotel clerk lured to the city by a gang of crooks who wish to use him as a tool. They send him among the wealthy to collect funds for an imaginary workingmen's club. The villager is arrested, but the police see his innocence and tell him to go back to his village. He arrives just in time to collect an unexpected legacy left by an aunt, who has just died. It includes the village general store, which he manages successfully. Then one day two of the city crooks come in and try to blackmail him. He is just finishing thrashing them when a U. S. Marshal arrives to arrest them. Helen Ferguson is "the girl" and the picture ends with a wedding march touch.

Is He, or Isn't He?

Miss Mae Tinee, who conducts the moving picture department of the Chicago Tribune, is guilty of the following:

Now, what would you make of this mystery? As follows:

The telephone rang. Somebody said: "Miss Tinée? Yes? Well, I am a friend of Mr. Selznick Jr., son of Louis Selznick, you know. The fact is, he is married to Miss Constance Talmadge, but won't admit it. He's at the Blackstone. You had better page him."

"Surely," said the moving picture department, and a couple of hours later paged Mr. Selznick. Mr. Selznick was in the barber shop, but would call when the last faint drops of lilac had descended on his haircut. He did.

"Somebody want me?" asked Mr. Selznick Jr.

"O, yes," we said, and, without further preamble, "Are you married to Miss Constance Talmadge?"

"Do I know her?" said Mr. Selznick Jr. "O, yes, I know her. Yes, Yes, indeed."

"O, no," we said—"you have got us wrong—are you married to her?"

"Do I annoy her?" asked Mr. Selznick Jr., merrily huffy. "I hope not!"

"Dear no," said the moving picture department. "How could such a thing be—are you MARRIED to the lady?"

"Me——" said Mr. Selznick—"Married? Ask Miss Talmadge?"

"Is she in town?" we asked.

He said he didn't think so, but he didn't know.

"But," we said, "you surely know if you are married to her."

But all the man would say was "Ask her! Ask her!"

Alice Joyce Signs Contract for 1918

Star Remains With Vitagraph for Another Year; She Will Be Featured in A. E. Smith Productions

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, announces that Miss Alice Joyce has renewed her contract with the company, the papers having been signed last week. An unbroken chain of Alice Joyce releases for the coming year is assured.

The renewal of Miss Joyce's contract calls attention to the extraordinary number of releases this young player has had during the last year. Beginning with "Whom the Gods Destroy," which was released on December 18 last, Miss Joyce appeared in eight features during a period of less than eleven months and is now at work on her ninth picture, a Robert W. Chambers story.

Of her releases, in which Harry Morey was featured with her, "Within the Law," and J. Stuart Blackton's "Womandhood, The Glory of the Nation," were super features.

Miss Joyce's career in motion pictures has been one of the real romances of the screen. Before taking up the work she was an illustrator's model and her strikingly beautiful features attracted such attention that she was given a leading role in her first motion picture venture and so belongs in that rather small class of motion picture stars who went to the top of the ladder in one leap without undergoing the laborious climb from the ground. Her style of work has given Miss Joyce a position peculiarly her own. She has a very appealing countenance, a wistful, Madonna-like look being her outstanding characteristic. By some exhibitors she has been called the Mona Lisa of the screen.

Goldwyn Specials Are Booking Well

GOLDWYN is having the good luck with its big special productions that the importance of the pictures warrants, as evidenced by heavy bookings of Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Auction Block," George Loane Tucker's picturization of Hall Caine's big story, "The Manx-Man," and the Ira M. Lowry production, "For the Freedom of the World."

Mr. Beach's pictorial production that ranks as the biggest Rex Beach work yet done for the screen, has been distributed to all of the distributing corporation's offices in North America and is also in Australia in the hands of the Goldwyn representatives, where, according to cabled reports, exhibitors have expressed their delight over the dramatic power of the story.

For diversified interest "The Auction Block" has few, if any, equals in films and the breadth of its appeal will make it one of the biggest sellers on the screen, as it was in the field of modern literature.

The Manx-man Company's bookings of "The Manx-Man" through Goldwyn are climbing with great rapidity. News of a pronounced success in films travels like wild-fire and houses subsidiary to the big first run theaters in zones where "The Manx-Man" has played have been quick to book the production because of the regional prestige already gained.

Marcus Loew made a blanket booking of "The Manx-Man" for his theaters.

Bizeul Is Injured

Jacques Bizeul, who met with a painful automobile accident, narrowly escaping serious injury if not losing his life, is about again and taking full charge of the camera work of "The Marionettes."

These two posters were adopted by the New York Exposition committee.

Irving Cummings Appears in Barrymore Cast

A notable cast has been engaged to support Ethel Barrymore, in her next Metro play, "An American Widow." Heading the list is Irving Cummings, who will have the role opposite Miss Barrymore in this five-act production, directed by Frank Reicher, and adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino from the play by Kellett Chambers.

Mr. Cummings' most recent appearance has been in W. A. Brady's "Rasputin, the Black Monk." For the Fox Company, he has been co-starred recently in three important features with Virginia Pearson, and previous to that played in "The Whip" at the Paragon studio under the direction of Maurice Tourneur.

H. Dudley Hawley, a well known actor of the speaking stage, will make his screen debut with Miss Barrymore in "An American Widow," playing the Earl of Dexminster.

Two Posters Are Accepted for Exposition

Lawrence L. Wilbur and Fred Ma Dan, both of New York City, have submitted acceptable drawings for posters to advertise the Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Grand Central Palace, February 2-10, 1918. More than sixty artists offered drawings and after a long and careful process of elimination only the work of these two artists was accepted.

There were six members on the committee and so excellent were both designs that three members favored one and three the other artist.

Artist Wilbur's drawing in striking colors is a picture with a decided "punch" and shows a director and camera man in action in a manner that instantly catches the eye.

Mr. Ma Dan's sketch is equally attractive, but along different lines. He depict a fat and healthy little baby wearing an army hat and representing the youngest of the great industries, seated on a weather vane and pointing "Over There."

It is symbolic of the fact that the motion picture camera and the film reach everywhere on the four points of the compass,—from the peaceful industrious cities of our own prosperous land to the shell-torn battlefields and devastated towns "Over There." Indeed it brings out potently the thought that it is the film more than any other factor which brings realization of the horrors of war to the American mind.

Walter J. Moore and George I. Cooke, members of the Supply and Equipment Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, will donate the cost of printing thousands of posters made from the two designs. Mr. Moore is vice-president of the H. C. Miner Lithographing Company, and Mr. Cooke is president of the Alpha Lithographing Company.

Has Successful Road Trip

F. J. Flaherty, special representative of Jewel Productions Inc. in Pittsburgh, has returned to that city after a successful two weeks' road trip.

Pictures Are Most Wholesome for Young

YOUTHS OF THE NATION ARE MADE BETTER BY SEEING FILMS

BY ORRIN G. COCKS

Secretary of the National Committee for Better Films

THIS is the puzzle, or they are the puzzle, for all of us.

Most parents insist that they are immature, while society is doubtful just where to class young people from sixteen to twenty years.

This group frequents the motion picture entertainments in large numbers. It comes from all kinds of homes. Many of its members have been working and are economically independent. Others are in school and college and still others have been bound closely to the home.

But all normal young people have this common characteristic—they are impatient of restraint and insist on learning of life through their own experiences.

Advice Is Worse Than Useless

Advice given by those who do not see eye to eye with them is worse than useless.

Now, what is to be the attitude of adults toward this modern attractive form of commercial amusement? What positions may we take which are sensible and which will command the support of the young people?

I believe we must hold two positions, one a personal one which effects our own family, and the second which applies to the young people of all families. The first must be based on all the different influences which have been at work during our children's earlier years.

Even here a wise parent grants a large degree of freedom and encourages full discussion of social and moral issues as equal to equal. Our public policy must fit in to our general attitude toward all forms of recreation and amusement.

Picture Best Indoor Amusement

Compare motion pictures with other indoor amusements for young people, such as dancing, pool, evening and house parties, vaudeville and card parties. The facts available for all demonstrate without question that motion pictures are distinctly more wholesome. It is time to say this and in unmistakable language!

Our young people are now for the first time brought into contact with drama which interprets life far more vividly than books. The knowledge they gain of life from the good, the bad, and the misunderstood people of their own town is never complete. It is given to them, so to speak, in small chunks with little stress on causes and almost no indication of ultimate consequences. Very often, therefore, that which appears horrible to the elders, because they know the ultimate effects, appears most attractive to young people.

You know the town gambler or drunkard, for you have watched him deteriorate for twenty years, but often your boys see only a jolly, hail-fellow-well-met person. Again, you understand the inevitable trend of the sparkling, brainless, flashily dressed girl who runs about the streets, but many of the girls envy her and the boys are fascinated.

The stories thrown on the screen are intensely real to young people. The curtains, the machine, even the actors fade into the background and they live through the experiences depicted. To those of us who are older they are really illusions, the products of skillful writers, acted by cardboard men. We therefore look for technical flaws and items to criticize. This critical point of view is the result of many experiences and has small part in the minds of young people.

Please remember that there is no preaching or advice in the motion picture drama. The story brings its own lesson. In the course of two hours the idea rushes on in a fashion to compel the closest attention to the dramatic climax. The argument is complete, and the emphasis as in life when seen as a whole is overwhelmingly in favor of the good, the innocent and the heroic. This is entirely different from advice offered with the best of intentions by elders.

Embark on "Great Adventure"

We may as well frankly acknowledge that every generation of young people goes out on "the great adventure" during this period between sixteen and twenty. Even though it hurts us to acknowledge it, it is true. The part of wisdom, therefore, appears to be to endorse the motion picture as an aid to the development of character and be close enough to our young people to assist in clearing up their minds when they become confused.

Let's do something constructive!

Why not think out some practical ways of utilizing these motion pictures, which nightly tell their absorbing stories to the young people? All of the following suggestions have been tried with success:

Motion picture clubs can be formed to discuss the motion pictures seen from month to month. Young people can be encouraged to attend the pictures in groups where they will find splendid themes for discussion. all of which are more impersonal than most subjects which are topics of conversation when couples are together.

Family Habit Is Good One

Nothing is quite so effective as developing the family motion picture habit, when parents go with their young people. It is always possible, too, to assist groups of young people in developing a larger amount of taste in their selections.

Finally, dramatic societies can be formed on the basis of the interests of the boys and girls, where they can produce similar plays and think through the parts which have proved of interest at the motion picture show. Let's trust our young people and utilize this greatest of amusements!

Sidney Garrett

Garrett Becomes President of Brockliss Company

Sidney Garrett, at the age of thirty-four, finds himself president of the film exporting business of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, N. Y. He belongs to the new, the youthful, and the aggressive school of film executives, upon whom the industry in this country must rest its hopes of future expansion and success. Born in England, Mr. Garrett had considerable commercial experience in London, and five years ago at Montreal in Canada he was identified with several big industrial undertakings.

Restless, energetic, enterprising and looking for bigger worlds to conquer, Mr. Garrett, in 1916, went to New York and broke into the film game by buying pictures for foreign markets. About the same time Mr. Brockliss established an American branch of his world film distributing business and early this spring the two operators joined forces. Mr. Brockliss has since returned to England, leaving Mr. Garrett here as president of the American branch of the business.

Mr. Garrett has personally handled such big film ideals for abroad as "Intolerance," "The Deemster," "The Barrier," "The Mormon Maid," "Billy West Comedies," "For the Freedom of the World," and many others. He buys pictures for England, France, Italy, the Balkans, China, Japan, for South America, for all the world outside the United States.

He is a good judge of the commercial value of motion pictures and in addition to his position as president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., holds several positions as personal representative for foreign buyers.

In considerably less than a year Mr. Garrett has established himself as a force to be reckoned with in the American film business, with youth and energy and a flawless integrity as his assets.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

When William Stowell introduced them to each other last week at Universal City, Harry Von Meter and William Burress, who are playing prominent roles in "Broadway Love," a Dorothy Phillips Bluebird now in preparation, the two men shook hands so vigorously that Stowell intercepted them to inquire what it was all about. Von Meter and Burress last met twenty-two years ago while playing in dramatic stock in Denver, Colorado, and came together again for the first time in the same cast of a photoplay involving undreamed of employment in those days.

"The Man Who Dared God," newest of Lois Weber productions, required authentic scenes in a copper mining district. To provide them, Miss Weber took her company, headed by William Stowell and Mildred Harris, to Oatman, Arizona, where the Big Jim, Arizona Ray and United Verde copper deposits are being worked.

Miss Elsa Lopez, head of the research department at the Triangle Culver City studios, is encountering unusual difficulties in her search for data on the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Alley of Flashing Spears," soon to be filmed by Triangle. As a part of the story is laid in the eighth century, authentic detailed accounts of early Chinese history are needed by Miss Lopez. These documents are so valuable that she has been unable to find them in the various libraries and Miss Lopez is now seeking some collector of Chinese lore who has the necessary manuscripts.

Irene Hunt, well-known Triangle leading woman who has just completed "The Maternal Spark" under director G. P. Hamilton, is enjoying the finest vacation in years, she declares. Miss Hunt's mother, Madge Whyte, well-known some years ago on the legitimate stage, has arrived from New York and is visiting her daughter at her Hollywood home.

So much confusion has been caused by the spelling of Alma Rubens' name that the Triangle favorite and her mother have decided to change it to the purely phonetic form. Alma's real name is Rueben, but it has appeared persistently in publications as "Ruebens" and "Reubens." To end all controversy the pretty actress in the future will sign herself Alma Rubens.

In "The Little Princess," Mary Pickford's latest production for Artcraft, the film has an added attraction in that it tells the story of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves in an elaborate manner without taking much film. As the girls, clad in their night clothes, sneak into Mary's room, she tells them stories of the Orient, and the romance of Ali Baba is picturized, and though briefly told, it is sumptuously dressed and magnificently set, Mary playing the part of Morgiana. Ludicrous characters are presented, including fierce giants and droll dwarfs, and much humor is extracted from this famous fable.

Elsie Ferguson's latest photoplay, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," released by Artcraft, takes the principals on a trip which nearly circles the globe, including France, Egypt and America. These settings were all specially built in the Artcraft studios and are very realistic. The play is adapted from the book by Mary S. Watts.

Charles Kenyon, one of the best known American playwrights, and author of "Kindling," recently produced by Margaret Illington, has written a film play around William S. Hart, the Thomas H. Ince star, which is being released by Artcraft, entitled "The Silent Man."

Wm. S. Hart used his new horse in "The Silent Man," the Artcraft release of November 26, in which he does some sensational riding. "Fritz," the famous pinto pony, continues to be his favorite mount, though he does not appear in the films. Hart personally trained the successor of "Fritz," who was selected owing to his extraordinary intelligence.

Not satisfied with winning honors as a high class screen actor, Charles Gunn, Triangle film favorite, is trying his hand at scenarios and plays. Gunn, who is now working with Olive Thomas in a new comedy-drama, "Betty Takes a Hand," has already submitted one scenario to the Triangle scenario department and is working on another which he hopes will be a vehicle for Roy Stewart, cowboy star. Before becoming an actor Gunn was a newspaper man and the desire to write has proved irresistible.

The Lasky studio recently had a premature Christmas when Julian Eltinge, Paramount star, distributed gifts to those directly associated with him in his first three productions for Paramount. Most of the men got cuff links, of which they are extremely proud.

John O'Brien, now directing for the Empire All-Star Corporation, says that he is still receiving letters of inquiry about the goat which was supposed to die in the Mary Pickford feature, "Hulda from Holland," which Mr. O'Brien directed. "The goat, 'Gwendolen,' was chloroformed for the picture," says the director, "and recovered very well. She is alive, happy and well and is now living off the fat of the land up in Ulster County, New York State; she was neither mutilated nor killed and, in fact, took part at the Hippodrome in a sketch written for the Actors' Fund."

Can you imagine Olive Thomas in cotton stockings? Well, this is what happened to the Triangle beauty in the earlier scenes of her latest picture, "Betty Takes a Hand," in which she is now appearing. For the first time since the famous beauty left her home near Pittsburgh for New York in the quest of fame and fortune, she donned cotton stockings, but only under protest and at the order of Director Jack Dillon. Her part called for it. Probably her admirers of the days of "The Roof" and "The Follies" won't recognize her incased in plebian cotton. "Betty Takes a Hand" is one of the winning stories in the Photoplay Magazine's recent contest.

Three camels borrowed from the New York Hippodrome for the motion picture production of "Thais," starring Mary Garden, balked in the Fort Lee ferry ship on the way back from the Goldwyn studios and were late for the matinee. It was decided to fine them all their weekly drink of water.

A little fourteen-year-old girl emulating the feats of Helen Holmes, the daring Signal actress, writes from a hospital in Sacramento that she thought it looked easy to hang by the hands from a bridge, while a train passed beneath. She tried it. The little girl used the limb of an apple tree for the bridge, while her small brother played the train. The limb was rotten.

John G. Hawks, a prolific and successful scenario writer, is again on the Thomas H. Ince staff of writers and his first work to receive the approval of the producer is a new picture for Dorothy Dalton, a story of the West in the late fifties. This is Mr. Hawks' sixty-second scenario accepted by Mr. Ince in a little more than two years. This is an uncommon record and represents eleven two-reel stories, three "state right" features and forty-eight five-reelers.

George H. Melford has just rounded out his third year as a director of pictures for Paramount release. He is now under contract for two years more at the Lasky plant in California. During his three years' service, under these auspices, Mr. Melford has made more than thirty productions, all of which have been highly successful pictures. It is an odd fact that Mr. Melford began his fourth year by directing a new film on the identical spot where he began work three years ago on his first Paramount picture, "Young Romance."

George Beban and company under Donald Crisp's direction, are expected back at the Lasky studio shortly. They have virtually completed the new Paramount picture, starring George Beban, "Jules of the Strong Heart," most of which has been filmed at Hoquiam, Washington.

From being merely a delightful subdeb, Marguerite Clark, Paramount star, has become an associate of fairies, ogres, kings and queens, gnomes, elves, etc., etc., in the filming of her forthcoming Christmas picture for Paramount.

Lina Cavalieri Proves Good Sleuth

Metropolitan newspapers last week contained stories of Lina Cavalieri, Paramount star, becoming an involuntary sleuth when she discovered, behind a bureau in her room at the Hotel Netherlands, a velvet bag containing a diamond heart locket, said to be valued at $6,500. This jewel was later identified as part of the loot which "Baron" Karl von Edwards is charged with having stolen from Mrs. Minnie K. Strangman.

According to the testimony of a clerk at the hotel, Mme. Cavalieri caused her room there to be re-arranged some time ago. When she stepped behind a dresser which was moved the first time in several weeks, she stumbled over a bag containing the precious bauble.

The clerk declared that the room had formerly been occupied by von Edwards and the theory is that he disposed of the bag in this way without knowing the valuable nature of its contents. The "Baron" is on trial in General Sessions on the charge of stealing $50,000 worth of Mrs. Strangman's jewels while wooing her.

Triangle Attacks Liquor Evil

"A Case at Law," featuring the youthful character actor, Dick Rosson, and "The Fuel of Life," with Belle Bennett in the leading role, are the Triangle offerings for the week of November 18th.

In "A Case at Law," Triangle has visualized one of the strongest pleas ever made for the suppression of the liquor evil. William Dudley Pelly, the author of the story, has achieved a brilliant piece of writing which points its moral without any tiresome moralizing. His plea is presented through the personalities of a Doctor Saunders (Riley Hatch), who has fought a winning battle against the rum demon, and Jimmy Baggs (Dick Rosson), a youth whose weakness proves both his undoing and his salvation.

Brenon Elaborates Robertson Play

Producer Completes "Empty Pockets" and Work on "The Third Floor Back" Is Progressing Rapidly

HERBERT Brenon has transformed his studio on Hudson Heights into a replica of a Bloomsbury boarding house in London. "Empty Pockets," on which the producer has been working for over two months, is finished as far as the taking of the scenes is concerned, and "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" is already in the process of construction. The first scenes in this new production were taken with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson last week.

While in the original play by Jerome K. Jerome, the entire action took place in the drawing room of a Bloomsbury boarding house, Mr. Brenon shows the lodging house in its entirety. Seventeen sets have been erected—several little ideas that were merely suggested have been brought out at some length. For instance, that attitude taken by the would be aristocratic Mrs. Gilhuly towards her poverty stricken relatives has been elaborated, and where, in the play, her sister and her four little children were merely mentioned, in the picture they will be actually portrayed.

Mr. Brenon's activities are still arduous. Not a day did he leave between pictures. "Empty Pockets" was practically finished on Sunday, and work was commenced the next morning with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson. Owing to the system with which the laboratories are run at the Brenon studious, the cutting of "Empty Pockets" has been progressing during the picture, the first four reels being practically ready at the present time. There yet remains the titling and the cutting of the remaining reels, and the picture will be ready for release.

"Empty Pockets" is a swift moving melodrama, full of human interest and sympathy. It is produced with typical Brenon thoroughness and acted by an exceptionally good cast, with Bert Lytell, Barbara Castleton, Malcolm Williams, who is well known for his work on the stage, and Susanne Willa, Ketty Calanta, Peggy Betts, in the leading roles.

"Grain of Dust" Is in Demand

ALTHOUGH the Ogden Pictures Corporation has just completed its second Lillian Walker production, "The Grain of Dust," and has not as yet started to cut or assemble the sample print, numerous offers have been received from state rights buyers as well as from purchasers of negatives. No offers are being entertained until the production is entirely completed, ready for public showing.

Albert Scowcroft, president of the company, arrived in New York from Ogden, Utah, last Monday, to hold a conference with Lester Park, the general manager, and Jesse J. Goldburg, productions manager, with respect to enlarging the plans of operation, which Mr. Scowcroft had taken up with the board of directors at Ogden.

Mr. Scowcroft stated that the Ogden Pictures Corporation was in the producing of motion pictures to stay and that while the company will exploit, for the present, attractions starring only Lillian Walker, it is expected that other stars will ultimately come under the Ogden banner.

"But," stated Mr. Scowcroft, "the board of directors of the Ogden Pictures Corporation are staid and conservative business men and they do believe that one should learn how to creep before they walk. We are, however, eminently satisfied with the results on 'The Lust of the Ages.'

"First, in order to establish the Ogden trademark and, secondly, to test out the full popularity of Miss Walker as a star, we disposed of 'The Lust of the Ages' at prices that are profitable to us, yet were exceedingly reasonable to state right buyers. We, however, keep in touch with territorial buyers and find that although the production has been released less than two months, every one of them has bookings that cover the full cost of the production to them, together with a fair margin of profit."

Mr. Scowcroft intends to remain in New York until the third Ogden production is under way.

Ryan Sells Hart Re-issues in Texas Territory

Phil L. Ryan, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, paid a profitable little visit to Dallas, Texas, last week and has just returned to his Kansas City office. The Standard has bought the re-issued Wm. S. Hart-Thos. H. Ince two-reel productions from Warner Bros. of New York, who control the original negatives of these films. The Standard's territory comprises the middle-western states, the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. Ryan, in speaking of his trip to the southwest, said that he had noted the enthusiasm evidenced by exhibitors for Hart pictures and felt that these two reelers in view of the present extraordinary demand for short subjects, should command a very ready market with any exchange. It was his intention, he said, to open up an office in the southwest and handle their distribution through a film man acquainted with the conditions in that section. While there he arranged for the distribution of the Hart two-reelers through the Metro exchanges of Texas.

These Hart pictures were made nearly three years ago, at a time when both Hart and his now almost equally famous director, Thos. H. Ince, were both struggling for success. It can be safely said, Mr. Ryan claims, that there is more action in some of these pictures than some five-reel western productions made more recently.

"I believe," says Mr. Ryan, "that Hart and Ince realized, at the time they were making these pictures, that the public would have to be educated to like westerns of the type that is now demonstrated Hart and Ince can make, and they accordingly took every advantage of the opportunities offered by the two-reel length. I was myself surprised at the remarkable amount of story that Hart has crowded into each of these pictures. But possibly Mr. Ince's directorial brain should have the credit for that. It is nearly unnecessary to say that these pictures did much to make 'Bill' Hart. The surprising thing about it is the fact that the 'Bill' of three years ago is the 'Bill' so well-loved by theater-goers today.

"Mother" Is Sought by Mothers' Clubs

An unusual request was received this week by McClure Pictures, which company is offering for state rights consumption the six part George Loane Tucker production "Mother." A letter from the President of the Federated Mothers' Clubs of America asks a showing of the Tucker feature before the members of the various branches of the organization, which are located in the principal cities of the United States.

In her communication, the leader of this movement which numbers among its membership women of all walks of life, states that the McClure picture "Mother" carries a message for every woman in the land.

Arrangements will be made, if possible, whereby Elisabeth Risdon, star of "Mother," will appear at the showings in New York City, making a short address on the subject dealt with in the Tucker feature. Miss Risdon at present is starring in the William Faversham production of "Misalliance" by George Bernard Shaw, current at the New Broadhurst Theater.

"Mother," which was filmed from the famous novel by Eden Philpott, deals with the theme of mother-love. The picture is a human document, depicting tenderly the hopes and fears of a fond mother for an erring son and points out a strong moral to the children of the present generation.

Paralta Plays Ready for Releasing

Following the announcement that Paralta Plays would be released through the newly formed W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, comes news that Paralta productions would start releasing through this new organization beginning the middle of November.

The first production to be released will be the visualization of Peter B. Kyne's romantic story of adventure, "A Man's Man," in which J. Warren Kerrigan will be seen as the star. This production will be shown in seven parts. The early part of the story takes place in the western part of the United States, while the locale of the remainder of the story is in the imaginary Republic of Sobrante, Central America. It is predicted that "A Man's Man" will strongly appeal to the women patrons of the theaters.

About December 1, is the time set for the release of Bessie Barriscale's initial Paralta Play, "Madam Who," a secret service classic laid in the period of the Civil War. This production is founded on Harold MacGrath's story of the same name. Jeanne Beaufort loses her father and two brothers in war; she becomes a military spy and invades the lines of the enemy. The story is fast moving and punchful, and carries with it an element of romance and mystery which is not cleared up until the last few feet of the production. Miss Barriscale is supported by Ed Coxen as John Armitage—Howard Hickman as Henry Morgan—Joseph J. Dowling as Parson John Kennedy, and David M. Hartman as Allan Crandall.

Henry B. Walthall has recently completed his initial Paralta Play—"His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance, which will be ready for release about the middle of December. When this story appeared in book form it was commented upon by the judiciary and political reformers throughout the country as a moral preachment asking the uplift of political conditions in America. The story is that of a shyster lawyer who becomes an upright judge under the refining influence of a noble woman of high social rank. Mr. Walthall appears in the role of the shyster lawyer who is assisted in his underhanded methods by Roxana Frisbee, an adventuress, played by Miss Mary Charleson, who played opposite Mr. Walthall in productions of the Essanay Company. Miss Lois Wilson will interpret the role of Lora Nelson, the young woman whose innate forces awakened the spirit of manhood in the crafty lawyer who later becomes an upright judge of the supreme court of New York.

J. Warren Kerrigan will appear in his second Paralta Play—"Turn of a Card," written by Frederick Chaplin after which will come Bessie Barriscale in "Rose O' Paradise," written by Grace Miller White, authoress of "Tess of the Storm Country."

Rapf Picture Completed

Harry Rapf's "The Struggle Everlasting," an allegorical seven-reel feature picture, was completed last week. This is the most ambitious production so far presented by Rapf, representing, according to reports, a much larger expenditure than any other production he has done.

The cast, which is headed by Florence Reed, also includes such well known stars and screen players as Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, E. J. Radcliff, Wellington Plater, J. Albert Hall, Fred C. Jones and Edwin Hoyt.

Negotiations are now under way for a Broadway theater, said to be either the Strand or the Rialto, for a trade showing of the "The Struggle Everlasting." This will probably occur within a week or so and the entire trade will be invited.

According to his present plans Rapf intends to release "The Struggle Everlasting" on the states rights plan, but he may sell the picture outright, as he did with several others.

Paramount Pictures Go on Open Market

All Productions Released Prior to August 5 Are Offered Without Territorial Restrictions

THE announcement is made by the Paramount Pictures Corporation that a list of approximately three hundred notable five-reel features, in many cases with such stars as Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, and others and embracing some of the most successful films that have ever been released, is now available without territorial restrictions upon the open booking market.

These films are those which were released on the program system prior to the adoption on August 5th last of the Star Series Selective booking plan. There are numerous plays in which Mary Pickford starred before the advent of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, which is now distributing her productions. Among these are: "Such a Little Queen," "Cinderella," "Mistress Nell," "Fanchon the Cricket," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "Little Pal," "Rags," "Esmerelda," "The Girl of Yesterday," "Madame Butterfly," "The Foundling," "Poor Little Pepina," "Hulda from Holland," and "The Eternal Grind." Each of these photoplays at the time of release was extremely popular.

Many Marguerite Clark Pictures

The Marguerite Clark features embrace among others the following: "Wildflower," "The Crucible," "The Goose Girl," "Gretna Green," "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "Seven Sisters," "Helene of the North," "Still Waters," "The Prince and the Pauper," "Mice and Men," "Out of the Drifts," "Molly Make Believe," "Silks and Satins," "Little Lady Eileen," "Miss George Washington," "Snow White," "The Fortunes of Fifi," and "The Valentine Girl."

Pauline Frederick is represented in the list by such plays as "Sold," "Zaza," "Bella Dona," "Lydia Gilmore," "The Spider," "Audrey," "The Moment Before," "The World's Great Snare," "Ashes of Embers," "Nanette of the Wilds," "The Slave Market," "Sapho," "Sleeping Fires," "Her Better Self," and "The Love that Lives."

Other Stars Are Represented

Aside from these there are dozens of other productions with stars of such calibre as Marie Doro, Fritzi Scheff, Victor Moore, Hazel Dawn, Elsie Janis, Blanche Sweet, Myrtle Stedman, John Barrymore, Violet Heming, Laura Hope Crews, Lenore Ulrich, Charlotte Walker, Geraldine Farrar in the memorable production of "Carmen," Edna Goodrich, Fannie Ward, Lou-Tellegen, Theodore Roberts, Anna Held, Constance Collier, Donald Brian, Vivian Martin, Dustin Farnum, Irene Fenwick, George Beban, Mae Murray, Kathlyn Williams, Mme. Petrova, Ann Pennington, Wallace Reid, Anita King, Louise Huff, Max Figman, May Irwin, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Reed, Macklyn Arbuckle, Rita Jolivet, Ina Claire, John Mason, Peggy Hyland, and many others.

In the list is also included "The Cheat," starring Fannie Ward and in which Sessue Hayakawa, the famous Japanese star, leaped into favor. His other films, including "Alien Souls" and "The Honorable Friend," are among the other pictures available now on the open market.

Ann Pennington in "The Rainbow Princess," "Susie Snowflake," and others, are included.

Small Exhibitors Profit

There are doubtless hundreds of the smaller exhibitors who had not regarded it as within the range of their possibilities to exhibit such pictures as these, owing to the prices at which they were sold. This is altered now and there is no reason why the smallest showman in the smallest community may not profitably present these pictures, which afford unlimited material for exploitation.

Advertising and publicity aids on these pictures are available from the various exchanges.

Hold Trade Showings

TRADE showings of the new Tromas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," are being held this week in several eastern cities in which the U. S. Booking Corporation has branch offices.

The new spectacle was presented for the first time in public at the Fenway Theater, Boston, before a large gathering of Massachusetts exhibitors. The timeliness of the Ince picture, which reveals for the first time on the screen the secrets of the Zeppelins, which Germany is using in warfare, impressed the exhibitors. After the showing, A. Lincoln Ehrgott, Massachusetts representative for the U. S. Corporation, signed contracts for a pre-release run at the Fenway Theater for a week, beginning November 12. There is a lively demand for the picture all through New England.

Repeatedly the audience burst into applause at the picture's plea for world democracy. The consensus among those present was that Mr. Ince had surpassed in "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" many of the biggest scenes in "Civilization," which heretofore has ranked as the high water mark of his cinema accomplishment.

Exhibitors from New York, Brooklyn, Staten Island and other nearby sections, together with many from New Jersey, gave the production their approval.

Pennsylvania exhibitors will see "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" at trade showings to be held this week in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

The distribution of U. S. subjects in all these territories, except New Jersey, will be handled from the Hoffman-Foursquare branches. The New Jersey territory will be entrusted to the Gersten Exchange, with headquarters in the Candler building, New York.

Nearly All Rights Sold

Acting through Chas. Rosenthal, of San Francisco, Peter C. Crown, of Dallas, Texas, purchased the rights to the Ogden Pictures Corporation's production, "The Lust of the Ages," for the territory of Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

This sale completed the entire world's territory, with the exception of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, and the Atlanta territory. Negotiations are pending on the outstanding territories.

Pictures Pace Is the Fastest

M. H. Hoffman Says Quick Thinking and Action Are Required to Keep Abreast of Industry

SWIFT though the pace is in many twentieth century industries, in none apparently does it attain the speed that prevails in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. According to M. H. Hoffman, of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, the keenest judgment and quickest moves are required to acquire and maintain leadership in this fifth industry of America.

Mr. Hoffman has previously stated that rightly administered economy is one of the prime essentials for the unwavering progress of the motion picture business.

And in this consistent appeal for economy in the expenditure of money in producing and distributing pictures, Mr. Hoffman makes one notable exception—an exception wherein he maintains that it is extravagance not to pay substantialy for what is the heart and soul of a picture. This expenditure, he declares, is in the purchase of original stories by distinguished authors, or plays or novels.

"The very foundation of motion pictures is the good story," asserts Mr. Hoffman. "Provided with that, the director is fortified at the outset, and with it he is enabled—with an adequate cast, photographers, lighting, technical heads and settings—to produce a picture that will do credit to the organization back of it, and to the industry.

"I cannot too strongly emphasize the mistake of seeking to save money in the purchase of a script. It is fatal; yet despite this unquestionable fact, we see continually the effects of such efforts toward economy which, fundamentally, is the most shortsighted thing any producer can do.

"The sooner producers look squarely in the eye conditions that must be accepted to turn out first-class product the sooner will the average rise to that level, which, once reached, will benefit all in the industry—distributors and exhibitors as well as producers.

"For the better the average of the product, the stronger will be its appeal to the public. So with the number of patrons steadily added to, all who in any way cater to them must profit. Let producers weigh well these facts, and welcome the chance to purchase a fine story (whether it be original, or in play or novel form) and be ready to save himself money in the end, even though he pay a good price for it."

Trying to Save Electric Current

The question of electric lighting in its relations to the motion picture industry was taken up with Dr. Harry A. Garfield, the Federal fuel administrator, last week in Washington, by a committe of two representing the latter industry.

Edward Earl, secretary of the Nicholas Power Company of New York, and J. H. Hallberg of New York, vice-president of the United Theater Equipment Corporation, went over the matter carefully with Fuel Administrator Garfield. Messrs. Earl and Hallberg visited Dr. Garfield as representatives of the War Cooperative Committee of the Motion Picture Industry.

This committee is making a study of the lighting question in connection with the picture industry. They believe that a large amount of current is being wasted which could be saved by readjustments which they suggested. The fuel administration is obtaining data with a view to co-operating with this committee if it is found that savings in fuel can be made.

Southern States for "Raffles" Are Sold First

The Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tenn., has purchased the first block of territory, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, for the big open market production, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," in which John Barrymore is starred.

This is the first time in the experience of the selling agents, Hiller and Wilk, that the southern territory of any production was sold before any other part of the country.

"Persuasive Peggy" Rights Are All Sold

Mayfair Film Corporation, 10 Wall street, New York City, advise that the entire foreign rights of the six part Mayfair production "Persuasive Peggy" have been disposed of. This is a record in celerity.

Shallenberger and Priest, Times Building, New York, handled the sales of this production.

Complete Booking Force

With the engagement of P. E. Meyer and A. J. O'Neill, the sales force of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation for the Metropolitan District is practically completed. Mr. Meyer will serve as resident manager of the New York Exchange, which will be located in the Hoffman Four Square Headquarters, at 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. O'Neill, who will be in charge of the Brooklyn distribution, will also make his headquarters in the Hoffman Exchange. Both will be under the supervision of Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the booking corporation.

Trimble Directs Petrova

Madame Petrova in the second of her eight pictures to be distributed through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has chosen Larry Trimble as her director. Work on the new Petrova production was started almost immediately after the final scenes of "Daughter of Destiny" had been shot and the picture is now well under way at the Petrova studios.

Mr. Trimble, who was born in Robbinston, Maine, and educated at the leading state university of New England, had a varied career before entering the field of motion picture work. After leaving college he formed a lumber company, but forsook the dry world of business to write magazine stories and scenarios in which profession he quickly gained an enviable reputation. He is the author of some of the earliest great successes of the Vitagraph Company of America, with which organization he began his screen career in the year 1908. He produced the famous Florence Turner vehicle "Auld Lang Syne" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

At the formation of the Florence Turner Picture Company in 1912, he left the Vitagraph Company to become managing director of the new organization.

He directed the production of Rex Beach's famous novel "The Barrier," ranked among the eight great productions made during the current year. He was engaged as Mme. Petrova's director immediately after he finished "The Spreading Dawn," a new Goldwyn offering starring Jane Cowl.

Milwaukee Theaters Take High Rank

Business and Residence Sections of the City Are Well Supplied With Good Picture Houses

REVIEWING the advance of the amusement houses of the city of Milwaukee, a writer in the Free Press, a newspaper of that city, has the following to say, which shows how motion picture theaters have contributed to the advancement of the municipality:

"In the category of theaters and theatrical productions it is no exaggeration to say that Milwaukee easily takes rank with any city of its size in the country. This may be a broad statement in view of the fact that this city is but a few hours' distance from what is termed the metropolis of the middle west. But it is a truth.

"New York has its Broadway, its 'White Way,' and Milwaukee has its Grand avenue and Third street, to say nothing of other streets which hold prominent playhouses, and which are literally ablaze with light when night comes on and the hour for amusement seekers is ripe.

"These streets are 'White Ways' just as much as dear old Broadway is a 'White Way.' The title means nothing, as a matter of fact. If it did Milwaukee would be heralded far and wide, for the reason that if white lights have anything to do with the making of a city Milwaukee would be famed the world over.

"Theatrical managers have not been slow to take advantage of the fact, however, that a blaze of glory in front of a playhouse is an added attraction—to use a press agent phrase. Nor have they been slow to take advantage of the fact that Milwaukeeans want productions which are up to the standard of other big cities in the country. And when there is a demand there must of a necessity be a supply. And Milwaukee gets what it demands.

"The growth of playhouses and moving picture theaters here has been almost phenomenal within the last few years. It is an easy matter for the playgoer to recall the time when but one first class legitimate theater existed, one burlesque house, and one or two vaudeville theaters, which were only ordinary. But all this has changed.

"First-class moving picture theaters are sprinkled plentifully about the city and suburbs. For a time they sprung up like mushrooms. Any vacant store was a prospective site for a 'movie' theater. Then with the coming of the better class of pictures, pictures in which stars of international reputation played an important part, the old 'store' theaters gave way for the elaborate palaces downtown and elsewhere.

"They were not makeshift theaters. They were theaters in which much capital was invested. They were well appointed as to detail; service to patrons was one of the first things considered, and comfort was not forgotten.

"And thus was the evolution of the moving picture theaters brought about. It was because of a demand for better things; better comfort, better photoplays and better service. This is the theatrical condition in Milwaukee today insofar as this class of theaters is concerned."

Transforms Theater Into "Big Top"

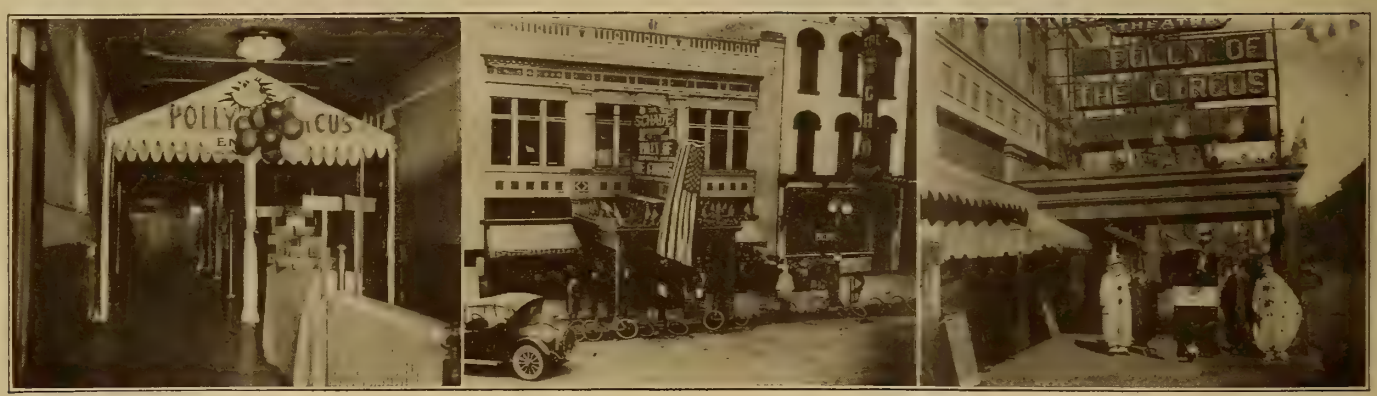
Owners of Picture Playhouse Meet Success in Novel Advertisement of "Polly of the Circus"

FOR the two-day run of "Polly of the Circus," the Schade Theater of Sandusky, O., made their amusement house a veritable circus tent. The lobby was made to look as much as possible like the entrance to the "big top," with toy balloons, peanuts, pop and other circus refreshments on sale. Inside the theater venders dispensed all the things that are sold to circus patrons.



In front of the theater a ballyhoo attracted crowds, and about the streets of the downtown section of Sandusky, two clowns walked about advertising the attractions at the Schade. One of the funmakers led about with him a tame duck.

Typical circus handbills of brilliant orange color were scattered broadcast about the town, announcing the coming of the "Bigger and Better Than Ever" circus, with 100 clowns, 1,000 horses and ponies, 1,200 people, 20 elephants, 50 educated camels and 100 cages of wild animals. The bills proclaimed "1,000 Thrills—1,000 Smiles."

The result of this unique advertising plan was a packed house at every performance.

Theaters Bid for Ince Spectacle

After a week of spirited bidding among exhibitors of Providence, R. I., the management of the Strand Theater, of that city, obtained the first run privilege for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle announced by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation as its initial release. It will begin a week's engagement at the Strand on December 5.

Rothapfel Will Direct Chicago Theater

New York's Premier Exhibitor on Trip to Coast Stops Off in Mid-West Metropolis for Visit

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, the most heard-of moving picture exhibitor in the United States, stopped off in Chicago one day last week long enough to make an important announcement of his future plans. Mr. Rothapfel said the near future would see him directing a moving picture theater in the middle western metropolis.

"The plans are still formative," said the noted eastern exhibitor, "and because of the tremendous cost of construction, work will not be started until these abnormal building conditions right themselves.

"The house which I expect to open in this city will be larger and better than either of my New York theaters. In fact I hope to make it the model moving picture house of America."

The weight of Mr. Rothapfel's remark is apparent to anyone who has visited his Rialto theater in New York. His playhouse is conceded to be the acme of moving picture exhibition, and the long lines of ticket purchasers who overflow the sidewalks in front of both his New York theaters testify to the popularity of his plan of showing films.

While in Chicago Mr. Rothapfel was suffering with a severe cold. This did not suppress his enthusiasm over his projected Chicago theater. According to his present plans, the erection of the building will be by Chicago interests under his supervision, and the theater when completed will be under his direction.

Mr. Rothapfel is going to the Pacific coast on a trip that combines business with pleasure. He expects to do some wild animal hunting, in company with Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks.

Two Michigan Houses Are Models

Two of the most interesting spots in Jackson, Michigan, are the Majestic and Colonial theaters. These are owned and operated by the Majestic-Colonial Theater Company, Inc., of which W. S. McClaren is manager.

The Majestic, advertised as "The Theater Beautiful," plays Vitagraph, Selznick, Metro, World and K. E. S. E. pictures and the best road attractions. It was formerly a $30,000 legitimate house but it took to pictures at 10, 15 and 25 cents with Mr. McClaren's management to start the people that way. Mr. McClaren uses a splendid orchestra of ten pieces and an organ at the Majestic and girl ushers, with girls also on the doors.

The Colonial, called "The Pride of the East Side," was the first suburban house of the city, built three years ago. It seats 300 and is doing good business.

The company issues a very attractive little magazine, weekly, called the "Weekly Film News." It contains eight pages attractively illustrated.

Mr. McClaren, a theater man of the best type, opened the first picture house at Chelsea, Michigan, nine years ago. Previous to that he was a newspaper man on the Ann Arbor Daily News. Those are two of the reasons why he knows so well what people like and what sort of things to give them that will keep bringing them back to the Majestic and the Colonial.

Pictures Vs. Booze

The same day that moving picture theaters of Bucyrus, Ohio, announced that admission prices had been advanced to 15 cents, announcement was made that the price of whisky per drink had been raised to 20 cents. The moral is obvious, and besides one would have five cents left.

New Theater Costs More Than $2,000,000

More than $2,000,000 was invested in the site and building which houses the California Theater, opened the first of this month in San Francisco. The building, itself, is strikingly different from other structures that face Market and Fourth streets. It is of pure Gothic design and covers a corner lot that measures one hundred by seventy feet.

There are no steps in the theater, all the entrances to the balcony being gradual inclines. The balcony is unusually large, accommodating 1,500 seats.

From the theatrical point of view the corner of Market and Fourth streets has only one equal in the United States. The relative value as well as the tremendous traffic that centers at the intersection of Stockton, Ellis, Fourth and Market streets compares with the famous Rialto Theater in New York, at Broadway, Forty-second and Sixth avenue. Nearly every carline in the city is within a short distance of the entrance of the California Theater and the location is in the heart of the shopping district, which is considered a very large factor in the success of the downtown moving picture theaters.

Kiddies Own Picture Theater For a Day

For one day children of Independence, Kas., owned the Beldorf Theater. They came in droves as the guests of little Bobbie Bittmann, whose papa is the mayor of Independence. They came in such numbers that the Girl Scouts who were acting as ushers were unable to seat them all. So part of the audience was kept outside while the pictures were run off. A second and third showing were given before all the children had been permitted to see the show.

Seating Capacity Increased

The Orpheum, a motion picture theater in Williamsport, Pa., recently was reopened after the entire interior of the auditorium had been done over. A new front was constructed for the playhouse and additional seats were installed. E. C. Wright, the manager, went to considerable expense to put the house in artistic shape for the winter season.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

Motor Belt Slips

I have been annoyed by the varying of the power transmitting qualities of my motor belts due to the varying of the temperature and humidity of the air in my operating room. On damp, cool days the belts slip considerably, making it difficult to maintain the speed of the machine especially when opening the show; while on warm days no trouble is experienced. Can you outline a treatment for belts which will make them impervious to moisture and cause them to pull evenly at all times? —H. H. B., Penn.

There are several different kinds of belt dressing used on belts which are recommended very highly but I have found that when putting on a new belt, the best result is obtained by dipping the new belt in kerosene oil and then wipe it as dry as possible. This would not only eliminate the slipping of the belt on the machine but will preserve the belt and make it wear about twice as long as the ordinary belt does. Do not let the belt soak in the oil but dip it in and take it right out and then wipe it dry. Try this and I think you will have no more trouble. Use a new belt.

Difficulties in Threading Machine

I recently came into contact with a Simplex machine for the first time, having always operated the Power's. There is only one machine in the booth, which necessitates a pause in the performance while each succeeding reel is being threaded. This threading therefore must be done as quickly as possible, and I was greatly chagrined at first at the veritable impossibility of threading the film into the machine in frame so that the framing lever need not be moved nor the film position at the aperture examined before returning the picture to the screen.

This difficulty can be overcome in the following way: Examine the film leader and determine approximately the place you desire to be in position near or over the aperture when the machine is started. Now, using pen and white ink, trace over the dividing lines between the pictures for a distance of four or five pictures on the emulsion slide. By trial in the machine determine at what point in the path of the intermittent sprocket rim the dividing line should be placed in relation to a perpendicular plane imagined through the center of the intermittent sprocket shaft in order that the film at the aperture may be in frame. After a little practice just the right amount of film can be drawn from the upper reel to bring the marked portion on to the intermittent sprocket with a proper sized upper loop. The dividing line can quickly and unfailingly be placed on the sprocket so that the film will be in frame with the aperture. L. P., Mich.

Your plan for placing the film in frame at the aperture is all right as far is it goes, but I believe that an easier and more exact way is to have a small two candle power lamp hung at the side of the lens so that the lamp may be moved over in front of the lens when threading up and by raising the fire shutter you can see at once whether the film is in frame or not.

There is one objection to your way of framing the film—it will take a lot of practice to place the film on the intermittent at the right place so that the loop will be the proper size and the film in frame at the aperture. One sprocket hole over or under at the intermittent sprocket will throw the film out of frame at the aperture.

Worn Commutator Gives Trouble

I am an operator working in a booth with two machines and a generator set. I am having trouble with the commutator on the generator. The generator is a sixty-volt, fifty-ampere, and has been in use for about one year. The commutator has worn down where the brushes ride on the commutator. I had to put in new brushes about two months ago and I notice that the grooves are wearing more since I put the new brushes in than they did before. What is the cause for the grooves in the commutator and what can be done to remedy the trouble? A. F., Ill.

The first thing to do to remedy your trouble would be to have the commutator turned down. Have a first class electrical repair shop do this work for you, or if you have no repair shop in your city, send the armature to a first class machinist and have him do it. After having the commutator turned down and the armature replaced in the proper place, examine the armature and be sure that it has end play of at least one-eighth of an inch. If the machine is not sitting perfectly level the armature will not have the end play. The end play is very necessary, as it tends to prevent the brushes from cutting into the commutator as they have done in your case. See that the brushes are neither too hard or too soft and that there is not too much tension on the brushes. See that the brushes fit perfectly to the commutator. In installing new brushes, fit the brush in the brush holder and then place a piece of fine sand paper between the brush and the commutator with the rough side of the paper to the brush. Draw the paper back and forth across the end of the brush until the brush takes the same curve as the commutator. Never use emery cloth on the commutator or brush, use fine sand paper.

New Shutter Gets Out

I have one question that I wish that you would answer for me. I have been using one Simplex machine for over two years, and last week the manager had another Simplex machine put in the booth to be used with the first one. For the first night or two it worked all right but since then I have been having trouble with the shutter. The shutter will not stay in time. When I start the machine it will be in time but it soon begins to get out and by the end of the reel it is streaking very badly. I have tightened the set screw on the collar as tight as I can but it seems to get out of time just the same. What is the cause of this? Kindly tell me what to do to stop it. The manager seems to think that it is my fault, but I have tried everything that I know to stop it and have not succeeded, so kindly help me out if you can.

Your shutter trouble is caused from one or both of these two things: either the shutter is slipping on the shutter shaft or the set screw that holds the shaft to the spiral shutter gear (G-117-G) is not seated properly in the shutter shaft and is allowing the shutter shaft to slip. Take out the small set screw in the spiral gear (G-117-G) and remove the shutter shaft. Notice near the end of the shaft that there is a small counter sunk hole. Replace the shaft and place this counter sunk hole in the shaft exactly in line with the screw hole in the spiral gear. Replace the screw and see that the screw is down flush with the edge of the face of the spiral gear. The shutter shaft with the Simplex comes separate from the mechanism and in assembling it care must be taken that the set screw in the spiral gear is properly seated in the shaft, otherwise the screw might work a trifle loose from vibration and allow the shaft to slip. Next examine the shutter to see whether it is perfectly tight on the shutter shaft. Take a small rag and wrap it around the shaft as close to the mechanism as possible and then with a pair of pliars or tongs hold the shaft firmly and try the shutter to see whether it is tight on the shaft. Use the rag on the shaft so that the jaws of the pliars or tongs will not mar the shaft and hold the shaft as near the mechanism as possible so that there will be no strain on the shaft to spring it. I have seen one or two cases where it was impossible to set a shutter tight on the shaft, with the set screw. If you find that that is the trouble in your case, remove the shutter from the shaft and then remove the set screw from the spider and then remove the inner bushing from the spider. You will find a counter sunk hole in this bushing for the set screw. Drill this hole through the bushing. Assemble the shutter and time. If you should have any further trouble with the shutter you can file a small flat place on the shutter shaft at the point where the set screw touches the shaft, but I do not think that you will find this necessary.

White A. C. Special Carbons

For Motion Picture Work

Give a Pure White, Flickerless and Noiseless Light

Require Minimum Operating Adjustment

The new White A. C. Special Carbon is a complete remedy for all of those troubles which the operator has hitherto contended with in A. C. operation. The annoying accompaniment of flickering light, roaring noise and dissatisfied audiences has been completely eliminated.

Many operators have been able to convince their friends that they were using direct current, so steady was the light given by this new carbon. It remains steady even when any other light would show a jumpy or flickering effect due to fluctuations of the voltage. The special construction of this carbon takes care of these variations in a way that no light source which must be worked close to its limiting voltage possibly can.

This quiet burning and steady white light reduces the necessary adjustment of these carbons to a minimum. A. C. operators are unanimous in feeling that the White A. C. Special has given alternating current a new lease on life in the motion picture industry.

"Snap Judgment"

Latest William Russell American-Mutual Picture, Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN "Snap Judgment," as the title suggests, William Russell again has a comedy-drama vehicle. It is western in setting and is a speedy, well presented story, with plenty of comedy and mix-ups to entertain an audience which either likes westerns, comedy-drama or Russell, or all three. The star plays a dual role. The story is simple, but well suited for its purpose. Direction, acting, settings and photography are all good. In short, this is a clever, pleasing play of the lighter sort.

Adda Gleason and Francelia Billington play opposite Russell in his two roles. Others in the cast are Charles Newton, Harvey Clark, Perry Banks, Clarence Burton, Ashton Dearholt and little Ruth Everdale. Edward Sloman directed.

The Story: Jimmie Page is a wild and uncertain chap—lovable and a good sport, but utterly undependable regarding the prosaic duties of life. He even forgets to wake up on the day of his wedding.

Jimmie's father is a pillar of society, as is Marah Manning. Marah has undertaken the task of persuading Jimmie to settle down. The story opens with Marah waiting for James—trousseau, preacher and guests ready.

But James is snoring happily. He awakens, realizes things, and hustles away in a taxi. His journey is interrupted when he intervenes in a hold-up, rescuing a western cattle man, only to be arrested as one of the robbers. He is released by Marah and from jail, which changes the locale of the story.

Jimmie accompanies his cattle friend to Arizona, where dwells "Arizona Pete," a dead shot and a bad man and Jimmie's physical counterpart. Pete abducts Katie, the daughter of the owner of the Lone Star saloon, fleeing to the hills. Shortly after Jimmie saunters into the saloon and is mistaken for the bad man. He is arrested and later is assisted to escape from jail by Phoebe, a girl of the dance hall.

Meanwhile, Marah, who has learned that Jimmie was not to blame for spoiling her wedding program, takes dad with her to Arizona on a hunt for James. They are held up by Pete and suppose him to be James, playing a joke. Marah is detained and her father is sent back to town for ransom money.

The sheriff, thinking Jimmie to be Pete, pursues him. The trail leads to Pete's cave, where the couples have gotten themselves properly sorted, Phoebe discarding Jimmie for Pete, who is not such a bad fellow after all.

Dad arrives with the money to pay the ransom, but finds that Marah is more a prisoner than ever, said prison being Jimmie's heart, and the delayed wedding is held after everything has been arranged to the satisfaction of all concerned.

"France in Arms"

Five Reels of Official French War Pictures, Pathe Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

HERE is an especially worth-while offering if you wish a war picture. It is a skillfully presented resume of the building up and present condition of the French army. It opens and closes with brief scenes of General Joffre conversing with General Pershing and the intervening five reels picturize the supposed description the former gives of French military conditions.

Several scenes of the training of the recruits begin the description. Then there are complete and very interesting pictures of the various kinds of artillery, tanks and aeroplanes, types used early in the war and their later changes, information which cannot help giving everyone a clearer idea of the business of war. In addition to this technical material, there are dramatic action scenes, troops going "over the top," the bringing in of prisoners and the wounded, aeroplane conflicts, in one of which a German plane is seen disabled and falling to its destruction.

All vital phases of military activities are included. The building of lines of communication, of defenses and bridges, the barracks, cantonments and hospitals, the manufacture of munitions, inflation of the observation balloons and scenes taken from them, all are included in the offering. It is so packed with worth-while information that there is no chance of its dragging in interest.

The views are put together in a clever manner. The photography is brilliant throughout. The release is one you can recommend highly to any intelligent audience. It is extraordinarily fine.

"Please Help Emily"

Empire All-Star Feature With Ann Murdock, Mutual Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a delightful comedy drama which you may confidently expect will entertain your audience, of whatever type it be. It is taken from a well known stage play and it stars Ann Murdock, two reasons why it should draw a good audience. And it will surely delight every patron.

The plot is full of complications and one is funnier than the other. The humor is spontaneous and the action never drags. The situations are very clever and the players fit their roles excellently. We too seldom see a picture which is so clever in every way. Lines from the play form good subtitles. The photography and settings too are good. Dell Henderson directed.

Ann Murdock is excellent as the harum-scarum Emily and makes her a likeable and entertaining youngster. Rex McDougall's Richard Trotter is good, and Ferdinand Gottschalk as Threadgold, a suitor of another type, adds to the fun. The whole cast deserves credit, not forgetting the very important little dog.

November 19 is the release date.

The Story: Emily is a harum-scarum sort of a girl whose thoughtless pranks get her into all sorts of embarrassing situations. Professor Delmar, her father, is suddenly called away, and has to visit Egypt in the interests of his profession. Knowing Emily's wildness, he decided to place her in the care of Judge and Mrs. Lethbridge, who are old friends of his. Things immediately begin to happen. Emily is pursued by two men in particular, and many in general.

Trotter, one of the ardent pursuers, has proved himself to be a good friend of Emily's on many occasions, such as rescuing her from policemen who have arrested her for speeding and such things as that and Emily instinctively turns to him for protection. Herbert Threadgold is the other ardent pursuer, a little pest, proposing to her on every possible and impossible occasion. There is a club dance at which Threadgold is to receive his final answer. Trotter, preferring a game of cards to seeing Emily surrounded by a crowd of men, as she always is, makes arrangements to have an all night session at the club.

Emily meets an old friend at the dance who proposes going to a cabaret. Emily jumps at the chance and slips off. Judge Lethbridge misses his charge and soon the whole place is in an uproar over the absence. Threadgold sets the police on her trail, declaring she has been abducted. Emily, meanwhile realizes she will get into a row, and decided to go to Trotter's apartment relying on him to get her out of her plight. Trotter is not home so Emily—tired out—goes to bed in his room.

Meanwhile the Judge continues to rave while Mrs. Lethbridge, trying to make things easier for Emily, says she has gone to visit Aunt Geraldine who has the mumps.

Trotter arrives home, learns what has happened from Emily and starts out to square matters. They all go over to Aunt Geraldine, who is indignant over her supposed sickness.

Emily and Trotter decide to go to the Nassau Hotel at Long Beach for dinner and Emily tries to persuade Trotter to stay until the next day, but he refuses. Then Emily, bribes a waiter to steal her dog. She simply must have a swim and will refuse to leave until Fido is found. Then Aunt Geraldine and the rest of the party arrive on the scene only to be arrested for Emily's abduction, a result of little Threadgold's activities. To add insult to injury Aunt Geraldine is put in the fumigating ward because of the mumps.

After many experiences they are finally released and everything is cleared, the story ending with Emily rewarding Trotter with her heart and hand.

"I Will Repay"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released November 12. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A DELIGHTFUL picture has been made from O. Henry's story "A Municipal Report"—in fact one of the best which has yet been made from the works of that versatile writer. Some of the famous O. Henry style has been lost in the picturization, but in the main it follows the original story and the result is a clean, sweet picture with plenty of humor and pathos and some dramatic moments. The unswerving fidelity and devotion of an old negro servant for his "missis" forms the theme of the picture and a pretty love interest has been pleasingly interwoven.

Beautiful southern mansions have been used for some of the settings and the introduction of numerous pickannies adds to the charm of the southern atmosphere. It is a picture which leaves one decidedly well pleased at the finish as it appeals to one's finer feelings, and patrons will not be disappointed with it even if they are familiar with the original story.

Corinne Griffiths plays delightfully the part of the southern beauty. She convincingly looks the part. George Forth makes a manly figure of Roger Kendall, and Arthur Donaldson, Mary Maurice and William Dunn are splendid in their respective roles.

The story: Roger Kendall is sent by his newspaper to Nashville to obtain the exclusive rights to the works of one Azeles Adair, a coming writer. Kendall gives Caesar, the colored hack driver at the depot, a torn dollar bill, and later is surprised to see it in the possession of Miss Adair when she gives it to a servant with instructions to buy some tea. Later, after Kendall has heard quite a commotion in the hall, she tells him that she cannot offer him tea, after all. A short time later Kendall again sees the torn dollar bill in the possession of Major Caswell, the dissolute town drunkard, who tries to make the acquaintance of Kendall in the bar at the hotel.

Kendall makes the acquaintance of Virginia Rodney, and, as Miss Adaire is taken ill and cannot receive callers for a while, he has a chance to spend much pleasant time in her company. He learns that Major Caswell is Miss Adaire's husband.

Realizing that Miss Adaire is in need of money, Kendall gives her fifty dollars to bind a contract. Caswell oversees the transaction, and, after a struggle, obtains the money and departs to a saloon to buy drinks. Caesar hears from his old mistress what has happened and going to the saloon he kills Caswell. Miss Adaire then makes her home with Virginia, whose engagement to Kendall is announced. William P. S. ## "The Fighting Trail"

Episode 10, "The Sheriff." Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

RAPID-FIRE action continues to keep interest keenly alive in this episode of "The Fighting Trail." Nan and Gwyn meet with disaster time and time again, but always manage to pull themselves together in time to rush on and frustrate the bandits' villainous schemes. There is a full-fledged election for sheriff in progress during this picture, carried on in true western style with much display of guns. Each episode proves to be a complete picture in itself with a very gripping climax. The acting is exceptionally good throughout, and Carol Halloway and William Duncan are gaining in popularity because of their decidedly pleasing work.

Nan and Gwyn appeal to the sheriff for assistance in obtaining the deeds to the mine which have been stolen by Von Bleck and his gang. The sheriff, who is looking for Von Bleck's vote and graft money, refuses to help. Gwyn induces "Square Deal" Hogan to run for sheriff at the forthcoming election. Hogan is elected and the recorder of deeds, conscience-stricken, gives Gwyn back the deeds, confessing that he was made to register them in Von Bleck's name at the point of a gun.

The outlaws gain possession of the mine and dynamite the approaching area so that when Gwyn and his men attempt to cross the valley the dynamite explodes, apparently killing the entire force.

"The Cricket"

Zoe Rae Starred in a Quaint Story Under Butterfly Brand. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE is a certain charm about this picture, which tells the story of three old actors who live in a quaint old garret and adopt a little girl actress, known as "The Cricket." The main portion of the story takes place about twenty-five years ago, and the old-fashioned flavor adds to the story's appeal. E. J. Clawson wrote the story and Elsie Jane Wilson directed it. Technical details are nicely taken care of. Acting, photography and settings are entirely satisfactory.

The clever cast includes, besides little Miss Rae, George Hupp, a boy player, Fred Warren, Harry Holden and Winter

Hall as the trio of friends, Rena Rogers and Hal Cooley as the girl and boy grown up, and Gretchen Lederer as Zoe's mother.

The play is sweet and wholesome and one of the best which has appeared as a Butterfly. Make a note to interest the children in this, and, if you can, give a performance of it especially for them. They will appreciate it, and also their parents will.

The story: "The Cricket" lived with her mother, who gave music lessons. Among the pupils was little Pascal, the son of an actress, and he and "The Cricket" became good friends. One day Pascal took his little friend to the rehearsal of a children's play. She was given a part and proved very talented. On the night of her debut and triumph, her mother died.

Three actors, who lived together in an old attic, adopted "The Cricket." Eventually they left the stage and became wealthy in other lines of endeavor. They wished their charge to marry a rich man, and they tried very clumsily to break up the romance between "The Cricket" and Pascal. But "The Cricket" discovered their scheme and left them in anger to marry Pascal. This resulted in a quarrel between the friends, each of whom blamed the other for the loss of "The Cricket."

Years went by, during which the three men were estranged from "The Cricket" and each other. One night the three went separately to the theater to see "The Cricket" and Pascal perform. One of them met "The Cricket's" little daughter, and decided to bring about a reunion. He was successful, and a party given in the old attic with the little girl as guest of honor, mends the broken friendships.

Latest Essanay-Perfection Play Stars Mary McAlister Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A WESTERN play, dealing with cowboys and Indians, serves as Little Mary McAlister's latest vehicle, and in it she is the only feminine personage. The story contains the situation of the change of heart of "bad men" brought about by the influence of a little child, but this is treated in a comedy-drama fashion. A fore-note in the picture suggests that the story is not to be taken too seriously. As a matter of fact, there isn't much to the plot, and we suspect the author of the story was having a bit of fun at the expense of a certain type of motion picture.

However, the little star seems to be having a good time. She is at ease and natural, and the audience will enjoy watching her. The picture will not create as favorable an impression as her two preceding features, we fear, but it will serve as an antidote for gloom and problems and create a little merriment in many theaters.

The supporting cast contains clever actors and well chosen types. The photography is good, and pretty locations have been chosen. Charles Mortimer Peck wrote the story. Among the players are Granville Bates, James Fulton, James West, W. F. Clifton, U. K. Houpt and Chris Tino.

The story: Little Billie and her father are crossing the plains to a frontier town. The father is accidentally killed and the little girl is discovered by the driver of a merchandise wagon. He takes her to his cabin in "Contentment," a town in which no women are allowed. He tries to keep her presence a secret, but his actions arouse suspicion among the villagers, who believe he has brought a woman to the town. They go to his cabin and are astonished to find the child. But they are still annoyed by her presence.

"The Crab," named for his disposition, arranges to have the youngster kidnaped by the Indians, but on the day before the abduction, Billie, by her childish confidence, has won over the hard-hearted villagers. They decide to adopt her as the "daughter of the camp." While they are celebrating, the Indians arrive and kidnap the child. "The Crab" realizes that he has made a mistake and tries to get her back before her absence is discovered. He brings her back, but his plot angers the men, who decide to hang him. However, Billie intercedes and saves his life. "Contentment" thereafter becomes a place of real contentment, with Billie as the controlling spirit.

"Her Bargain"

Mary MacLaren Starred in David Horsley Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is of the nature of a propaganda picture, its topic being the danger of encouraging an extravagant love of fine clothes in young girls who cannot afford them. It is a well produced story, in six reels, with good acting, photography and settings. While it is of the problem variety, it avoids crude suggestiveness and sensationalism. The girl and her mother are especially true to life, and while some of the other characters are of the melodrama kind, they are depicted convincingly.

Mary MacLaren's name has been well advertised in connection with other plays dealing with social problems and should have drawing power. The appeal of this play will be especially to the middle class audience. It is of its kind well done, with varied scenes, a rapidly moving story and enough thrill to satisfy the average picture patron.

The story: Mrs. Stanton, ambitious and proud of her daughter Irma, dresses her better than her means afford. Irma visits a wealthy aunt; they go to the seashore, where they meet Estelle Hutton and her theatrical backer, Vincent Henderson. Irma is induced to take part in an amateur theatrical; this incurs her aunt's displeasure and she is sent home. Returning, Irma decides to try the stage; she does not find it as easy as she imagined and circumstances force her to take a position in Henderson's theatrical offices. He plays upon her ambition and bargains for her possession if he makes her a success. The play is found and rehearsals proceed. Estelle Hutton notices Henderson's growing interest and warns Irma of his past, but the warning is unheeded. Miss Hutton visits the theater and in a jealous fury destroys Irma's wardrobe; in escaping, however, she is accidentally killed.

In the meanwhile, Irma's father returns, finds his wife dead and daughter gone. Irma's stage debut being guaranteed a financial success, Henderson calls upon her to complete her part of the bargain. Irma's father and sweetheart visit the theater; while there they overhear telephone instructions of Henderson that he and Miss Stanton would be at the Hilltop Inn. They rush to intercept them. Both parties arrive within a few minutes of each other. Irma and Henderson escape in an automobile, closely followed by the father. Rounding a turn, Henderson's car skids, crashes into a wagon and is hurled over a cliff; he is killed, but Irma is saved.

"Easy Money"

World Picture Brady-Made With Ethel Clayton. Released November 19. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A MARRIAGE of convenience which terminates in a marriage of love is the theme of this new World Film picture written by Gladys E. Johnson and directed by Travers Vale. The girl, penniless, wishes to continue her studies as a sculptress,—the man cannot have the fortune left him by his father until he marries a quiet girl; so the two decide to get married to obtain the "easy money" and then go their respective ways. How the husband finally falls in love with his wife and saves her from the evil designs of a supposed friend is told in an interesting way, holding the attention from start to finish. The character of the young, dissolute husband who tries to obtain a friendly footing with his very unfriendly, obstinate, little wife, is a sympathetic one and is sure to be enjoyed. His numerous "jags" and "morning after" scenes will also occasion much merriment.

Ethel Clayton plays the part of the ambitious girl and gives a forceful and pleasing performance. Her admirers will be charmed with her in this new role. John Bowers is splendid as the husband and Louise Vale as a spirited member of a musical comedy does good work.

The story: Lois Page receives a letter from her uncle

saying he can no longer help her to pursue her studies as sculptress. Discouraged, with very little money left, Lois accepts an invitation to attend a dinner party with Robert Hildreth, her art teacher.

Here she meets Richard Chanslor, a young man who is threatened with disinheritance by his grandparents unless he break his engagement with Lily Lorraine, a musical comedy actress.

Chanslor suggests that Lois marry him, he thereby receiving the inheritance left him by his parents on condition that he marry a girl of whom his grandfather will approve, while Lois will then have enough money to carry on her work. Lois accepts, and each agrees not to interfere with the other's affairs in any way.

After they are married Hildreth comes to the house and makes love to Lois. Being very lonely she accepts his invitations to go motoring.

Chanslor finally grows tired of night life and wild parties and begins to feel a little annoyed at his wife's constantly associating with Hildreth. He follows them in his machine one day, to a road-house, and arrives just in time to find Hildreth forcing his unwelcome attentions upon Lois. He rescues her and the two realize that they have loved each other all along.

"A Case at Law"

Triangle Picture Released November 18. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"A CASE AT LAW," written by William Dudley Pelly and directed by Arthur Rosson, is a fine boost for prohibition. There is really better material in it for a good harangue on temperance than there is for drama, but parts of it are highly exciting, and excitement is what the average picture fan demands. It is a picture showing the unpleasant havoc wrought by the demon rum, but the unsavory parts serve to point out a strong moral. Most of the scenes are laid in a saloon and show the evil influences thereof.

Dick Rosson characteristically plays the role of a drink-crazed youth. He does exceptionally good work in these maudlin parts and while his performance is anything but pleasant it is gripping and forceful. Pauline Curley is the one bright spot throughout and one wishes she had more to do. She is ever sweet and delightful. Riley Ratch and Jack Dillon play their parts well and some excellent barroom types are shown.

The story: Doctor Saunders has successfully fought the desire for liquor for fifteen years. He has a daughter whom he has not seen for almost that length of time as he is afraid he might some day slip back into the ways of his past.

Back in a country village the doctor's daughter, Mayme, elopes with a young reporter, Jimmy Baggs, who has a tendency to drink heavily. He accepts a position on a newspaper in the town where Doctor Saunders lives. In this town is a saloon keeper known as "Art," who has long been an enemy of the doctor's, due to the doctor's ardent views on temperance.

Jimmy falls in with Art and comes home to Mayme in a highly intoxicated state. She seeks help of Doctor Saunders who, in the course of their conversation, recognizes her as his daughter. He suggests that Jimmy and she be installed in his home, where he can the more easily give treatments to Jimmy. His treatments consist of target-practice as a means for steadying the nerves.

Art thinks he can strike at the doctor through Jimmy. He manages to lure the boy into his saloon and proceeds to get him drunk. When Jimmy arrives home in this state the doctor grabs up his guns and journeying to Art's saloon takes the law into his own hands. He pretends to become drunk himself, as the law is more lenient with a drunken man, and then shoots up the place.

At his trial public opinion is so strong in his favor that he is acquitted and Jimmy vows never to touch a drop of liquor again.

"The Belgian"

Sidney Olcott Production With Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"THE BELGIAN," written by Frederic Arnold Kummer and produced by the Sidney Olcott Players, is the latest release on the State Rights Program. It is an interesting drama of love and intrigue with plenty of patriotic touches which stand out in bold relief. Walker Whiteside is starred in this picture, his second screen venture, and where he hasn't been given the opportunity to do his best work, he still manages to make the character of the Belgian soldier an appealing one.

The war element is only a side issue to a dramatic story, but the patriotic scenes are highly effective and people will remember the picture for the timely representations it contains. The plot concerns a rising young sculptor who forgets his lass of the fishing village when he meets, in Paris, a beautiful countess who is in reality a spy. Valentine Grant is featured as a lead with Mr. Whiteside, and as the simple fisher lass does very pleasing work. Anders Randolph as a spy gives an especially commendable performance. The picture is rather long drawn out, but it has some real merit, and because of its patriotic appeal will be greeted enthusiastically by moving picture patrons.

The story: Victor Morenne (Walker Whiteside), a fisherman in a Belgian village, develops a talent for sculptoring. He goes to Paris to study and there meets the Countess de Vries (Sally Crute) who is in reality a German spy, and he forgets his former sweetheart, Jeanne (Valentine Grant), whom he left at home.

At the outbreak of the war Morenne joins the Belgian army, and while resisting a German attack he is shot in the head and loses his sight. He is sent to Paris to recuperate and there begs to see the Countess. Jeanne, who has followed him to Paris as a Red Cross nurse, cares for and nurses him and, not to let him know that the Countess is faithless, she writes him letters herself, pretending that they are from the other woman.

When Morenne's sight is restored he learns the true character of both women. Jeanne falls into the hands of the Germans and is about to be executed when a Belgian attack proves successful and she is reunited with Morenne.

THE triumph of democracy over autocracy in Germany is the theme of this picture with its plot perhaps a little advanced but nevertheless appropriate. It is a great spectacle showing the ravages of war with its accompanying harrowing details. Parts of it are very gruesome but it will instil patriotism into all who see it and should be greeted enthusiastically.

There is not much plot to the picture; it is just a series of very exciting war scenes, beautifully and realistically visualized. A huge Zeppelin is shown in action and one sees its workings both from the inside and out. The surrounding country photographed from this huge dirigible is an artistic bit of photography. The Zeppelin is shown in action dropping bombs and destroying towns and villages. One moment peace and quiet reigns—the next terror and suffering. It is all very awe-inspiring and patrons interested in seeing the mechanism of a great air craft should not miss the picture. All the sordid details of war are graphically flashed upon the screen, from a hungry mob desperately fighting for bread, to the destruction of the huge war-monster in mid-air. It is in all respects a picture well worth seeing by patrons who like this sort of spectacle. It is more like a news review than a drama.

Enid Markey and Alfred Hickman enact the leading roles and their work is effective and convincing. What little plot there is to the picture concerns the workings of a band of people in Germany fighting for liberty. Their symbol is the cross and the band grows and grows until finally autocracy is overthrown and democracy reigns in the land. The culmination of this occurs in a scene where the commanding officer of a Zeppelin has to choose between duty as he has always known it, and duty as taught by the new order. He finally destroys the air-craft and himself with it, rather than hurl more bombs upon innocent and defenseless victims.

MAE MARSH'S latest picture from the Goldwyn studio, written by Mary Rider and directed by John Noble, gives the popular little star an opportunity to be as sweet and wistful as patrons are desiring of having her be. A light, fantastic plot has been woven around a little bird-doctor who has to sell her adored pet to obtain money for her grandfather, who is ill. The picture contains so much that is human and appealing that it is sure to satisfy. It has been delightfully produced with deft little touches in the shape of all sorts of animals which add to its powers of entertainment. Mae Marsh's charm is synonymous with all things delightful and as she dances through this picture in all sorts of queer garbs from overalls to her grandmother's wedding dress, she is more adorable than ever. She carries the picture from start to finish and her many admirers will be highly pleased with this new role.

There are some splendid photographic effects which will be enjoyed, noticeably some scenes in a rain storm which are very well done. The settings are all pleasing, some being especially beautiful, and in fact the production throughout is above the average for its refinement and its refreshing qualities. Robert Harron supports Miss Marsh and does so in a highly enjoyable manner. He gives to his characterization the right touch of boyishness to make the part stand out.

The story: Nellie lives with her grandfather and numerous pets, for she is a bird-doctor and keeps a bird store. She has a worthless brother who manages to obtain all the money from her that is possible.

One day the grandfather is knocked down by an automobile and the owners come into the store to settle damages. The young son is strangely attracted by Nellie's wistful charm, and, giving her his card, he tells her he will be glad to help her at any time.

His mother is very desirous of buying Nellie's beloved bull-finch, but Nellie will not part with her pet. Later, however, when the doctor arrives and wishes to call another doctor in consultation, Nellie sees that she must sell her bird to pay for her grandfather's health.

She sells the bird to the rich lady but the bird in its new environment refuses to sing. The little bird-doctor is sent for and, having nothing else to wear, she slips into her grandmother's wedding dress and hies forth to make her call. A masqued ball is in progress and Nellie in her quaint costume is quite the belle of the evening.

She stays at the mansion all night in order to give treatments to the bird and her brother comes to the house to rob it. In trying to save him she is caught with the jewels which he was attempting to steal, but the young son of the house has so much faith in her ,and so much love for her, that he explains to the police that the jewels were a wedding present from him to his future wife.

"The Clever Mrs. Carfax"

Paramount Picture With Julian Eltinge. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

JULIAN ELTINGE makes this a different sort of picture due, of course, to his very clever female impersonation. This unique twist combined with a well constructed plot serves to make the picture a highly enjoyable piece of entertainment. The suspense is well sustained throughout and the dramatic climax at the end is splendid, while the character of "Mrs. Carfax" offers valuable comedy relief. It is a combination which is rather unusual, particularly so, as the comedy is introduced in a natural way, the participants in the story not being aware of "Mrs. Carfax's" identity. The smooth way the comedy is brought about is a great asset. Mr. Eltinge's role doesn't seem at all improbable, thanks to his versatility, and it is a toss-up whether he is more pleasing as a man or a woman. Of course it is as a woman that he will receive the most praise, for certainly his position in this line remains undisputed. He disguises himself as a woman in order to save the fortune of the girl he loves, and his identity remains a mystery even to the girl herself. This situation offers unlimited opportunities.

Mr. Eltinge is ably supported by a cast including Noah Beery, Daisy Robinson, and Rosita Marstini.

The story: Temple Trask (Julian Eltinge) accepts his friend's dare to go to a public place dressed as a woman. In this guise he meets a girl, Helen, with whom he falls in love. He recognizes a crook he knew in former reporting days, who is trying to steal Helen's fortune from her, and so, in order to be near and protect the girl, he suggests that he accompany her on a voyage with her grandmother, still in his guise of "Mrs. Carfax," of course.

In this role he wins the girl's confidence and later is introduced to her as himself and wins her love.

The villain with his accomplice, manages to steal some bonds from Helen's grandmother, but he is captured by "Mrs. Carfax" in a dramatic way and turned over to the police. Helen's surprise is great when she discovers that her friend and her lover are one and the same and she falls in his arms with joy and astonishment.

"The Savage"

Monroe Salisbury in Indian Role in Recent Bluebird Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MONROE SALISBURY has a sympathetic role in this play, a half-breed gambler, apparently a villain, at heart a gentleman. This good-bad sort of a character is usually interesting and popular in pictures, and Salisbury fits it very well, playing the role with charm and skill.

The events take place amid outdoor scenes of great beauty. These are well photographed. The action of the play is brisk, but occasionally too abrupt and difficult to follow. A story by Elliott J. Clawson forms its basis. Rupert Julian directed. The acting of the entire cast is good. Ruth Clifford has the leading feminine role. Colleen Moore, Allen Sears, W. H. Bainbridge, Arthur Tavares, George Franklin and Duke Lee are among the players.

The picture, in short, is a good type of western, very pretty, with an attractive star and good support.

The story: Julio Sandoval (Salisbury), a half-breed gambler, is wanted by the police. Captain McKeever of the Northwest Mounted tries to capture him. Sandoval eludes him and kidnaps Marie Louise, the captain's fiancee. He takes her to his cabin in the mountain, but is moved by her plea and lets her escape uninjured. The girl sees that the Indian is ill with the fever and she stays to take care of him. When her rescuers come, she aids him to escape.

Later, after a plot of intrigue has been unfolded, the Indian saves the life of the captain, but in doing so sacrifices his own for the sake of the girl he had truly loved.

Morgan Enters Moving Picture Field?

According to a rumor that has gained circulation in London, J. P. Morgan and his financial firm has entered the moving picture field in America with a readiness to dump $40,000,000 into the industry. The Kinematograph, a British moving picture journal, says of the report:

"This is not without peril to the future of the exhibiting side of the industry, because if this huge trust covers all the best brands of films, there can be no doubt that the exhibitor will have to pay more to procure them."

Latest News of Chicago

The program of the I Will Club at the Hotel La Salle this week included a talk on "Our Movies" by Alfred Hamburger.

Samuel S. Hutchinson and Richard R. Nehls, respectively president and manager of the American Film Company, Inc., were in Milwaukee Saturday to attend the funeral services of the late Mrs. John R. Freuler.

Luther W. Thompson, formerly with Paramount in Pittsburgh, is now in charge of screen inspection at the local Famous Players office under charge of W. V. Hill.

The management of the Austin Theater, 5619 West Madison street, has again changed hands and is now being directed by G. J. Wegner, one of the "young bloods" of the film business.

O. H. Levine and Ben Edelman, two of the live road men, have been recalled from the road and will hereafter devote their time to selling Universal pictures in Chicago.

Herbert Levy, who has been connected with the Universal Film Company in various capacities for the last eight years, has been placed in charge of the Universal shipping department and has charge of directing the inspecting and patching of all the films that leave and arrive at the Universal office.

P. A. Powers, better known as "Pat" Powers, was a visitor in this city last week. Although Mr. Powers is one of the most active of Universal officials, he devotes most of his time to the home office in New York, and this is the first time in two years that he has been in this city.

A private showing of "The Man Without a Country," the Jewel feature with Florence La Badie, who recently died, was given last Tuesday. This showing was for several heads of patriotic organizations, who, after seeing the feature, proclaimed it to be one of the most timely and most patriotic pictures they had ever seen. Among those represented were, The State Council of Defense, the National Security League, Military Training Association, The Navy League, and The Boy Scouts of America.

Bob McKnight, formerly publicity man with the American Film Company in Chicago, has graduated from the government aviation school at the University of Illinois and is on his way across the Atlantic to begin active service. He left Champaign without knowing his destination. In writing a Chicago friend he calls his departure his "great adventure in this year of great adventures."

The Motion Picture Theater Publicity Committee for the $35,000,000 Y. M. C. A. war fund is seeking to have all the motion picture theaters in the city use the special slides urging public co-operation in the raising of this fund. The slides are furnished by the committee, which is composed of Joseph Hopp, Aaron J. Jones, Nathan Ascher, Harry M. Lubliner, William J. Heaney, Fred W. Schaefer, Irwin Henoch, Carroll Dean Murphy. Paul R. Kuhn, F. J. Woods and Paul H. Davis.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is in New York spending a few days. He recently spent some time resting in Excelsior Springs, Mo.

The Lea-Bel Company, located in the Schiller building, is getting out a unique advertisement in the shape of a giant pencil. It measures nearly half an inch in diameter, and carries the trademark of the Lea-Bel company together with the announcement that this firm stands for "better films."

Harry C. Miller, manager of the H. C. Moir theaters, reports he has contracted for the entire output of the Artcraft-Paramount studios for his three houses, the Boston, Rose and Alcazar.

H. R. Bierly, of the Colonial Theater, Logansport, Ill., was in the city last week attending various trade showings. He is running high class feature pictures with vaudeville. Patrons in Logansport, Mr. Brierly states, consider the paying of a theater tax an easy way of doing a patriotic "bit" and attendance is increasing rather than falling off.

Paramount's exchange is overflowing its present quarters in the Consumers' building, and is taking additional floor space on the twenty-first floor of the building. On this floor a new projection room is being installed for trade showings.

Boundless Enthusiasm for "Over Here"

New York Tribune:

"EVERY MOTHER WHO HAS GIVEN HER BOY TO HER COUNTRY SHOULD SEE 'OVER HERE.' 'Over Here' shows in the minutest details how our soldiers are made fit to go 'over there.' ANY ONE WHO IS INTERESTED IN WINNING THE WAR WILL BE INTERESTED IN THIS PICTURE."

Moving Picture World:

" 'Over Here' is strongly imbued with the spirit of patriotism, not alone through the nature of the picture itself, but by means of subtitles which are stirring and which make the picture an inspiration to work and fight for the 'freedom of democracy.' "

VARIETY:

" 'Over Here' is a two-reel picture distributed by World, showing in a most interesting and often a most inspiring way how the big cantonments are created for the reception of our troops.

"The main interest in such a production, aside from the patriotic feature, which is exceedingly compelling, is the speed and efficiency of the entire proceeding. 'Over Here' winds up in a blaze of fervor."

Motion Picture News:

" 'Over Here' will be a worthy addition to any and all exhibitors' programs. It is timely, instructive and presents a pictorial review of activities in which we are all interested. A worth-while picture which the exhibitor of every neighborhood can book and be assured that he will have presented a picture that every patron has enjoyed."

Sunday Telegraph:

" 'Over Here'—incidentally a most appropriate and effective title—is a very graphic motion picture. It is needless to say that it will be given an enthusiastic reception wherever shown. It is an entertaining and informative picture which everyone will be eager to see."

Dramatic Mirror:

"The picture has great informative value in that it shows the people of this country what can and has been done with their dollars in government preparations. 'Over Here' is calculated to interest all classes of theatre-goers."

League and Association Urged to Merge

POWERFUL ORGANIZATION ADVOCATED BY UNITING OPPOSING FORCES

A MOVEMENT is under way looking toward the merging of the divided exhibitors of the country into one big national organization.

As an aid to this movement MOTOGRAPHY in this issue is urging the now widely separated factions among the exhibitors to get together for their own good and the good of the whole industry.

In advocating this move as one of primary benefit to the entire industry MOTOGRAPHY holds no brief for either faction of the divided organizations of exhibitors. This magazine has no connection with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, nor the American Exhibitors' Association, or any branch of the two organizations. It has friends among the members of both.

Energy Can Be Conserved

On that account MOTOGRAPHY has accepted the opportunity to bring this subject to the attention of exhibitors, and to present the proposition of the formation of a big national organization of exhibitors, embracing in one powerful association the factions which now are widely separated and—as is acknowledged by everyone connected with the industry—are wasting energies that could be expended for the benefit of all exhibitors.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, voiced the desire for a united industry when he spoke last week in Chicago. The parts of his speech that bore on this subject were published in MOTOGRAPHY for December 1.

Brady Urges United Industry

His attitude on the subject of unifying the entire industry was prompted by a desire to see the fifth largest of the nation's industries mobilized in such a way that it could take the place in the nation's affairs it deserves to occupy. He said:

"The necessity of concerted action on the part of the industry was never so imperative as it is today."

He was referring to the injustices contained in recent national legislation and he pointed the way to prevent future congressional action adverse to the moving picture business by recommending that the exhibitors "forget their petty differences" and join in a big national organization that every exhibitor in the nation would join.

Exhibitors Asked to Meet

Lee A. Ochs has issued a call addressed to all the exhibitors in the country, inviting them to Washington to attend a convention in the national capital on December 11, 12 and 13 to formulate plans for obtaining relief from congress in the matter of unequal and unjust taxation that has been levied upon the picture industry. His call stated that Harry Crandall, the Washington exhibitor—who pulled out Ochs' organization at the Chicago convention last summer—would make hotel reservations for all exhibitors who desired to attend.

Invitation Not Well Received

That his invitation is not being received well by the members of the American Exhibitors' Association, is indicated in a telegram sent out soon after the convention call by Frank Rembusch, secretary of the association, who accused Ochs of attempting "to camouflage" his previous activities. His telegram, which was sent from Shelbyville, Ind., addressed to W. H. Donaldson in New York, said:

"Ochs is attempting to camouflage exhibitors by calling December meeting to cover up his work last spring. Present tax conditions are the result of what he advocated. We might accept Crandall's invitation for joint conference of both organizations. We have already arranged for Varner to represent exhibitors in Washington and are raising funds to employ him for that purpose. Varner has demonstrated his ability, honesty and unselfish purposes. Please advise World, News and MOTOGRAPHY and ask them to support our plan. New headquarters open. You may expect great activity."

Are We Too Optimistic?

MOTOGRAPHY hopes—and hopes that it does not hope in vain— that the differences keeping the Association and the League apart can be overcome speedily. It is impelled to advocate a re-uniting of the now divided forces by a desire to see a powerful organization of exhibitors working together for the exhibitor's branch of the motion picture industry and the industry as a whole.

Do You Always Get What You Want?

Many exhibitors have difficulty locating the pictures their patrons request them to book. Patrons do not always remember the name of the producer. Your exchange man may not be able to put you right unless the picture you seek happens to be one of his releases.

MOTOGRAPHY can always help you. Our Service Department is at your disposal. Make use of it. Ask us anything.

Win Suit to Make Exhibitors Pay Tax

CLEVELAND DISTRIBUTORS DEFEAT ATTEMPT TO ENJOIN THEM FROM COLLECTING

THE first court decision affecting the question of the fifteen-cent tax charged exhibitors on each reel of film in addition to daily rental charges, was adverse to the exhibitor.

In the common pleas court in Cleveland, O., on November 23, where exhibitors of that city were attempting to obtain an injunction to prevent the exchanges from collecting the reel tax, the case was thrown out of court and the injunction denied. Final judgment was entered in favor of the distributors upon the assumption that all the facts contended for by the exhibitors being admitted to be true, the exhibitors were not entitled to relief sought.

Exhibitors Seek Restraining Order

The exhibitors sought a restraining order to prevent eleven distributing organizations from cancelling contracts because of exhibitors failing to agree to pay the fifteen cents per reel per day as an additional payment for service because of the war tax, and also restraining the companies from collecting the amount on contracts where exhibitors had agreed to pay the same.

The eleven companies were Goldwyn, Pathe, Artcraft, Paramount, Vitagraph, World, Fox, Universal, International, Metro and Select.

At the hearing after the facts as presented by the exhibitors had been thoroughly gone into, the judge denied the injunction.

Ruling May Be Precedent

It now appears that the companies will be absolutely free to collect the tax and that the Ohio ruling may be taken as a precedent in future actions of the same character.

At the hearing the following film men were present: P. A. Powers, of Universal; Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn; Nathan Vivader, counsel for the World Film Corporation; J. A. Berst, of Pathe, and Arthur S. Friend of Paramount, Artcraft and Famous Players Lasky.

Advocate Contract Cancellations

In Brooklyn the local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, decided last week to advocate the cancellation of all contracts by all exhibitors with the Vitagraph and Fox exchanges because the exchanges refused to drop their demand for the 15 cents per reel a day tax. Fifteen members of the league were appointed to handdle the matter, but at a later meeting it was decided to withhold action temporarily.

Meanwhile William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was asked to bring the matter before the executive board of the association.

The Brooklyn branch of the league will send six members to Washington to take part in the conference called there beginning December 11, at which the subject of the war tax and plans for seeking the repeal of certain sections of the present war revenue law will be under discussion.

Refuses to Pay Reel Tax

New Orleans exhibitors, forming that branch of the league, have refused to pay the fifteen-cent assessment, and they have been notified by exchange men demanding the tax that their refusal will be met by refusals to give them service. A. G. Gugel, president of the New Orleans branch of the league, declared that it was the belief of the exhibitors that congress intended the manufacturer to pay the footage tax, and not pass it on to the exhibitor.

Other Exhibitors Take Stand

On the subject of the tax, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, in session in Minneapolis last week adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, the motion picture distributors of the United States have arbitrarily, and unjustly, and we believe, unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed fifteen cents to cover the federal war excise tax;

And whereas, this assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures, and jeopardizes his business;

And whereas, the Mutual Film Corporation, Triangle Distributing Corporation, and General Film Company, and other distributors have announced their determination to absorb the war excise tax and have instructed the managers of their various exchanges to cancel the fifteen-cent assessment;

Therefore, be it resolved by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, that the thanks and commendation of the members be extended to these distributors for their fairness and justness in meeting this situation.

Be it further resolved, that the members of this organization endeavor, whenever, and wherever possible to book the productions of these distributors not only as a matter of principle, but because of the high standard of quality in production, which is maintained by them, and urge similar action upon the part of exhibitors not affiliated with this organization."

Small Exhibitors Hit Hard

That the small exhibitors are being hit hard by the war tax burdens that have been imposed upon them is indicated by the following excerpts from a letter written to MOTOGRAPHY by Bert Norton, manager of the Kozy Theater in Eureka, Ill.:

"The arbitrary apportionment of fifteen cents a reel regardless of age of service, is working a great hardship on the small town exhibitor as it means that in order to pay it, and pass it on to the consumer, as the film companies recommend, he must raise his prices so high that patrons cease attending shows so often. My patrons offer no objection to an increase in price, but they tell me that they cannot attend shows quite so regularly.

Charge Same for Old Films

"I find the producers' statement published in MOTOGRAPHY recently stated, that they would collect fifteen cents a reel on film released after October 4,

The Firefly of Tough Luck, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"Plenty of action and many tense scenes, western. Our audience spoke well of it. Call it 'The Firefly' if you run it. Present title does not attract."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Cassidy, with Dick Rosson (Triangle)—"Who 'christens' Triangle plays? Good pictures with titles that people would not walk across the street to see even the posters! Wonderfully acted, but very sad. A good 'sob' picture."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph special)—"Well liked, but the vivid war scenes brought the war too close to home. No more war pictures, but more comedy-dramas. People get too much of war."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.—Town of 1,500 population.

Serials and Series

Who Is 'Number One'? with Kathleen Clifford (Paramount)—"Regardless of assurances to the contrary, I believe this is not a Paramount product, for it has not the Paramount finish or the proper casting, nor has it the correct detail in the property department. We venture to guess that this was produced under another brand and should be marketed as such. The gigantic advertising campaign placed behind this serial will, in my estimation, only make it that much harder to convince the public in the future that a certain brand has proportionate quality."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Have had two episodes and find it a good drawing card."—Cecil C. Reed, Malone Theater, Sikeston, Mo.

The Neglected Wife, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—"My thanks to Pathe for so great a drawing card. Increased my business wonderfully. A good box-office attraction which cannot fail to keep patrons coming once they see the first episodes. One of the most successful serials we have run. Broke all house records."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

Do Children Count? with Mary McAlister (Essanay series)—"A great drawing card for the women."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

To Handle Metro Pictures Abroad

A deal of interest to the trade was consummated about two months ago and has only just come to public knowledge through Frank Garrett, the president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has taken over the entire foreign rights to the Metro Pictures.

Madame Schuepbach, representative of the Mundusfilm Corporation of Paris, who was recently here to buy material for the foreign market, and whose personal representative is Mr. Garrett, delayed her departure until she was able to close a deal with Mr. Blumenthal for the rights to these pictures for Spain, France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, and the Balkans.

Mr. Blumenthal, on his part, is most enthusiastic over the proposition, and feels that the Metro Pictures will be sure of immediate success with European audiences. Such stars as Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, and the Sidney Drews and Harold Lockwood have obtained enormous popularity in this country, and their following will doubtless be increased wherever they are shown abroad. Mr. Blumenthal believes that the European market is coming more and more to demand the American productions, with their elaboration of detail and expensive settings and that it is a matter of simply bringing the pictures before the audiences in the proper manner to result in the ultimate triumph of American releases over the foreign products. It is a field of the industry of tremendous scope, and heretofore but little explored, and offers great possibilities to the American exporter.

1917. Now, I am using film, all of which was released before that date, and some quite a while before. The construction I place on their statement is that this old service is not taxable, or if it is taxable, why is the tax the same as required for film released after October 4? There was no manufacturers' tax to pay on this old film.

"One film company tells me that each company is taxed on what film it has in stock, regardless of its age. Other companies say it is charged only on the newer issues. They do not agree, but they charge the same reel tax.

"The tax surely has hit the small exhibitor hard and unless things are changed he will either be forced to give up entirely or cut down his service. People in the small towns are economizing at the expense of the moving picture show."

Advances Holiday Release Date

Producer Decides to Offer "Babes In the Woods" on December 2—Children Star in This Production

WILLIAM Fox claims credit for having added three weeks to the holiday season this year. As a year-end gift to exhibitors, and particularly to those who have contracted for his Special Features, he announces that one of his most elaborate Standard Pictures—the one he had selected for his Christmas release—will be transferred December 2 to the Special Features classification.

The production is "The Babes in the Woods," in which Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are starred under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. It is a big, spectacular six-reel feature in the same class as "Jack and the Beanstalk, and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," both of which received flattering press notices during their extended, extra price runs at the Globe Theater

"Our intention had been to handle 'The Babes in the Woods' on exactly the same basis as the other Carpenter- Corbin productions," Mr. Fox explained. "We had set it down for release as one of the Standard Pictures on December 23. We had prepared all the elaborate advertising material, press sheets, lobby displays, lithographs and exhibitor helps which we have been accustomed to furnish without extra-special attractions.

"We had been planning also to give practical expression during the holiday season of our appreciation of the hearty support we have had from exhibitors this year. The idea of releasing a Standard Picture as a Fox Special Feature suggested itself and 'The Babes in the Woods' was selected as being the production which would prove the most generally satisfactory to exhibitors and at the same time permit of carrying out our idea of making the transfer early in December so that all the theaters might have an opportunity to profit from the gift before the first of the year.

"I have no hesitancy whatever in saying there will be universal agreement with my claim that nothing so elaborate, so strongly backed up with publicity material, so appropriate to the season and so certain of being a big producer has ever before been offered to exhibitors on a 52-a-year basis. Our own faith in the production is evidenced by the fact that we had planned to make it a Christmas release. It is a photoplay for which we ought to get the highest market prices, but we wish our holiday greetings to exhibitors to be something more substantial than good wishes, and we take this method of demonstrating it."

Hayakawa Has Rough Voyage

Tsuru Aoki, wife of the Paramount Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa, received a wireless from the actor in mid-ocean, stating that he and his director, George Melford, and company were having a rough and uncomfortable voyage to Hawaii where "Hidden Pearls" is to be partially filmed. The majority of the best Pacific liners have been taken over by the government, and as a consequence passengers on the smaller ships are getting ocean rolls for breakfast regularly.

George Directs Beban

George Beban, Paramount character actor, acted as his own director in completing several scenes for his next starring vehicle. During the process the other day the star forgot a certain hat he was to wear, so he fined himself $10 for forgetting and then took himself out to lunch to square things. Director Beban says he doesn't mind directing other people but, that as a star, George Beban is the hardest person to direct he has ever come across.

Petrova Is Accomplished Story Writer

A fact little known to the legion of Madame Olga Petrova's picture admirers is the ability of the famous star in the field of literature. Despite the activities which characterize the working day of Madame Petrova at her studios, her energies have found an outlet in the writing of numerous short stories for current national magazines. Owing to the fact that the brilliant motion picture star has insisted upon a nom de plume for her various fictional efforts, her distinct talents in the art of short story writing have up to now been a well-kept secret.

Under the name of Estelle Baird, Madame Petrova's contributions appear frequently in the leading monthly publications. She is the author of the short story, "Free Born But—" which attracted wide atetntion from the reading public recently.

Madame Petrova is at present conducting a personal department in the Ladies' World, a widely read women's magazine, in which she renders advice and assistance to the many ambitious aspirants for screen honors. She is also engaged in the completion of a novel on which she has been at work for three years.

Reviews, Honest and Otherwise

PRERELEASE film reviews, as we have often said before, are open to theoretical criticism because they represent the one-man opinion in a situation where no two opinions might exactly coincide. It is reasonably possible that four reviewers, one from each trade paper for example, might render four different verdicts, all honest, on the same picture. It is not at all unusual to hear the adjectives "great" and "rotten" applied to a film in the same hour.

But the criticism of reviewers is not so logical as it sounds. Opinions may differ as to the human appeal of a picture; but the principles of dramatic construction are a fixed quantity, subject to rules and regulations known to all competent reviewers. When honest disputes arise, they center about the story rather than the manner in which it is produced.

That is why we find it necessary to accompany each review with a synopsis of the story. Comparatively few pictures suit all audiences, and every alert exhibitor has his own ideas of his patrons' interests. The reviewer can only classify the story for him, so that he may judge of its suitability for his people; and then tell him whether the story so defined is correctly rendered.

Technical excellence does not make a picture desirable to an exhibitor who knows from experience that his patronage does not care for that kind of a story, or for the particular stars featured in it. It may be bad judgment, on the other hand, to present to an enlightened audience a story wholly suited to their tastes if the production embodying that story is poorly done.

That is for each exhibitor to decide. No reviewer can help him beyond the point of supplying him with the necessary two groups of facts: What the story is, and how well or ill its filming has been acomplished.

So we may dispose of the criticism against reviewers defined in our opening paragraph. But its greatest harm still remains uncorrected. The "natural difference of opinion" affords a perfectly plausible alibi for the reviewer who is not honest, or whose paper will not allow him to be honest. The trade journal disposed to commercialize its review columns may declare a very poor picture excellent, or heap ridicule upon a good picture; and the author of the prostituted review may still maintain stoutly that he was right, falling back on the old argument of a "matter of taste."

So it is hard to convict a trade paper on the charge of dishonest reviewing. The burden of evidence rests on the judgment of the reviewer; and it is better to confess poor judgment than dishonesty. But the readers of the paper will have their suspicions, nevertheless. Indeed, we fear there are already too many worldly-wise exhibitor-readers who, in their sophisticated attitude toward human nature, think all trade paper reviews are prejudiced by considerations. They think the big stick of advertising patronage is a universal contaminating influence.

If trade paper readers were studious enough to keep a check on reviews as against advertising, in all the trade papers, we believe they would be considerably enlightened by the results of the tally. Consistently favorable reviews of advertisers' productions, and consistently unfavorable reviews of non-advertisers' products, should be a sufficiently suspicious circumstance to take a large discount from the reliability of a trade paper.

And there are, or ought to be, exhibitors sufficiently interested in the review question to make just that kind of a study. The film review is intended for the guidance of exhibitors in booking their program. Either it is a valuable institution or it is not. Its value depends wholly on its honesty. Exhibitors who use it should be willing to take the little time and effort necessary to verify the review's claims to respectability.

Since the procedure of checking up on the relations between reviews and advertising is so simple and easy, it is not necessary to bring any charges against the methods of certain film trade papers. Every reader may determine for himself, with almost mathematical exactness, the influence of advertising (or non-advertising) on the review section.

It goes without saying that the prostituted review is worse than worthless. It is positively harmful, because it either induces the exhibitor to book impossible pictures, or it deprives him of pictures his patrons want to see. And the dishonest reviewer on one paper brings all his honest co-workers on other papers under suspicion. If the exhibitors at large definitely concluded that reviews were worthless, all the papers might just as well discontinue that feature.

We need not call attention to our own reviews, because we hope at least a few prominent exhibitors will try the checking system we have suggested, and keep it up long enough to make sure which of the trade papers are the culprits and which are entitled to confidence.

Getting Back to One Organization

LAST July the only national organization of motion picture exhibitors split into two parts. There is no need to repeat here the reasons why the disruption occurred. History since then shows that while each faction belittled the power of the other, neither one succumbed to the ravages of competition, and both are apparently strong, aggressive and active to-day.

There may be some who take pride in the virility of an industry that can support two fairly healthy national associations; but if so their vanity is misplaced. The thing to contemplate is the powerful organization that would result if both, with all their present executive strength, were again operating under a single banner.

Men who have grown to prominence by diligent application to their own industry are not generally noted for their knowledge of other industries. It may be news to some motion picture men that the splitting up of trade associations is quite a common habit, experienced at one time or another by nearly all industries of any considerable importance. Industrial records show, however, that these separated parts of the original organization have nearly always come together again with mutual satisfaction.

Mutual satisfaction, of course, generally means mutual concession and perhaps sacrifice. But keeping in mind the fundamental fact that any trade association is for the benefit of its members and the trade in general, and not for its officers and directors, it is evident that the only thing sacrificed, usually, is some individual's ambition or pride. Individual ambition and pride, needless to say, have no legitimate place in association composition.

It is essential to the best welfare of the motion picture industry that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association be merged into a single representative unit. The quickest way to accomplish that is by the appointment of a joint committee armed with the resignations of all officers of both bodies, and with power to conduct an election of officers for the fusion organization.

The disagreement between the two exhibitor factions is based not on principles, but on men. We submit to the thinking element of both organizations that any matter of personality is a wholly illegitimate and quite inexcusable basis for the disruption of concentrated power in an industry which sorely needs all the co-operation possible.

Officers and directors of the merged associations must, of course, be voted in by a majority of the members of both factions. That is fundamental, and present officers of either side who cannot get a majority nomination will naturally be discarded.

In the interest of organization welfare we are confident that the present officers of both associations will be glad to place their resignations in the hands of a properly appointed fusion committee.

Delays Picture to Get Realism

Madame Petrova Refuses to Proceed With Filming of Play Until the Right Sort of Soldiers Are Obtained

MAKING cognizance of the lack of detail, which mars so many current screen productions, Madame Olga Petrova has exerted the utmost personal attention in the making of "Daughter of Destiny," her first production for the Petrova Picture Company.

The initial offering of the great emotional star's own picture organization, shortly to be presented at Mr. Rothapfel's Rialto, New York, contains several important scenes which required the use of the Royal Grenadier Guard. Madame Petrova, refusing to attempt a "studio imitation" of the husky body of men who compose the real guard, caused the picture to be held up while the city was scoured for ex-members of the famous European regiment.

By a fortunate chance, Captain George Melander, formerly of the Royal Swedish Body Guard, was finally secured for the purpose of gathering together the men required to participate in the scenes in question. The result is the presence in "Daughter of Destiny" of a seasoned company of Scandinavian Grenadiers, all ex-war veterans, every man of whom is over six feet tall. Wearing the regulation white belted tunics, with the famous bear skin "chacos" on their heads, this body of "ex-fighters" add a most vivid touch of realism to the scenes in which they appear as a body guard for Petrova.

Two Publications Are Merged

"Paramount Progress" and "Artcraft Advance" are United Under the Name of "The Progress-Advance"

THE two weekly publications issued by Paramount Pictures Corporation and Artcraft Pictures Corporation—"Paramount Progress" and "Artcraft Advance" have been merged into one magazine and will appear weekly hereafter under the name of "Progress-Advance."

The new publication numbers twenty pages and will contain, as heretofore, material of interest and value to all motion picture exhibitors and more particularly those showing the Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

In the last issue of Paramount Progress the following announcement appeared:

"Farewell—and Hail!!"

"This is the last issue of 'Paramount Progress' in its present form. It is the last number of the volume. For three years the editors have striven earnestly and sincerely to make the magazine one of real service and value to its exhibitor readers. In its career, not a short one in this new industry, it has witnessed many changes. It has seen a great advance in the quality of production and in the methods of presentation of motion pictures. It has striven to keep pace with every forward step of the industry.

"The industry recently took another gigantic stride forward. With the inauguration of the Selective Star Series system, the Paramount and Artcraft pictures marked an epoch in film production. The exhibitor, too, is advancing in the quality of his presentation of motion pictures, and 'Paramount Progress' is no longer adequate, in its present form, to be a magazine of service' in the best sense of the phrase. To broaden its effectiveness, it is to consolidate with its young aggressive contemporary, 'Artcraft Advance' in

"A Bigger and Better Magazine"

"The new publication, which will make its bow to the motion picture industry next week, under the name of 'Progress-Advance,' will follow strictly the idea of exhibitor-service. It will be larger in size, broader in scope, and better in context. It will be worth reading and retaining—it will be of distinct value to every motion picture exhibitor."

The last issue of "Paramount Progress"—the fifty-second number of the third volume—marks the third year of the publication of that magazine.

"Artcraft Advance," although a much newer publication, had already established an important place for itself in the industry by its valuable and interesting contents.

B. P. Fineman, heretofore editor of "Paramount Progress," will be editor of "Progress-Advance," and Charles Kenmore Ulrich, editor of "Artcraft Advance," will be associate editor of the new publication.

"Ruggles" Will Have Notable Cast

Taylor Holmes, noted stage comedian, now being featured in Essanay comedy-dramas, has returned to Chicago from New York, where he has been at work, since completing his last picture, in selecting the cast for the George K. Spoor special production, the picturization of "Ruggles of Red Gap," by Harry Leon Wilson, which ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and was published in book form, and in which Mr. Holmes will take the part of "Ruggles."

For the part of "The Honorable George," Mr. Holmes was able to engage the support of Lawrence D'Orsay, known to all the followers of the speaking stage for his parts in "The Earl of Pawtucket," "The Embassy Ball," "The Rented Earl" and other productions.

Frederick Burton, the noted comedian of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Sky Farm" and other successes, will be seen as the "Cousin Egbert" of the production. Mr. Burton, at the time of receiving Mr. Holmes' offer, was engaged in a stellar role of "The Arabian Nights" at the Punch and Judy Theater in New York, but an amicable agreement was reached with his management and he will start with Essanay immediately. Both Mr. D'Orsay and Mr. Burton will have the part they had in the Shuber dramatization of the story for the stage.

Miss Edna Phillips, also widely known to followers of the legitimate stage, will be seen in the part of "Klondike Kate" and Miss Lillian Drew, an Essanay player, will have the part of "Miss Effie."

Miss Virginia Valli, who has been seen in support of Mr. Holmes in a number of his Essanay pictures, will be "Mrs. Judson" and play opposite Mr. Holmes.

An entire special all-star cast will be seen in the picturization. A number of parts still remain to be chosen and Mr. Holmes is searching the stage and picture world for the best possible support for his part of "Ruggles."

The entire company will leave soon for location in Arizona

Cavalieri Makes Initial Appearance

Stars in Paramount's "The Eternal Temptress" Under Direction of Emile Chautard—Billie Burke Appears Again

FOR the Christmas month the list of pictures scheduled for release in December by Paramount, is headed by the presentation of Lina Cavalieri's first picture, "The Eternal Temptress," by Mme. Fred de Gresac, scenario by Eve Unsell.

This production was directed by Emile Chautard and is said to be one of the most exquisite examples of the perfect photoplay ever released. The debut of Lina Cavalieri is only one of the features of Paramount's Christmas schedule.

Billie Burke, winsome, dainty and delightful, will be seen in "The Land of Promise," in which she also starred upon the stage. This play is by W. Somerset Maugham.

Christmas is Marguerite Clark's own month. It is the season of beautiful things, of cheer, fantasy, all that goes to make the name of Christmas, in its popular sense, wonderful. Following an annual custom, begun last year with "Snow White," Miss Clark will appear in a new fairy play, "The Seven Swans," directed by J. Searle Dawley.

Another picture in the nature of a Christmas gift to readers the world over is "Tom Sawyer," in which Jack Pickford will create upon the screen Mark Twain's immortal hero of Boyhood's happy days. It will bring back old years to those who have passed the meridian of life; it will evoke from the past, figures dear to memory. Also the rising generation will laugh and live with the doughty Tom and his friends. "Tom Sawyer" is all American. It is the quintessence of boyhood. Mark Twain said it was a hymn. The picture was directed by Wm. D. Taylor.

Wallace Reid appears in "Nan of Music Mountain," directed by George Melford—a vital story of the spreading west, written as a novel by Frank Spearman—a novel that has reached three or four editions.

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince star, is the youthful heroine of a dramatic story by Shannon Fife, called "Love Letters," the production of which was supervised by Mr. Ince and which will form an interesting release for December.

Charles Ray, also an Ince star in Paramount pictures, is to be seen in "His Mother's Boy," a picturization of "When Life Is Marked Down," by Rupert Hughes. Victor Schertzinger directed this picture, which was also supervised by Mr. Ince. It is a story with the Texas oil fields as a background.

Sessue Hayakawa will play the role of a Japanese detective in "The Secret Game," which is particularly timely because it deals with a Hun plot in the United States. It was through a clue in this story, written by Marion Fairfax and directed by Wm. C. De Mille, that a secret agent was enabled to apprehend a German spy in Southern California. The picture bristles with exciting and tense situations, it is said, and affords Hayakawa one of his best roles.

Vivian Martin is heroine of "The Fair Barbarian," from a story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, the scenario by Edith Kennedy, and directed by Robert Thornby. This is said to be a quaint and colorful little story of England, with a vivacious American girl as heroine. In book form it was a favorite years ago.

Cast Announced for New Russell Play

The complete cast of the new Russell feature, "In Bad," has been announced by the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Calif. The cast is made up of William Russell, Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Bull Montana, Carl Stockdale, Lucille Ward and Fred Smith.

William Russell, as "Monty," scorns society. But he fights his way in and out of numerous embarrassing situations and accidentally discovers a hidden treasure in the Aztec ruins of Yucatan. Francelia Billington is a beautiful young society girl, who sort of has her eye on Monty. Bull Montana is back again—he just can't keep away from Bill, somehow—he is the boxing teacher and true to type. Lucille Ward is also back with the American and is to take a prominent part in the new Russell feature.

Moss Sells "One Day" to Japanese Importer

U. Uno, representative film importer of Japan, entered into an agreement with B. S. Moss last week to take over the rights to exhibit in the flowery kingdom "One Day," sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," and the rights to "Boots and Saddles," adapted from Eugene Walter's play of that name. M. Wenescor represented the Moss interests in the deal.

Follows Present Day Fiction in Releases

Edison Company Announces Production of Peter B. Kyne's Story, "The Salt of the Earth," from Magazine Story

THE Edison Company is following in its releases more and more the trend of present-day fiction. Their next release of December 17, in which Peggy Adams and Chester Barnett are featured, is "Salt of the Earth," from Peter B. Kyne's story in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Salt of the Earth" is a story of the "gold days" in the West and is full of humor, pathos and human interest. The tale of the way two old miners outwit one of the professional swindlers who flourished in the days when any bank could be scratched for gold, is a rare one, and interwoven with it is a love story filled with emotional appeal.

William Wadsworth and Russell Simpson score real triumphs in their character-interpretations of the two old miners "Sinful John" and Snowshoe Sam" and Peggy Adams is equally charming in her part of the daughter of one miner and the pet of two others, and as a nurse in a modern hospital, from which she departs to marry the man she loves. Chester Barnett is a nice, frank, handsome young American who will attract and hold his audience by his honest and able presentation of the role of a man and a lover.

This production of Thomas A. Edison Inc. furnishes amusement and holds the interest throughout its five reels. It provides excellent diversion at this time when mental relaxation is a need that should not be underestimated nor overlooked.

Deaf Children Are Guests

Through the invitation of Harold Edel, the manager, 285 children and teachers from New York Public School 47, for the deaf, attended the afternoon performance at the Strand Theater, one day last week. The main attraction was Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess."

Presents "Macbeth" In Pictures

W. H. Productions Company Offers Shakespeare Tragedy With Sir Beerbohn Tree in Leading Role

SHAKESPEARE has never really come into his own in the field of motion pictures. It has often been said that his work would be ruined if put into the silent drama; that when the plays were stripped of the beauty of the lines there would be nothing left but an empty shell. This is partially true. If someone tried to rewrite the lines of some of his plays and put them on the stage, the result would be awful, but it does not follow that the plays cannot be used for photoplays, with an excellent result.

The poet has created the finest characters in the history of the English stage. He has built up some of the most remarkable plots that will ever be conceived. As plot and character drawing are the chief prerequisites to the good scenario, why is not Shakespeare put into pictures?

The reason is not difficult to find. It is chiefly because of the profound and unreasoning aversion of most of the producers and exhibitors to costume plays. There seems to be no real drawback to a costume play, either. Every time a good one has been produced it became successful. The unfortunate side of the situation is that only a few of our modern producers seem to have the courage to turn them out.

One of the few to break away from the foolish viewpoint is the W. H. Productions Co., who will release "Macbeth," featuring Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree; a great outlay, a great story, a great actor and a great cast.

In speaking of the fact, that this picture is among their new releases, an official of that organization said recently:

"In the production of Shakesperian plays lies an opportunity to link up educational to the entertaining values of a picture. Every high school boy and girl in the country, to say nothing of those who enter our colleges, study Shakespeare, and there is not a man or woman in the country possessing any education, who does not know and appreciate his work. Then there are those who never have an opportunity to see or study his work, but who nevertheless should be brought to understand it. This latter class cannot fail to appreciate his plays, for Shakespeare is universal, he reaches everyone.

"It is certain that there can be no fear as to their favorable reception, as Shakespeare has never ceased to be popular and never will.

"It is simply a question of putting the plays on properly, for it is only in that, that they can fail.

"We have chosen 'Macbeth' as our first release, for the reason that it is one of the best known of his plays, and because it offers a particularly excellent opportunity for picturization. There is such a wealth of material for big scenes and action, that it dwarfs the efforts of the modern photoplay writer by comparison."

Famous Old Theater Used in Picture

The famous old Garden Theater, at Twenty-seventh street and Madison avenue, New York, the scene of many stage successes of a decade ago was used recently for the staging of scenes in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "An American Widow," under the direction of Frank Reicher.

This story called for scenes showing the premiere of a comedy success on the stage with a capacity first night audience, and the presence of the author and his wife in a lower box. Scenes were also taken of a panic of the audience at the supposed call of "fire." For the photographing of these various scenes in the theater a score of high powered studio lights were installed by Frank Detering, Metro electrical director, and his state. Many unusual lighting effects were secured, including one which showed the gradual darkening of the theater as the curtain was lowered, and the "throwing on" of the house lights at the intermission.

First Petrova Picture Dec. 23

"Daughter of Destiny" Will Be Released Through First National—Second Petrova Picture Is Finished

IN answer to the thousands of inquiries from exhibitors and fans which have poured into the office of the Petrova Picture Company, a statement was issued this week announcing the release date of the initial starring vehicle of Madame Petrova for Sunday, December 23.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first of the eight pictures in which the famous star will appear during the forthcoming year, will be shown on this date and throughout the entire week at the Rialto Theater, New York, and also in all of the largest photoplay temples in the country.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first picture to be produced under the auspices of the Petrova Picture Company, was finished and ready for showing on the date originally scheduled, but following a conference between the executives of the Petrova organization and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through the offices of which the Petrova productions will be issued, it was deemed advisable to withhold the film until all of the exchanges were in active operation. It was also decided by the producing and releasing factors to have the second Petrova picture entirely completed and its successor in course of production before definitely fixing the release date of the initial production.

Inasmuch as the objects outlined above have been completely attained, "Daughter of Destiny" will be given to the first run theaters in the United States on Sunday, December 23. The selection of this date is regarded by the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit as exceedingly appropriate because of the holiday season and the many exhibitors who will offer Madame Petrova in her first picture to their patrons will therefore receive an unexpected Christmas gift.

The distinguished Polish star has finished her second picture, the title for which has not yet been chosen, and started on the third of the eight special features which will make up the Petrova cycle.

Celebrates One Year in Film Plays

Exhibitors who have been showing Gladys Brockwell's pictures and displaying her name on printed and electric lighted signs at their theaters will probably be surprised when their attention is called to the fact that the William Fox actress is only now celebrating the end of her first year in stardom. "Sins of Her Parent" was the production in which she made her debut twelve months ago and "A Branded Soul," recently released, is the latest picture in which she has been filmed. Between the two she appeared in six other features.

Nine Releases By Fox in December

Four Standard Pictures and Five Special Features Include Annette Kellerman's "Daughter of the Gods"

NINE releases, four standard pictures and five special features, are scheduled to be made by William Fox during December. William Farnum, Annette Kellerman, and Jane and Katherine Lee will be represented in the standard pictures, and Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, George Walsh, June Caprice, Jewel Carmen and Virginia Pearson in the Fox Features.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the Kellerman production which ran from October 17, 1916, to February, 1917, in the Lyric Theater, New York, and which since has been shown and advertised in all parts of the country, will be released December 2 as a standard picture. It is a fairy tale with a marine setting.

On the same date, the Carpenter-Corbin picture, "The Babes in the Woods," originally scheduled as one of the standard pictures and to have been available December 23, will be offered as a special feature, a 52-a-year issue. It is a picturization of the fairy story of the same name, the scenes centering about the witch's home in the gingerbread house.

"Troublemakers" will be the standard picture released December 9 and in which Jane and Katherine Lee perform pranks that keep adults constantly in hot water. The special feature of the same date, a war drama, "The Pride of New York," tells a story beginning with the draft and ending in the trenches. The star is George Walsh.

William Farnum will be seen in a December 16 issue, "The Heart of a Lion." This is a visualization of Ralph Connor's "The Doctor," a tale of the Canadian Rockies. At the same time there will be released the Caprice picture, "Unknown 274," in which is told the story of a foundling's troubles, ending in her unexpected restoration to her father.

The week of December 23, the only one of the month in which there will be no release of standard pictures, has been exclusively reserved for Miss Carmen, who will make her debut as a star in "The Kingdom of Love," a production dealing with a young woman's career in a mining camp and especially with a minister's interest in her.

The last releases of the year, December 30, will be an interpretation of the character of the famous "Du Barry," mistress of King Louis XV of France, and a Virginia Pearson picture entitled "Stolen Honor." The latter tells of the theft of a painting and the attempt to fix the crime on an innocent woman. The "Du Barry" production was directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

"Over There" Is Recruiting Stimulant

Select Feature Picture Makes Direct Appeal to Young Men Eligible for Military Service

REPORTS received by Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, indicate that one of the reasons why "Over There," starring Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson, is being heavily booked throughout the country, is because of its very direct appeal to men of enlisting age.

It is estimated by those who have seen the picture, that its presentation will have an appreciable influence on recruiting for the United States army, and in this connection the famous land battleship, "The Recruit," which is anchored in Union Square, New York City, plays a leading part.

"Over There" is a big patriotic play built about the thrilling scenes which followed America's entering the war with Germany, and concerns the lives of a small group of young persons who, in their various ways, rise to the occasion.

During the action of the story, both stars in their respective roles enter into Uncle Sam's whirlwind recruiting campaign, and a number of stirring scenes are staged on the speaking deck of "The Recruit." This is the first time that the celebrated dry-land man of war has entered into the making of a photo-drama, and its appearance on the screen invariably gets a hand.

The picture was produced under the direction of James Kirkwood, and its battle scenes have been especially commented on for their careful staging and attention to detail. It is a red-blooded play of war and love.

His engagement with Miss Young marks his first appearance in pictures.

Wallace Reid will go to Truckee, California as soon as the first snows occur to film some of the few remaining scenes in "Nan of Music Mountain," a Paramount picture, which are supposed to take place in a blizzard.

Demand Coinage of Fifteen-Cent Piece

LEADERS OF THE BUSINESS WORLD SEE NEED OF NEW COIN

TRADE demands a fifteen cent piece. The need is not a new one exactly, but it has been vastly emphasized of late in the retail lines by war-time prices, war taxes and other war developments.

Business men insist that trade and buyer's convenience indicate brisk demand for a coin between the dime and the twenty-five cent piece in value and that this necessity is daily becoming more urgent.

Men prominent in big business organizations are pushing the campaign for a fifteen cent coin, which was launched by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, his principal supporters being Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company; S. A. Perkins, proprietor of the Tacoma Ledger and owner of seven coast newspapers; John G. Shedd, president of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago; Robert Mandel of Mandel Brothers, Chicago, and Thomas J. Connery of Pittsburgh.

"The plan to coin a fifteen cent piece," said Mr. Freuler, "does not involve the abolition of any coin now in use, but the introduction of a new coin between the dime and the quarter in size.

"There is a widespread demand for a fifteen cent piece due in a measure to the rise in prices which has established a fifteen cent price for innumerable small articles of commerce.

"For instance, in the department stores a huge volume of fifteen cent articles is handled, the sale of which would be facilitated and perhaps heavily increased by addition of a convenient coin to the currency."

Many Fifteen Cent Cigars

"In the cigar trade the need for a new coin is being particularly felt, but in no avenue of business is the necessity greater than in the motion picture field, since fifteen cents is rapidly becoming the standard admission price.

"The psychology of salesmanship recognizes as a handicap to trade the necessity for changing a quarter to pay a 15 cent bill, or for searching a handful of small change to extract the necessary nickel and dime.

Sales Lost for Want of Coin

"In many instances the prospective purchaser, unable promptly to lay hands on necessary change, passes on without making a contemplated purchase. This is more especially the case in department stores, where a customer's wait for change becomes an appreciable factor in the situation, but it is hardly less true of motion picture patronage or any other business in which the standard price of the commodity vended is fifteen cents.

"We once had a twenty cent piece coinage of which was abolished because it too closely approximated the twenty-five cent piece in value, and the objection to that coin was well taken, but no such condition can be urged where a fifteen cent coin is concerned, because it is now generally conceded that there is too great a gap between the ten and twenty-five cent pieces to satisfy the interests of the trading public.

Purchaser Wants Exact Change

"A purchaser likes to run his hand into his pocket and be able to find the coin he needs for his small purchase. There is no good reason why this demand should not be fulfilled."

John G. Shedd, head of Marshall Field and Company, said:

"There is no doubt that the coinage of a fifteen cent piece would go far to facilitate trade and I regard the movement for such an addition to the existing currency as well taken."

Robert Mandel of Mandel Bros., said:

"Addition of a fifteen cent piece to the coinage would prove of value in all lines of business and it would especially facilitate trade in fifteen cent standard articles of which there are many handled by the large stores. I am strongly in favor of the fifteen cent piece idea."

Editor Approves Idea

S. A. Perkins of the Tacoma Ledger says:

"There is no question but that a coinage of a fifteen cent piece would be an excellent thing. I shall urge the matter upon members of Congress in the west."

Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company, says:

"My opinion is that a fifteen cent coin would be of great value to the trading public and to merchants in every line of business. I shall promote the plan in any way that I can."

Mr. Freuler is receiving many indorsements of the fifteen cent idea. An organization of the interests principally involved to bring the matter before Congress in proper form is soon to be undertaken.

Apple Pie Is Press Agent's Downfall

He Causes Mary Garden to Eat It for Breakfast And She Causes Him to Seek Some Other Employment

THIS is the valedictory of a press agent who caused an apple pie to be baked for Mary Garden's breakfast and then persuaded her to eat it.

It is a sad story.

When the famous opera star went to Florida recently for the filming of several scenes in "Thais," in which she is to make her bow in the movies, her press agent, as a matter of course, went along. He was a good enough press agent, as press agents go, but he erred, as press agents will, by overdoing his job.

Mary Garden as She Appears in "Thais."

When Miss Garden's party reached Jacksonville, the man whose duty is was to see that the newspapers were made aware of all the sensational details of her advent found himself without a peg to hang a story on.

The diva hadn't got off the train along the way to pick flowers and been left behind when it started again; she hadn't said she'd never appear with a leading man who had black, curly hair; she hadn't even refused to occupy the suite set aside for her at the hotel.

Obviously, something had to be done.

It didn't take a whole lot of thought or very many dollar bills to persuade the chef of the hotel that the opera-movie star couldn't get along without pie—apple pie—for her breakfast, nor very many telephone calls to apprize the ever-awake newspapermen of the Florida metropolis that the chef was going to stay up all night to build a confection fit to grace her breakfast table. The pie was baked, the morning papers printed the story and the star found the stage all set when she came down to breakfast. All she had to do to make the story "stand up" was eat the pie.

Guests of the hotel glanced up from their newspapers as the star entered the dining room and smiled to themselves as if murmuring, "Fake! Fake! You never can believe what you read in the newspapers."

But they—and the press agent—had reckoned without Miss Garden. She very carefully divided the pie into the proper number of sectors and devoured one with every evidence of relish.

The press agent's honor had been vindicated.

But—

Pies is pies and breakfasts have a habit of being something different from business men's lunches. Even prima donnas who are moving picture stars can't change nature.

But they can change press agents.

Starts "The Grand Passion"

Following fast in the footsteps of "Pay Me" and "The Co-Respondent," Jewel Productions, Inc., announce the early release of another big feature entitled "The Grand Passion," an adaptation of "The Boss of Powderville," by Thomas Addison.

Begin the Day With a Song

Film Star Tells How to Make a Good Start for a Hard Day's Work in the Studio

BY MARGARITA FISCHER,
American screen star.

BEGIN the day with a pleasant frame of mind. That always makes a pleasant day, in spite of the weather.

If I yawned and groaned and fervently wished that I didn't have to get up and get to work, I would be miserable all day long. So would everybody about me.

Not me!

I bounce right out when the clock calls out "Six-thirty, Margarita, dear, and time for little girls to be up and about."

Inside of five minutes I am splashing around in my tub and warbling out songs at the top of my voice. This is to wake the rest of the family, for I must confess that I am the only early riser of the bunch. And then come my exercises!

Yes, indeed, I believe in exercises. I have a set of them made up especially for me by a famous physical director and when you do this you sort of have a feeling that with an exclusive set of exercises that cost you a lot of money it would be wasteful not to use them every day.

A nice cold bath, ten minutes of wholesome exercise by an open window, and I am ready for breakfast. And when I say breakfast I mean a regular meal. I'm a healthy girl and I have a regular appetite.

And usually I have a hard day's work before me. So I tuck away a nice comfortable breakfast that makes Kange, our Jap boy, smile. He wouldn't like it a bit if I didn't eat the lovely things he prepares for my breakfast.

So that is how I begin my day. And then I get into the handiest gown and Sister Dorothy and I drive to the studio for the day's grind. Although it really isn't a grind to me, for I love every bit of it and am always ready to put in a full day at it. You'd never in the wide world succeed at anything if you didn't love your work. I'm crazy about mine.

Beach Copies Old Gaming House

THE gambling house scene in Rex Beach's motion picture production of "The Auction Block," his novel of New York's night life, is so strikingly realistic as to be provocative of comment from those who have seen the film at private showings. Inquiry of the author reveals the reason for this.

"More than one of New York's old-timers will recall, without thinking back very far, the notorious house with the bronze door," said Mr. Beach. "It stood in the middle Forties, a defiance to honest policemen and a blessing to crooked ones, one of the most famous gambling houses New York has ever known.

"From time to time some of the doings in New York's now generally defunct gaming places have come to public attention through the courts. Their history was pretty well spread on the records at the Becker trials. But no one in authority ever succeeded in finding out just what went on behind the sturdy bronze door, intended as a psychological and physical deterrent for the axe men of the strong-arm days.

"If popular belief is to be credited, the men who spent a fortune for this door and in furnishing the interior in a manner in keeping with this expensive novelty never realized very handsomely on their investment. Police protection rates in those days were almost as high per dollar as the graduated income tax schedule of today.

"We tried in setting the scene for the gambling raid in 'The Auction Block' to approximate from memory the layout and furnishings of this justly celebrated house."

Julian L'Estrange Is Metro Player

Julian L'Estrange, an experienced player of the stage and screen, is playing the leading male role of Arthur Frome in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak." This play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani and is being directed by Mr. Capellani.

Mr. L'Estrange is an Englishman and has played in London with Sir Herbert Tree, Arthur Boucher, Sir George Alexander and Ellen Terry in Shakespearean and modern plays. His first American appearance was with William Faversham in "Imprudence" at the Empire Theater, New York, in 1902. Then L'Estrange returned to England, returning to America in 1908.

He was leading man with Maxine Elliott for two years, opening the Maxine Elliott theater with the star in "The Chaperon," and also supported her in "Myself Bettina" and other plays. For three years he was Billie Burke's leading man in "Mrs. Dot," "Susanne," and "Love Watches." He played in "Her First Divorce," with Laura Hope Crews, and with John Drew in "The Tyranny of Tears."

In motion pictures, Julian L'Estrange has been leading man for Pauline Frederick in the Famous Players' productions "Zara," "Sold," and "Bella Donna." He was co-starred with Katherine Kaeldred in Pathe's "The Girl With the Green Eyes," and appeared with Maurice and Florence Walton in the Famous Players' picture "The Whirl of Life." His role in the forthcoming Metro production is one well suited to his histrionic talents.

Latest News From West Coast Studios

LIVELY HAPPENINGS ASSEMBLED FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO KNOW

BY RICHARD WILLIS

IN literary circles co-authors are rare enough, among scenario writers they are almost unknown. Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morse, who are now working with an eastern company, have collaborated on many successful screen stories, originating the ideas and writing the continuity. The Dorrances recently had one of their short stories produced at the Paralta, but they did not write the continuity, and William Parker and Beatrice Van have written together for Margarita Fischer. For steady product the Misses Ashton and Morse occupy a singular position in the photoplay world.

Recently the Vitagraph company made some scenes at the beautiful home of Percy Williams, the vaudeville magnate. Corinne Griffith was screened in some wonderfully lighted scenes and Mr. Williams seemed to enjoy helping the company to get just what they required. As a mark of appreciation the artists and director presented Mr. Williams with a silver cigarette case on which was engraved Miss Griffith's name in facsimile, and the recipient was much gratified with the remembrance.

Monroe Salisbury is soon to be seen again in the first photoplay in which he became well known to screen followers. "The Goose Girl," in which he played the prince to Marguerite Clark's goose girl. He made a most romantic prince and the reissue of this Lasky feature is bound to attract considerable attention. Monroe Salisbury is now a star in his own right and is supported instead of supporting.

Grace Cunard and her mother are turning out a number of knitted things for the boys these days and Grace says she never did so much "garment" work in her life. She is specializing on sweaters; the caps and wristlets get done too quickly to please her.

The remark that Charles Ray is working on a new story is quite a stale one. The fact is that Charlie always has two or three stories planned out ahead and he hates to be idle and he does not give his director or cameraman any time to be idle, either. They are known as the "perpetual motion triplets" and everyone around them seems to like being hustled by them. Ray is at present engaged on a story bearing on the question of heredity.

Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan finish up their work in "The Lost Express" this week and go to New York early next week. It is said they will change their affiliations. They have made four serials for the Signal company, all of which have been highly successful.

The writing of Frank H. Spearman, the author of "Nan of Music Mountain," "Whispering Smith" and other virile novels, is much in demand among the movie companies. The latter story was put on by the Signal company and "Nan" has just been made into a stirring feature by the Famous-Lasky combination with Wally Reid and Anna Little in the principal roles. It has made a corking good photoplay. The very day that Mr. Spearman landed in Los Angeles he met S. S. Hutchinson in the offices of Willis and Inglis and immediately signed up for "The Girl and the Game," which he wrote in comparatively short order and which was a huge success and gave him his introduction to the motion pictures. Since then he has earned many thousands of dollars in southern California.

Ford Sterling is acting with Henry Lehrman in the Sunshine Comedies. Ford, who has been off the screen for some time, taking a good holiday, and has been shining as a nimrod and as a catcher of fish, says he has been assisting to reduce the high cost of living.

Many people have written to Alfred Whitman of the Vitagraph company telling him how wonderfully he resembles Alfred Vosburgh, who co-starred with Vivian Rich for so long in American pictures. Alfred has a form letter answering such comments in which he states that Whitman WAS Vosburg before the war, but, although he never was within thousands of miles from Hunland, the company deemed it wiser to change his name. Mr. Whitman recently scored as the Red Prince in the Vitagraph feature, "The Flaming Omen."

Myrtle Stedman is keeping a diary, in which are recorded her impressions of the cities and towns she is visiting, of her various receptions and the many odd incidents connected with her "personal appearance" tour. On her return, Miss Stedman intends to write her experiences down, and they should make most interesting reading. Miss Stedman has little to say to the audiences; they prefer to listen to her splendid singing, and she prefers to sing anyway!

Crane Wilbur is very much in the public's eye just now. His pictures, directed by himself, by the way, made for the Art Dramas concern, are all over the country and the big morality feature, "The Finger of Justice," has been scoring a huge hit in San Francisco and will travel the states. In this, Crane Wilbur has the best part he ever played. Again, he is acting at the Bishop Theater at Oakland and they are "turning 'em away." Mr. Wilbur has no idea whatever of deserting the screen, but he likes to renew acquaintance with the footlights now and again.

Edward Sloman, the American director, has taken nearly a whole week's vacation to celebrate the signing of another two years' contract with the American company. Ted left no address but returned with several entirely new fish stories and quite a number of fish. He says he feels like a giant refreshed, so there is some tall hustling to be done by everyone connected with the volatile Ted in the near future. He will still direct Bill Russell.

George Holt of the Vitagraph and the writer are two of the photoplay colony who live right on the beach and take a dip in the ocean every morning before breakfast. They live within a block of each other and generally enter the water together and see who can swim the farthest in the shortest time. It is about a tie between them. Holt has it on us though, as he saved a man's life at Santa Monica this summer.

Fay Tincher is the star of a new company recently formed with New York capital and will start work on Monday under the direction of Al Santell. The concern has rented the Willis & Inglis studios at East Hollywood and will make two reel comedies. The outlet will be announced as soon as the contracts are actually signed, but it is stated a release is arranged. In the dearth of good comedies the return of Miss Tincher will be welcomed and she is delighted to be the head of her own company after turning down a number of attractive offers for her services.

With W. W. Hodgkinson at the helm of a distributing concern which is to handle Paralta pictures, the wonderful personality of Bessie Barriscale will soon again be seen on the screen. It is a long time since she last had a picture released, but in her case absence has made the heart grow fonder and she will be doubly welcomed, especially as she has been appearing in some remarkably fine features. "Madam Who" will be the first picture to be shown an eager public and it is SOME picture too.

"You are far too good looking to be a director" writes a young female person to Henry King, the director who is making the Mary Miles Minter features at Santa Barbara. Of course she also asks for a photograph, they all do. Henry does not know just how to take this. Is it a slur against the looks of directors in general, of which he is one? Miss Minter tells him that he need not flatter himself anyhow, the young female person is merely collecting pictures and "uses taffy to all of them."

Webster Campbell, the Vitagraph juvenile lead, is one of the young leading men who believe in keeping fit. He was an athlete at school and college and has never let up on his athletic exercises. One can tell he is in perfect trim by the way he walks and he is an ardent pedestrian.

Enid Markey is getting some experience with wild animals during the screening of "Tarzan of the Apes" under the direction of Scott Sidney. She made the acquaintance of a lion face to face, has stalked deer and caressed apes and baboons. Miss Enid says it is all very exciting and she is enjoying the novelty of it all, but finds she has a preference for tame animals and has no desire to exchange her Boston bull pup for any of the "pets" she has been meeting of late.

Capellani Begins Work for Metro

Albert Capellani, who will be introduced to Metro patrons in connection with an Emily Stevens picture, already has begun work on the new production, a screen version of "Daybreak," the play written by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. Produced in New York earlier in the season, and now touring the country, it has been adapted for the screen by the director himself in collaboration with June Mathis.

Elaborate Set Is Built for Picture

"The Lifted Cross" Is Second Alice Brady-Select Production—First Production Is Ready for Release

FOR Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Lifted Cross," which is an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Bronte's novel, "Jane Eyre," one of the most elaborate interiors ever devised for a screen play has been built in the Select Pictures studio on Fifty-fourth street, New York.

The studio which was formerly a religious edifice, has been transformed into the stately interior of an old English manor house, and its stained glass windows, massive pillars and vaulted ceiling lend themselves readily to the illusion. The set has been carefully designed and is an exact replica of the library, entrance hall and breakfast room in the Duke of Devonshire's famous country place.

"The Lifted Cross," will be the second of Miss Brady's Select productions, the first, "Her Silent Sacrifice," being now on the eve of release. Eliott Dexter has been chosen to support her in the character of Rochester and a group of excellent players, including Helen Green, Helen Lindroth and Victor Benoit, have been given the other necessary roles. The picture is rapidly forging ahead under the able direction of Edward Jose and when finished will be distributed by Select.

Goes South In Search of Spring

Madge Kennedy and Company of Leighten Players Leave New York to Film Scenes for New Picture

SPRING, at this writing about as remote as anything hopeful New Yorkers contemplate, is a very necessary item in the filming of Madge Kennedy's new Goldwyn starring vehicle, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" As a consequence, Miss Kennedy and her company of eighteen have gone to Georgia in search of peach blossoms and mad bulls.

Mad bulls aren't particularly a concomitant of spring, to be sure, but "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" requires the services of one and the scenic assistance of a lot of peach trees in bloom. A bull sufficiently angry might have been found in the vicinity of the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., but it was thought best to photograph him in conjunction with the peach blossoms. The bull chases one of the principal characters in the picture up a blooming peach tree.

The Kennedy company is at Savannah and is working out from there on various locations. It consists, besides the star, of George Forth, leading man; Marcia Harris, George Stevens, Yolande Duquette, Marguerite Marsh, Bernard Thornton, Harry Myers, Kathleen McFahren, Dixie Thompson, J. William Weston, William Carr, Logan Paul and Alton Hamilton.

Miss Kennedy's director in the new picture is Arthur H. Ashley, noted as a picture player and director. He directed the World-Brady production of "Rasputin, the Black Monk," and played an important role. Just before joining Goldwyn he directed the production of "The Making of a Nation" for the same producers. Mr. Ashley's personal staff consists of Clarence Jay Elmer, assistant, and Edward Brophy, technical assistant.

The photography of "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" will be in the hands of William Fildew, a recruit from the Griffith forces.

The Kennedy company will be in Georgia several weeks, after which it will return to the studios for the filming of the interior scenes. "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" is from the novel of George Weston.

Metro Man Edits Newspaper in Trenches

A newspaper from the trenches is being printed "Somewhere in France" by the boys of Company "C," 165th United States Infantry, its editor and principal contributor being Louis Klopsch of Metro. Klopsch was formerly a member of Metro's publicity staff. The official organ of "C" company is known as "C What Happens."

Chicago's Censorship Is On Trial

COUNCIL COMMITTEE HOLDS FURTHER HEARING ON PROPOSED ORDINANCE

IN a bitter debate over censorship before the Steffen council subcommittee in Chicago, Major Funkhouser, Chicago's censor, incurred the ire of the committee at almost his first remark.

He charged that the Steffen amendatory ordinance was "a personal attack" on him.

The remark came when Chairman Steffen, in reply to a request from Father Frederick Siedenburg of Loyola University outlined the plan of his amendment.

"This amendment," he said, "is definite and concrete. It eliminates the present censor of moving pictures from the censorship situation. It provides for a board of ten. I have not attempted in the amendment, which is our working basis, to say how this board should be appointed.

"The amendment has in view a fair solution of the censorship situation. In no measure is it an attack on Major Funkhouser, whose record on the police department is good, and I think Major Funkhouser so understands the situation."

"I wish I could understand it that way," broke in the major. "This is a personal fight!"

Resents Major's Attitude

Alderman Maypole turned on Major Funkhouser.

"This committee," he said with heat, "is accepting all statements here without impugning motives or integrity.

"Major Funkhouser, by his remark, challenges the statement and veracity of the chairman. I resent the remark."

"There may be many on the opposite side of this question," observed Chairman Steffen.

"Plenty," said Funkhouser. "I did not mean what Alderman Maypole construed."

"I stand by my remark," exclaimed Alderman Maypole. "I have no retraction to make."

Shortly after Major Funkhouser was put on the stand Father Siedenberg and several of the club women present had stated that they did not understand that one-man censorship existed—that there was a board of censors.

Funkhouser Takes Stand

Funkhouser himself dispelled the idea that the board had any power.

"Have you always followed the recommendations of the board?" asked Chairman Steffen.

"Not always," replied the witness, shortly.

"You really are the official censor?"

"I am," replied the major. "Some members of the board didn't understand that, but some of those are beginning to understand now."

The major showed his viewpoint on censorship by reading from an Ohio Supreme Court decision, which held that it was "immoral or obscene" to present a murder, an arson, or other felony in a picture.

Father Siedenburg said early in the session:

"The moving picture industry as a whole is a good and glorious business. Its great educational and recreative value is conceded. It is not the use, but the abuse of pictures, to which we object. We are the friends of the moving picture men if they will only see it in this light.

"I haven't the least idea that there is one-man censorship."

One-Man Censorship Exists

Attorney Herbert Friedman, representing the Chicago Film Exchange, stated that there was one-man censorship and he would prove it.

Mrs. Hannah Soloman, chairman of the city ordinances committee of the Chicago Woman's Club, and evidently friendly to the cause of Major Funkhouser, declared that the moving picture people had the right of appeal to the courts for redress.

Attorney Friedman denied this. He declared that even when the picture won in court before judge and jury, it was the policy of the corporation counsel's office to take an appeal.

"And we are tied up in court for two or three years. I'll ask Mr. Ayres of the corporation counsel's office if this is not so."

Denies Attorney's Statement

To the surprise of every one, Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres, who was supposed to be present in a neutral capacity, denied this statement with heat and attacked Mr. Friedman's veracity.

Mr. Friedman had the record read back, cited numerous court cases and appeals, and apparently fully sustained his position. He demanded a retraction from the assistant corporation counsel, but it was not forthcoming.

Attorney Friedman cited "The Little American" as one picture on which the court decision had been appealed. The club women evidently were surprised at the information they received with reference to the actual operations of the censorship law.

"Clubwomen Do Not Know"

Mrs. Guy Blanchard of the Political Equality League declared in favor of censorship, but by a board of censors.

Mrs. Batten of the Illinois State Federation of Women's Clubs declared that the women favored state censorship through a state board.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears of the American Film Company cited the case of women who objected to the showing of "Alice in Wonderland" because in one scene Alice stole some tarts from a table. Mrs. Sears said that, as a rule, club women knew little or nothing about moving pictures.

There was a total absence of defense for one-man censorship even among the persons upon whom Major Funkhouser evidently relied for support.

At a banquet given in honor of A. W. Brady by the Chicago Exhibitors' League last Monday night at the Hotel Sherman, Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, addee some illuminating views.

Exhibitor Is to Blame

"Censorship exists only because of the exhibitor himself," says Aaron J. Jones. "The average exhibitor says that he is not interested in censorship, but that it is 'up to the producer' only. He is badly mistaken, and does not realize the injury he is doing to himself when he airs such views. It does not occur to him that when a patron leaves his theater, after having witnessed a picture butchered by the censor, that said patron doesn't reason why the censoring was made or who produced the picture, but in his own mind has merely declared it 'a bad picture.'

"Thus, the patron in time learns to avoid the motion picture theater having 'the bad picture' and it is only by a 'get together' movement among the exhibitors that the right kind of censorship of motion pictures can be had.

The ordinance introduced into the City Council of Chicago, by Alderman Walter P. Steffen, argues for a ten member censor board. The idiosyncracies and peculiar deviations of mind experienced by the present censor, Major Funkhouser, are too well known to dwell upon lengthily, but it stands to reason that no one man is capable of telling two million and a half inhabitants of Chicago what they should see or should not see.

One Man Censorship Wrong

"What one man may like, another may not. What one man may declare immoral, another may not. And thus, Major Funkhouser enters the projection room at the censor board with a chip on his shoulder and with malice aforethought in his heart.

"The exhibitors of Chicago must get together to protect themselves individually, as well as collectively, and get behind the Steffen ordinance, so that Chicago may have just, honorable, and efficient censorship of its motion pictures.

"And therein is breathed plain truths, an understanding of conditions in the 'second largest German City,' where Funkhouser refused permits to 'The Little American,' 'The Spy' and numerous full-fledged pro-American pictures because of the fact that they might 'hurt the feelings' of German residents in Chicago.

"When one man is allowed to ruin the labor, the cost, the investment and the patriotic efforts that went to make the above American pictures, just because in his fetid brain they might offend 'our enemies' it is high time that exhibitors got together for 'fair play' and just censonship."

Queen Lil Funeral Is to Be Filmed

Funeral ceremonies of Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii, who died in Honolulu, November 11th, are to be filmed exclusively for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by arrangement with the territorial government of the Hawaiian Islands, secured by George Melford, who is now at the Islands with Sessue Hayakawa directing "Hidden Pearls" for Paramount.

Another Wolfville Tale Is Ready for Screen

Vitagraph Presents "The Tenderfoot," in Which William Duncan Appears with Carrol Holloway Opposite Him

"THE Tenderfoot," the second picture made from the Wolfville tales of Alfred Henry Lewis, is announced by Greater Vitagraph, as the Blue Ribbon feature for the week of December 3. This, like "Dead Shot Baker," was directed by William Duncan, who also plays the star role. Carol Holloway appears opposite him.

The announcement declares that "The Tenderfoot," in many respects, is an even better feature than "Dead Shot Baker," which was acclaimed by critics one of the finest western pictures ever offered to exhibitors. The story is rich in humor and the sub-titles are in the quaint range dialect which characterizes the Lewis stories.

President Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, in commenting on this feature, said that he thought it one of the best offerings his company had made in many months.

"People like to see western pictures, because of the fine riding of the cowboys and the thrilling action," said Mr. Smith. "and for this reason I believe that the stories should be the finest obtainable. The Wolfville stories of Alfred Henry Lewis have taken their place in American literature as classics of the old west and we intend that the pictures made from them shall be just as high class as the stories. No expense has been spared in making these first two and the same policy will prevail in the making of all the other Wolfville pictures."

"The Tenderfoot," according to the Vitagraph statement, is remarkable for its splendid photography and its lighting effects. It is the story of the young man who went west because the eastern girl would not return his love. She also comes west and he shows his worth by saving her life and her reputation, but she is incapable of appreciating his honest devotion. Meantime, a true western girl has come into his life. He admires her and she secretly loves him.

The eastern girl through a flirtation with Wolfville's bad man, embroils the Tenderfoot and he must sneak from town or remain and fight with the odds pointing to his certain death. He stays and wins the western girl as his bride, while the other girl returns east.

Two scenes stand out in "The Tenderfoot." The eastern girl to arouse the jealously of the Tenderfoot, invites the attentions of a young Indian brave and he, scheming to win her, sends ponies to the white folks camp. Innocent of the Indian custom, she accepts them and thus is bound to marry the redman. In her hysteria of fear, she appeals to the Tenderfoot to save her, promising to marry him if he will. The Tenderfoot goes out alone and kills the Indian in a rifle duel only to be again put aside by the girl.

In the closing scene in Wolfville's saloon, the bad man sits with the western girl waiting for the Tenderfoot to come in so he can kill him. Pretending an affection for him, the western girl plies him with liquor and exchanges the cartridges in his revolver for harmless charges. Knowing nothing of this, the Tenderfoot enters and unscathed by the first shots, closes in on the bad man and drives him from town. And as the western girl is confiding to the dazed Tenderfoot what she did because she loved him, her rival is riding away from Wolfville into the east.

Comfortable Chair Is Conversation Cause

In the well appointed office of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, the furniture is artistic and massive. There is a portrait of Napoleon on the wall and several other fine oils.

Until a few days ago one of the finest things in the room was a beautifully upholstered leather guest chair at one side of Mr. Smith's desk. But it is no more and here is the reason:

"I have always tried to see everyone who calls on me," said Mr. Smith, "because it is only courteous that I should. But I found that my visitors took up too much of my time. Often, when callers had finished the matter in hand, they continued to linger and I was drawn, time and time again, into a general conversation about the motion picture industry, the high cost of living, religion and a thousand other topics. The result was that I was spending too much time talking and my work was interfered with. The other day Cyrus Townsend Brady was here and remarked: 'You know, this is the most comfortable chair I have occupied in the Lord knows when.' I had the chair removed that afternoon."

Vitagraph Plans Big Billboard Campaign

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing organization for Greater Vitagraph, makes the announcement that the nationwide billboard campaign in connection with "Vengeance—and the Woman," the new fifteen-episode serial, will begin early in December. Arrangements have been made to post twenty-four sheets in all towns of 10,000 population and upward between December 15 and January 1 and after the later date posting will begin in towns under 10,000.

Mr. Irwin declares that the company proposes to cover twice as many stands as were covered in the campaign for "The Fighting Trail," double and in many cases triple the amount of space being leased all over the country.

Jack Pickford Rescues Baby from Fire

In the process of translating "Tom Sawyer" to the screen for Paramount, Jack Pickford, who plays Tom, and the company, under the direction of William D. Taylor, were working in a little Missouri town. During the night the small hotel in which they were staying caught fire and the lives of the guests were endangered. Jack Pickford was one of the first out of bed and into his clothing, and hearing some one crying that a baby was asleep in a room on the third story, he rushed upstairs and carried the infant down a ladder to safety. After rescuing the child he saved three camera cases, several boxes of film, a mattress, an armful of phonograph records and several pieces of furniture.

Preacher Rebukes Preacher For Picture Attack

EPISCOPAL CHURCH RECTOR PRAISES INDUSTRY FOR GOOD IT ACCOMPLISHES

THE Rev. H. E. Robbins, rector of St. Mary's Episcopal Church at Salamanca, N. Y., and manager of the Strand Amusement Corporation in that territory, a booster for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, as well as for all good films, has written to H. F. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the National Board of Review, the following letter in which he answers the charges brought by a certain minister against motion pictures, at the Episcopal Congress held recently in Cincinnati:

"October 30th, 1917.

"My Dear Mr. Sherwood:

"Replying to yours of October 27th relative to statement recently made in Cincinnati at the Episcopal Congress, I have to say that as owner and manager of one of the largest moving picture theaters in western New York, I deny the statements made.

"Of course if the person who made the statement has the proofs he can name the 'large number of motion picture manufacturers' and can designate some of the pictures to substantiate his claim.

Preacher Studies Pictures

"I have made the business my avocation and careful study for many years, and have had extensive dealings with manufacturers and exchanges. I know many of the leaders personally. I think that my acquaintance with the subject ought to be such as to qualify me as an authority in the matter. As a clergyman in the Episcopal Church my interest has been such as to especially call to my attention the defects of moving pictures and the business of exhibiting and producing moving pictures.

"I know quite thoroughly the policy and productions of such producers as the Paramount, Artcraft, Goldwyn, K. E. S. E., Vitagraph, Universal, General, Triangle, Mutual, Pathe, Metro and World companies. I have used and recommended their pictures and I know they aim to, and do produce, clean pictures, pictures that are, as a whole, cleaner than the average magazine. Many of the producers, such as Edison, The Educational, etc., produce pictures that are on the very highest plane.

Industry Frowns On Bad Plays

"Furthermore, so far as the industry can be classified, the overwhelming sentiment is against pictures and exhibitions which aim to exploit the sensational and salacious.

"The trouble with some of the gentlemen of some of the church congresses is that they try to say something startling and sometimes they are not always quite well informed.

"The moving picture industry, which is the most powerful agency of education in this country today, is crucified between two thieves.

"On the one hand is the greedy exhibitor and producer, who are utterly irresponsible, who appeal to the lowest in humanity, but who do not represent the industry any more than some the freak religious movements represent the church, and on the other hand the overpious brother who is always looking for some head to hit and finds the moving picture business is a handy target.

President Recognizes Good

"In spite of this, however, our President recognized the industry as so influential that he confided the great task of spreading the propaganda of patriotism to the moving picture theater. So effective have these theaters been that public recognition has been made time and again of the good results accomplished.

"In this city, as chairman of the Four-Minute men, I have been informed by the Liberty Loan Committee that our moving picture speakers have been largely responsible for making this one of the banner Liberty Bond cities in the state, in spite of our large percentage of foreigners.

"My theater, The Strand, is always a place for clean wholesome recreation. On Sundays it is a powerful agency for temperance, good citizenship, morality and patriotism. With the aid of moving pictures the big theater is packed every Sunday night with hundreds of men who are easily influenced by pictures, music and tactful speaking.

Tendency Most Unreasonable

"If our clerical friends in every community will recognize the local theaters and co-operate with the managers, they will find wonderful opportunities open to them for reaching out into the highways and hedges and getting into contact with those who need good influences most.

"I repeat that nothing could be more unreasonable than this tendency to judge this, the fourth greatest national industry, by its worst, and by its most disreputable and unworthy 'hangers-on.'

"I do not ask that it be judged by its best. But we have a right to insist that it be judged as other things are judged, literature, for example, or even the church, by its ideals, by its representative men and leaders.

"Meanwhile I hope that God will some day put it into the heart and mind of some Carnegie to establish moving picture theaters and subsidize them in communities isolated and remote, so that the social decline, so apparent in these places, may be arrested and overcome by a recreation that stimulates the imagination, develops the mental and social faculties and is accessible to almost every locality and can be appreciated by every age and grade of intelligence.

Yours sincerely,

"H. E. ROBBINS,

"Rector of St. Mary's Episcopal Church and Manager and Treasurer Strand Amusement Corporation."

Mabel Normand Has Had Varied Career

Film Activities of Goldwyn Star Did Not Begin Until After She Had Tried Art and the Stage

MABEL NORMAND, star in Goldwyn Pictures, served a long apprenticeship in screen work before graduating into the field of high comedy. Born in Atlanta, Ga., she came to New York with the determination to study art. Pending success in this line, she supported herself as an artist's model, her beauty and charm making her in great demand at the studios of the metropolis. So, in a sense, she began posing for pictures before she knew that pictures were to constitute her life work.

In due course of time she made an excursion into musical comedy as a chorus girl. This brief experience was enough to awaken her histrionic ability, and soon after she applied to the Vitagraph studio to begin work in the films. Again her beauty and vivacity stood her in good stead and she was given an engagement at once.

This engagement lasted through a number of productions and then Miss Normand joined the Biograph, working there under direction of D. W. Griffith. Her best-remembered photoplay of those days is "The Diving Girl."

Mack Sennett was a member of the same company there; and when he organized a company to make plays for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, he took Miss Normand with him to Edendale, California.

Declares Increased Admission Prices Justified

PRESIDENT OF PARAMOUNT GIVES MANY REASONS WARRANTING ADVANCE

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, who in company with General Manager B. P. Schulberg, is touring the country, visiting exhibitors in important cities and from them gaining new light on conditions daily, has presented his views regarding the admission price problem in a statement directed to the public, but which every exhibitor may read with profit. Mr. Abrams believes that increased admissions for picture theaters are justifiable. In an amplified statement based on a recent interview published in MOTOGRAPHY he says:

"Photoplay followers must pay more for their screen amusement if they want motion picture producers to continue making the best motion pictures that it is possible to create, and if they expect their favorite photoplay theaters to continue in business and to provide a suitable setting for the picture, including appropriate music, etc.

Dollar Value Diminished

"We must realize that the entire economic standard of the country has changed and that the dollar no longer represents ten dimes but four quarters. It is war time. The dime has lost its buying power and besides the cost of producing pictures has advanced in a startling degree. As a matter of fact, from the beginning of the industry the cost of producing has advanced steadily. A casual mental comparison between the 'movies' of several years ago and the photoplay of today will make this readily apparent.

"Aside from the apparent increase of the salaries of the players, the elaborate staging of a production which the photoplay public has come to demand has raised the cost from 500 to 1,000% over the costs of a few years ago.

Exhibitors Backward About Charging

"In spite of this, the motion picture exhibitor has been backward in raising his own prices to meet this increased cost. This may be due, in a measure, to the fact that in the early stages of motion picture exhibiting there was a great margin of profit; the photoplay public of that day was content with a standard of production that would not be tolerated by the more discriminating patrons of the photoplay today. Pictures which meet the demands of the most fastidious are justification for an increased admission charge.

"Having in many cases made fortunes in the pioneer days of the industry, the majority of these exhibitors were content to meet the increased cost of production out of their own pockets, working on a smaller margin of profit, or no profit at all.

Many Forced to Close

"This condition became so serious eventually that a number of smaller theater owners were forced out of business. The 'Nickelodeon' or five-cent theater practically disappeared, and the minimum price throughout the country became ten cents. Even this scale was not profitable. In most cases it simply meant that the exhibitor received no returns from his invested capital, and merely earned a livelihood for a salary. On the Pacific Coast, however, fifteen cents has been a minimum charge even for theaters showing inferior productions for some time, even prior to the tax levy.

"Naturally enough, a condition such as that cited above could not remain in force for any length of time. About the beginning of this year another decided tendency toward increased admission prices was noted. The larger and better theaters increased their prices to a scale from fifteen cents to seventy-five cents and even a dollar. The movement spread rapidly, and of my own knowledge hundreds of theaters raised the scale of admission prices by from five cents to twenty cents during the first half of the year, obeying the natural law of self-preservation in the face of constantly increasing producing and presentation costs.

Production Cost Grows

"At this point let me emphasize the fact that the increased production cost is an effect and not a cause. It is a result of public demand for better, more elaborate, and more spectacular photoplays.

"With the advent of the war and the soaring prices of the material that enters into the production cost of the films themselves, and the machinery necessary for the operation of the theater, the scale of prices heretofore in effect became impossible.

"Not only would the theater owner be required to waive the returns of his investments, but he would not be able to earn even a living from his labor.

"A continuance of the prices in vogue would mean that hundreds of motion picture theaters would have to close their doors, an event which can only be regarded with the utmost gravity in the present wartime conditions, where moderate priced amusements for the people are an absolute necessity.

Pictures Advance Last

"The motion picture industry is the very last one to ask an increase for its product; clothiers, shoe manufacturers, magazine publishers and food distributors have already obtained an increase in the purchase price from their consumers, but the motion picture, which we include among the necessities of life, has waited until it could wait no longer. Our industry is being hard hit by taxes and there are more to come. It is giving a good deal to the government and it must receive something in return in order to advance with the same rapid strides that have characterized its past progress.

"I have not the slightest fear of the industry's ability to indicate its justification to the public for this increase in the price of admission. From what I have already seen on my trip through the country, exhibitors in all parts have already made the increase and are receiving the support of their patrons in the movement.

Best and Cheapest Amusement

"It is acknowledged that the motion picture theater offers the best and cheapest amusement that the public can buy during wartime. It is giving education, enlightenment and entertainment to the great public. It has been a splendid medium for the Government's propaganda, both in connection with the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross and with Mr. Hoover's Food Administration.

"There is no reason why the photoplay follower should not wish to permit exhibitors throughout the country to continue in business, even if it costs five cents more for admission to do so. The only thing to guard against is an unfair increase—the possible effort of some one to profit by the country's troubles and condition of public affairs in wartime—and that we are safe again because of the government's excess profit tax, which will very conveniently take care of any unusual, in our's or the exhibitor's, profit over last year's."

Thomas Starts New Story

Augustus Thomas, the playwright, who has entered into a new picture producing combination, in association with Harry Raver, has started work on the story of the initial production.

Novel Lobby Display Is Issued

Mutual has devised a new and novel lobby photo display, the first of which will be issued with "The Mate of the Sally Ann," the Mary Miles Minter production released November 26.

Two twenty-two by twenty-eight inch photos will be added to each set, one of them a portrait of the star and the other a scene from the production.

In working out the sets new process has been used which has resulted in a most striking pictorial effect. The lobby display has been heretofore a "closeup" proposition from an advertising standpoint. The new Mutual lobby photos will not only attract people from a distance, serving the mission of a poster, but at the same time present a photographic realism.

Desmond Makes His Nineteenth Picture

Triangle Star Appears In "The Sudden Gentleman," Topping Release Schedule for Month of December

TRIANGLE will open its December program with two features which will probably make a wide appeal. "The Sudden Gentleman," featuring the popular screen Lothario, William Desmond, with petite Mary McIvor and villainous Jack Richardson in the supporting cast, is scheduled as the first release of the week of December 2, followed by a rapid-action marine called "The Ship of Doom," which will present Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading roles.

Desmond, who has nineteen Triangle successes to his credit, has come in for a large share of admiration from the ladies' side of picture-houses throughout the country, and his muscular personality has a certain genial quality which also appeals to male critics of the screen.

In "The Sudden Gentleman," he has an opportunity to do some character work which is right in line with his early training, and it may be expected that the genial Bill will smile the better for the background of his newest play. As Garry Garrity, the village blacksmith in a small Irish hamlet, where geese feed on the commons and blend picturesquely with other barnyard idylls, Desmond puts at rest all doubts as to his lineage. He proves himself a true son of Dublin, especially aided by his grandfather's "dudeon," or clay pipe which is very much in evidence in the early scenes.

His pleasantries on the old sod are interrupted by a summons to Chicago, where an uncle's fortune awaits him. Because his dress and manners differ from those of the fortune-hunting dandies who surround her, snobbish little Louise Evans (Mary McIvor), the step-daughter of his dead uncle, takes a violent dislike to the "barbarian peasant" whom the will appoints her guardian. The fact that she has been cut off with a mere pittance of $25,000 also embitters her and cools the ardor of a titled suitor whose love for her has leaned heavily on his vision of a fat purse. True love sprouts slowly, and under the tutelage of his fair ward, the erstwhile smithy acquires the graces of Chicago society in a series of amusing episodes. The efforts of the bogus count and his designing accomplice to defraud the quick-witted Irishman give the plot an unusual interest. History shows that Desmond's grandfather was the champion shillalah wielder of County Galway, Ireland, and it may be said that the handsome Bill does him no shame in the scene where he routs the smooth nobleman and protects his ward's inheritance. A carefully selected cast of Triangle stock players supports Desmond. The picture was directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

In "The Ship of Doom," written and directed by Wyndham Gittens, Triangle has produced some remarkable effects. The story is based on the rash action of a jealous suitor whose affection for the coquette of a fishing village leads him into a struggle in which his rival is fatally stabbed before he loses his balance and falls from a high cliff into the sea. To escape punishment, Martin Shaw accompanied by the girl, rows out to sea, and manages to get aboard a derelict launch just as a terrific storm breaks. Through the long vigil of the night, with their engine disabled, they fight the fury of an avenging nature, and when they are picked up from an open boat by the crew of a "black-birder," fate is no kinder to them.

The captain pretends to marry them, later turning his authority and strength against Shaw in order to have the woman for himself. Fire interrupts an exciting mutiny of the crew, and there are plenty of thrills as Shaw recovers consciousness in time to leap from the ship just as she goes down in a mass of exploding petrol.

The Triangle barkentine, Fremont, which does service as the pirate ship, has been the center of action for nearly one hundred motion pictures. The boat was built in Philadelphia in 1850 for the slave trade, served its New England owners as a blockade runner during the Civil War. Later it was brought to the Pacific Coast for the sugar trade between San Francisco and Honolulu, and converted into a Behring Sea fisherman until it was put out of commission in 1912 and sold to motion picture interests. In the scenes which follow its firing, when starvation and a leaking dory force the refuges to draw lots for life, the action of the story has a succession of tense incidents.

Supporting Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading roles are Aaron Edwards, Frank Brownlee and a capable cast of assisting players.

Rex Beach Vindicates Scenario Writer

The author who cried that the child of his brain has been brutally murdered to make a play or a motion picture is not Rex Beach. This creator of "The Auction Block" and a score of other equally entertaining and equally popular novels of the times had never encountered, until he came into close contact with motion picture work, that odd genius, the movie dramatist. Having watched him at work and measured the results of his labors, Mr. Beach is ready to admit that he has his place.

There have been authors, motion pisture men will tell you, who supposed that a director sat himself down with a novel, opened to the first page and began forthwith the creation of a picture drama by ordering his players here and there in the manner the story prescribed. These same authors, you will be told, sent piercing cries to heaven when a scenario writer laid profane hands on their books and set about to make them screen stories.

Rex Beach is not of this clan. He is willing to acknowledge that the screen adapter fills a need.

"It is obviously impossible," he says, "to enact for the screen all of the incidents of a novel. That means that certain ones best adapted to picturizing must be selected. It means, too, that even some of these must be changed—and sometimes changed so that the man who wrote them in the original would scarcely recognize them.

"Though the motion picture camera has developed a wide dramatic field, which had to be left untouched even on the stage, it has its limitations. The dramatic value of an incident in story may have been developed to perfection in narrative, yet its character may be such that it is impossible to preserve this value on the screen. It is here that the scenario writer finds his true work.

"A good scenario writer should be able to so remake this incident that none of the force of the story is lost, yet so that its technical shortcomings disappear."

Hicks Returns to General

J. W. Hicks, Jr., has returned as branch manager at Omaha for the General Film Company. He was formerly with General Film as manager at Kansas City and later was connected with Paramount.

Cinema Commission Ready for Work Abroad

FRANK J. MARION LEAVES FOR SPAIN WITH GOVERNMENT'S SPECIAL FILMS

FRANK J. MARION president of the Kalem Company, is the first member of the American Cinema Commission appointed for foreign service to depart for the scene of activities. Commissioner Marion, who was designated by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as one of the three commissioners to represent the Committee on Public Information, last week went to Washington for a final conference with George Creel, chairman of the committee, and other government officials before proceeding to Havana, Cuba, from which port he will sail for Spain.

Commissioner Marion, one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, is splendidly equipped for the big task which he is undertaking at the direct solicitation of President Wilson. Commissioner Marion will have immediate and direct supervision of the distribution and showing of American educational films in Spain and Italy.

Powers Designated for France

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is the commissioner designated for France, representing the American Cinema Commission, of which Jules E. Brulatour of the Eastman Film is the chairman, with headquarters at 235 West Twenty-third street, New York.

These prominent motion picture executives who have undertaken this patriotic work receive no salary and are giving up important business connections here, carrying with them princely salaries, to devote their best energies in the aid of the government's tremendous undertakings in Europe.

Diplomatic Passport Provided

"Although there may be an impression in the trade that the government has placed undue restrictions upon the commissioners, I want to say that Mr. Creel has been most liberal," said Mr. Marion on leaving. "He has shown a keen appreciation of the exacting duties before me and has done everything possible to expedite my work abroad. He even went so far as to appoint me fiscal agent for the government in the matter of expenditures which will be necessary in the work of the commission.

"He secured for me a special diplomatic passport and I am indebted to him for his personal supervision of the transportation of my baggage, films and equipment, which have gone forward as diplomatic material.

"Furthermore," continued Mr. Marion, "Mr. Creel was kind enough to assure me on behalf of the other members of the Committee on Public Information that all of their representatives and attaches in Spain and Italy will co-operate with me in every possible manner.

"For the time being, I expect to make my headquarters at Barcelona, Spain. While general plans have been made for the distribution and exhibition of our films, this is a matter which I must work out after I have personally investigated conditions.

Financial Plans Liberal

"With the liberal financial arrangements which the government has made and the co-operation from all quarters which has been assured me, I shall have every opportunity in my mission to apply the principles which have been so successful in America."

During the last month Mr. Marion has worked at high speed in co-operation with J. E. Brulatour, chairman of the American Cinema Commission, and his staff, headed by A. A. Kaufman, selecting educational films for the populace of Spain and Italy and entertainment subjects for the Italian soldiers.

Receives Plenty of Films

Never in the history of the industry have educational films been so thoroughly combed and the unprecedented acquisition marks an interesting epoch. Hundreds of films from producers in various sections of the country have been placed at the disposal of the commissioners. Industrial concerns who have had interesting motion pictures made have turned over their negatives. The spirit of enthusiastic co-operation soon reached the companies doing commercial work and they have been working night and day furnishing prints at cost.

The films which Mr. Marion is taking into Spain and Italy cover a wide educational field—intimate views of industries and institutions essentially American, schools, colleges, military activities, the pastimes of our people, films portraying the democratic spirit of our executives, and withal a remarkable assortment of pictures which proclaim to the world the independence of the individual in America and his wonderful opportunities for advancement. In short, each film fairly breathes America's message that prosperity and the joy of living are found only in true democracy.

Find Use for Cast-Off First Aid Kits

ONE corner of the Goldwyn studio over at Fort Lee, N. J., was in times past devoted to the use of comedy companies; but the only vestige that remains of the that company is a number of "first aid" kits that hang about the walls. When Goldwyn Pictures came to occupy the premises, these kits became the source of much "kidding" between persons about the stage. No one could see how so many kits could possibly be necessary in any emergency short of an earthquake; and it was not until the production of Madge Kennedy's new starring vehicle, "Nearly Married," that their real usefulness became evident.

Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married."

In the course of the action of this screen version of Edgar Selwyn's stage success, it becomes necessary for a young man who is one of the principals, to mix himself up in an automobile accident and come out a little the worse for his experience.

It so happened that he actually emerged from the accident without a scratch; and while he had a complete equipment in his regulation make-up box for the effective simulation of wounds, scratches and discolorations, he was quite without bandage.

To be sure, there were drug stores a-plenty not far from the studio; but the set was waiting and so were the other actors, and the director was impatient; so in a flash of inspiration the material was appropriated from the superfluous first aid kits.

Henderson Writes Another Patriotic Poem

Daniel M. Henderson, director of advertising for the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Pictures, who wrote the poem, "The Road to France," which was recently declared by the National Arts Club, to be the best war poem of the year, has written another set of verses.

The latest poem by Mr. Henderson was written in behalf of the campaign recently inaugurated by the Young Men's Christian Association for the purpose of raising a thirty-five million dollar fund for the comfort and welfare of "our boys in France." "The Red Triangle" is the title of the poem, the verses of which are given below:

Lift up the Red Triangle
Beside the thundering guns—
A friend, a shield, a solace
To our ten million sons!
Go build a hut or dugout
By billet or by trench—
A shelter from the horror,
The cold, the filth, the stench!
Where boys we love, returning
From out the gory loam
Can sight the Red Triangle
And find a bit of home!

Lift up the Red Triangle
'Gainst things that mar and maim!
It conquers Booze, the wrecker!
It kills the House of Shame!
Go make a friendly corner,
So lads can take the pen
And get in touch with mother
And God's clean things again!
Where Hell's destroying forces
Are leagued with Potsdam's crew,
Lift up the Red Triangle—
And help our boys "come through!"

Lake Louise Is Filmed

Lake Louise, said to be the most beautiful spot in North America, is the subject of the second release in the new Essanay scenic released by General Film Company. This one-reel feature is literally crammed with some of the most wonderful scenery ever caught by the camera, presenting novel and interesting views never before screened.

Mixes Humor With Strong Situations

George K. Spoor Offers "Uneasy Money," With Taylor Holmes in the Leading Role of Lord Dawlish

Taylor Holmes as Lord Dawlish in Essanay's "Uneasy Money."

"UNEASY MONEY," Taylor Holmes' newest vehicle, soon to be released by George K. Spoor as a special feature, combines a rare bit of humor with strong and fascinating situations.

The picturization has lost none of the verve and humor that emphasized the original story in the Saturday Evening Post. Taylor Holmes is ideally cast as Lord Dawlish, the polished, though quaintly impractical, Englishman, whose love for justice overbalances his desire to be a "vulgar millionaire."

Lord Dawlish is bequeathed the enormous fortune of an American millionaire whom he had taught to overcome a difficulty in golf. But, although the riches would enable him to gain the hand of Claire Edmont, a fortune-seeking actress, Lord Dawlish determines to make proper distribution of the money, giving at least half of it to Elizabeth and "Nutty" Nutcomb, American niece and nephew of the millionaire.

Elizabeth impishly writes back to Lord Dawlish to "keep the millions." But the honest Englishman goes to America to attempt to straighten things out. There is an innocent masquerade on the part of Lord Dawlish that brings him into the home and heart of the independent American girl. And this, combined with "Nutty's" vicissitudes in vibrating between sobriety and gay Broadway, afford wholesome humor and complications that unravel easily and mirthfully.

Taylor Holmes knows how to wear a monocle. Virginia Valli, in the role of Elizabeth, knows how to wear overalls and to handle brother "Nutty," even if she cannot regulate the acquisitions of love. Lillian Drew plays Claire Edmont, the fortune-hunter who finally weds a fat, pudgy new-rich. Frederick Tiden, Rod LaRocque, Virginia Bowker, Charles Garlner and Arthur Bates are others in the cast.

Anderson Sees Studios Under Construction

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., arrived at the coast studios in Los Angeles, California, last week where he will remain for some time consulting on the construction of the new studios which are now in the course of construction and installing an efficiency system to take care of the increasing activities of the producing organizations.

A large tract of land adjoining the studios was recently purchased, upon which is now being erected additional studios which when completed will double the capacity of the present plant. Work is progressing rapidly. The cement piers for the new dressing room buildings have been completed and the brick walls of the property building are nearly finished.

A large force of men are now at work on a large glass enclosed stage which will be used during the raining season and which when finished will be one of the most completely equipped stages for the production of photoplays in the country. Under the flooring of the new stage huge pits are being dug, to be used later for tank, cellar and fountain effects.

Visits New York for First Time

After three years at the Oliver Morosco studios, in Los Angeles, where she has been engaged in preparing scripts for Paramount pictures, as head of the scenario department, Julia Crawford Ivers is in New York for the first visit of her life, for a brief stay of three weeks.

Service for Exhibitor Is Helpful

Producer Furnishes Material for Exploiting Pictures Including Four-Page Newspaper and News Budget

FREE service for the exhibitor—practical dollars-and-cents co-operation that puts the balance on the right side of the box office report—that is what up-to-date producers are endeavoring to give. William Fox's helps for his special features, the 52-a-year releases, contain a striking illustration of this tendency.

Mr. Fox's free service includes a four-page weekly newspaper, a weekly mimeograph news budget, a weekly clipping sheet, weekly music cues, a weekly service on matrices, and special cut-to-your-measure publicity as desired. In addition, he supplies stills on request; also slides for advance announcements; one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, and three sizes of lobby displays, the largest, 14x22, being in colors.

The four-page publication, known as the Fox News, is circulated from two to three weeks in advance of the release of the picture to which the issue is devoted. It contains a most complete and comprehensive assortment of advertising and publicity material and suggestions.

Included in this are a picture of the star, a long and short synopsis of the production and a general article on the play containing snappy ideas for advertising, for theater decoration, lobby display and, when the occasion warrants, for costuming of ushers. The cast also is given and there are interesting, entertaining facts about the star and important members of the company, emphasis being laid on localities from which these actors have come or in which they are best known.

There is also an editorial on advertising, with copy for four or five suggested advertisements; an outline for a form letter to be sent by the exhibitor to possible patrons, and numerous ready-to-print notices about the production. These latter are even prepared with blank spaces so that the exhibitor needs only to fill in the name of his theater and use them in newspapers, in his house organ, or otherwise. Reviews of the picture and other material for the information of critics and editors also are included.

It also is customary to devote an entire page of the Fox News to reproductions of selected stills. From these illustrations are made matrices which are offered to exhibitors without cost, a coupon being provided for his convenience in ordering. Exhibitors living in cities having newspapers equipped with photo-engraving plants also can be supplied with stills if they desire them.

The general publicity material, of which there usually is an entire page in each issue of the newspaper, is written with the idea that the exhibitor will insert in it the name of his theater and use it as press matter. This data includes a Who's Who of the production, stories about the picture, interesting studio sidelights and other material in infinite variety.

Unlike the Fox News, or press sheet, the mimeograph matter deals with Fox productions generally, rather than with one picture. It consists usually of from five to ten or more pages of typewritten stories, most of them short and pithy, concerning the people of the Fox producing organization and releases. Many little human interest incidents that develop in the progress of motion picture making—stories with a point and a punch—are related.

The clipping sheet is a printed page crammed with pictures and short stories carefully selected from the best material in the Fox News and the mimeograph service. In addition, it contains answers to the questions about Fox stars which are received at the Fox offices. The idea is that the exhibitor will clip stories freely from this sheet and place them where they will reach the public.

As to special helps, obtainable without cost on application to the director of publicity, there practically is nothing the exhibitor is likely to want which cannot be provided on short notice. He may have special stories of any sort, special advertising material, mats, or almost anything else he thinks will be of assistance to him in exploiting the picture through the press or by any other means. A large organization is kept constantly at work developing ideas for the theater man's benefit—it is up to him merely to make the most of the opportunities afforded—to use what is provided for him.

Constance Talmadge Plans to Go West

Constance Talmadge, whose debut as a Select Pictures star was successfully made with her current release, "Scandal," the play directed by Charles Giblyn from Cosmo Hamilton's serial of the same name, will soon leave for California where some of her future productions will be filmed.

Constance Talmadge.

Miss Talmadge has led an unusually busy life of late. Following "Scandal," she completed "The Honeymoon," which will be the next released of her Select pictures. In order to expedite work on this production, several flying trips to Niagara Falls were made, as the filming of the play was done in that city and in New York.

Hard on top of "The Honeymoon" came work on the screen production which is an adaptation by Paul West of "The Runaway," the successful comedy by Pierre Veber and Henri de Gorsse. This photoplay, which was to have been called "The Cliffs," has now been renamed "The Studio Girl"; the latter being a good index to the spirit of modern high grade entertainment which pervades the production. Under Director Giblyn, Miss Talmadge and her company have made trips to Marblehead, Mass., and Ausable Chasm for this production, some of the scenes of which call for stormy weather on the New England coast. In the central role of this screen play, Miss Talmadge has to endure several very thorough drenchings in out of doors scenes, and as the costumes are necessarily those of the summer time Miss Talmadge is urging Director Giblyn to hurry the production to a finish before the cold weather comes, making her somewhat Spartan part even more unendurable.

Goodrich Picture Tops Mutual Schedule

"American Maid" Is Story of Girl Who Goes to France to Do Her Bit Back of the Trenches

MUTUAL'S schedule for the week of December 3 is led by Miss Edna Goodrich, the Broadway stage beauty, in "American Maid," which is the fourth of the series of feature productions in which Miss Goodrich appears for Mutual. It was directed by Albert Capellani, at Mutual's Long Island studios.

"American Maid" is the story of a typical American girl, doing "her bit" behind the trenches in France, who falls in love with an American doing "his bit" in the trenches. He is wounded and retired from active service, returns home, discovers the social gulf which separates them and goes back to the west.

Miss Goodrich represents in the picture the ideal of American womanhood, the blended product of many races and many peoples.

Appearing with Miss Goodrich in "American Maid" are many well known players, chief of whom are George J. Henery, who played the judge in "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," and William B. Davidson, who has had a long and successful screen career with Vitagraph, Fox, Metro and Mutual.

Billie Rhodes plays the role of a little girl in "Just Kidding," the one-reel Strand-Mutual comedy, scheduled for release on December 4. She wears a Buster Brown suit, plays with a Teddy Bear and gets her face smeared with blueberry pie. The plot affords many laughable situations, and ends in a romance.

"Jerry Takes Gas," is the subject of the Cub comedy, released by Mutual December 5, which shows popular George Ovey, with suicidal inclinations and results with a mistaken dose of gasoline. A match, a tube and—puff.

From the first line trenches, where the news is thickest, comes Mutual Weekly No. 153, released December 3. This one-reel subject is gladdening the hearts of parents, whose boys are at the front. It shows, in vivid living pictures what letters never could.

New Comedies Named

"Vitagraph Comedies" is the brand name decided upon for the series of comedies, announcement of which was made recently. The first of these new one-reelers, which are to be kept on a high plane of humor, will be released on December 3 and will bear the title of "A Family Flivver."

Edward Earle, star of "For France," and Agnes Ayres, who has scored individually in O. Henry pictures and Blue Ribbon Features, are to be starred in these comedies. Graham Baker will direct.

Business Is Good in Great Britain

Representative of William Fox Visits America and Says People of England Turn from Depression to Pictures

"HOW is the war affecting the motion picture industry in the United Kingdom?

"Perhaps I can explain by citing our own experience. Our offices in London were opened in June, 1916, and although we had very large and commodious quarters at the outset, we since have found it necessary to take another building. Our United Kingdom headquarters now occupies the whole of two buildings. That is the way the war is affecting us."

The speaker was Ernest Reed, the Fox Film Corporation's managing director for Great Britain and Ireland. He has just sailed for an European port having been here with Harry Engholm, his publicity manager, in conference with Mr. Fox and General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan regarding expansion policies.

It is true, Mr. Reed explains, that at the outset of the war there was a sort of general panic in English business circles and that the motion picture industry was affected in common with other lines of trade. But this was of short duration. "Like water, conditions sought their level, and since then changes have come so gradually the public has been prepared for them.

"The situation at first, I suppose, was somewhat as it probably now is in the motion picture business in America. I do not know a great deal about conditions here, but I assume the imposition of taxes on films and admissions has developed a temporarily unsettled state of affairs. We have been through all of this in England, and have not found it as serious as some exhibitors thought it would be. Indeed, there just now is going into effect a new and higher schedule of amusement taxes.

"Foreign trade, of course, has been affected. England has placed a ban on commercial relations with Norway and Sweden, and a special license is required for doing business in France. But within the United Kingdom the motion picture trade, so far as Fox is concerned, has been growing steadily. 'The Tale of Two Cities' is the film of the year in England."

One effect of the war, Mr. Reed explained, has been to cause the public to turn to cinema productions for relief from the depressing atmosphere with which it some times is surrounded. In this respect, the motion picture theaters seem to have profited in greater proportion than any other form of amusement.

Discussion of peace, according to the Fox representative, has practically been abandoned by the British public. "The people," he says, "have heard so much of this sort of talk without anything having come of it that the disposition now is to drop the subject entirely.

That which most greatly impressed Mr. Reed and Mr. Engholm on their arrival from London was the blaze of lights along night-rejoicing Broadway. In London, if one works in his office at night, or if he uses lights in his home, he draws the shades. On the streets in the evening he often finds a pocket flash light a convenience. But in spite of this, people go forth in the evening in search of amusement, and business in the theaters, although conducted less ostentatiously than here, goes merrily on.

While in this country Messrs. Reed and Engholm visited all of the Eastern offices and studios of the Fox organizations and watched the filming of numerous pictures. At the studios in Grantwood, N. J., Miss Theda Bara posed with them in a group photograph.

Here's Chance to Buy Camera

MOTOGRAPHY's Service Department is in receipt of a communication from a subscriber who desires to dispose of a quantity of motion picture equipment, including a Schustek camera. The camera, with one three-inch and one two-inch lens, Taylor carrying case and trunk, and Universal tripod, originally cost $710. The owner is willing to part with the outfit for $500. MOTOGRAPHY will be glad to put prospective purchasers in touch with the owner.

"Daughter of the Gods" Is December Offering

Fox Production Takes Advantage of Enormous Advertising That Has Been Given This Picture

"A DAUGHTER of the Gods," heralded as "the best advertised picture in America," and which will be released to exhibitors December 2, has been before the public for more than one year, during which time it has been shown in all parts of the country. It is a fantasy of the sea—a fairy story—and its key note, as one reviewer has said, is beauty.

The cost is said to have been in excess of $1,000,000 and the total number of persons appearing in the picture is placed at 21,218, the largest number used in a single screen being 19,744. Most of the scenes were taken on an island in the Caribbean. According to William Fox, the producer, 233,000 feet of film were used, but only about 7,500 or eight reels are shown.

There is an unusually large assortment of publicity material available for this picture. This includes two styles each of one, three, six and eight sheets and a handsome twenty-four sheet; beautiful lobby display photographs, press sheets, rotogravure heralds, cuts and mats varying in size from one to four columns, piano score, an elaborate music score, a variety of slides, an assortment of forty by sixty paintings, several sorts of flashy window cards and other material.

Annette Kellermann is the star of the production, doing spectacular diving and swimming, and among the very large supporting company are Jane and Katherine Lee, who, since this picture was made, have become celebrated as "the Fox Baby Grands."

Runs Thirty-Reel Serial All In One Week

The small town exhibitor's problem of getting a full house each night has been solved by G. F. Geidle, of Fargo, North Dakota, who plays with a gas outfit. He booked the Mutual Serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," showing five reels each night for six consecutive nights. On one night his receipts exceeded $72.00.

The idea of speeding up serials is becoming increasingly popular among exhibitors in small communities. One exhibitor recently booked "The Vampires," the Mutual-Gaumont serial, at three chapters a week, running the picture every other night until the final chapter.

Vitagraph Obtains Another Girl Star

President Smith Signs Contract With Hedda Nova, Youthful Russian Actress, Who Will Star Under His Direction

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, announces that he has engaged Mlle. Hedda Nova, the brilliant young Russian actress, on a long term

Hedda Nova will be recalled in the role of Belle Davis, the supposed negress, in "The Bar Sinister."

The announcement of the acquisition by Vitagraph of this beautiful young star is one of the most important that has come from the Blue Ribbon company's president in many months and equally important is his statement that he will assume personal direction of her features. Mr. Smith, pioneer of the motion picture industry and inventor of many of the photographic devices that have modernized picture making, has always given close personal supervision to every product of his company, and in many cases he has personally directed important features. The announcement that he is to get into directorial harness regularly, carries special significance to exhibitors and the public. It means the entire production from script and cast to final release will be the work of one of the recognized creators of the cinema art.

In selecting Hedda Nova for special Blue Ribbon features exclusively, Mr. Smith seems to be inaugurating a new policy in this branch of Vitagraph productions. In the super-features hitherto made by the company he has employed stars of the regular program, using at various times Anita Stewart in "The Girl Philippa," Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in J. Stuart Blackton's production, "Womanhood," and likewise in "Within the Law," William Duncan and Nell Shipman in "God's Country and the Woman," etc.

It is understood that Hedda Nova will appear in a number of features each year with a splendid company, the subjects to be taken from big stories by noted authors. The first feature has already been chosen, and Mr. Smith and Mlle. Nova began conferences on the script the latter part of last week. It is stated that the title of the picture and the full cast to be used in it will be announced shortly.

Hedda Nova, the seventh feminine star to be placed under contract by President Smith in as many months, has leaped to stellar heights in little more than a year and has received most of her experience in big productions.

Born in Odessa, Russia, eighteen years ago, Mlle. Nova was educated in her own country and in Germany, leaving the Gray Sisters' Convent only a few weeks before war was declared. Her father, a piano manufacturer of Odessa, was not so fortunate as the daughter. He maintained several branch houses in Germany and was caught there when the kaiser declared war against Russia. He was immediately interned with his wife and has been virtually a prisoner since that time.

The daughter, after waiting nearly two years for her parents' release, left home and went on the stage as a dancer in a Russian ballet company. She traveled through England and France, and finally, about eighteen months ago, arrived in this country to play vaudeville engagements.

Her beauty and expressiveness attracted the attention of an official of the Lubin company and she was engaged to play a leading part with Orrin Johnson in "The Light at Dusk," which was released on the V. L. S. E. program. She next attracted the attention of Edgar Lewis and he cast her for the second feminine lead in his production of "The Barrier," from Rex Beach's novel, she playing the role of Tessie the Tuff.

As the supposed negress in "The Bar Sinister" she received commendation by newspaper and trade press critics, the writers lavishing praise on her beauty and charm and her exceptionally fine acting. The picture was regarded as a personal triumph for her and she was immediately cast for the leading feminine part in the next Lewis picture, "Calibre 38," soon to be released.

Hedda Nova is a brunette beauty, something taller than the average woman and possessed of wonderful magnetism. She has large, dark brown eyes, a beautiful nose and mouth, and a wealth of brilliant black hair. When she first came to this country she was unable to speak a word of English, although she was mistress of four other languages, and even now she speaks with a distinctive French accent.

In selecting Hedda Nova for his special production star, Mr. Smith has added one more score in favor of youth. Of the seven young women signed by him for stellar honors within the last few months, all of them are mere girls in years, but they have all registered with the public because of their exceptional beauty and talent. Corinne Griffith, who first came into prominence by her work opposite Earle Williams, is only just past twenty years. This is about the average age of all of them. Carol Holloway, by her work in "The Fighting Trail," Vitagraph's big outdoor serial, and the Wolfville stories, has gained a large following. The same applies to Agnes Ayres, heroine of O. Henry stories and Blue Ribbon features, who is soon to be featured in polite comedy. Gladys Leslie, "the girl with the million dollar smile"; Florence Deshon, former Broadway actress and a feature of "The Auction Block"; Nell Shipman, writer and star of many big photoplays, and Alice Terry, former Washington Square player, are included in Vitagraph's latest acquisitions.

Noted Author Becomes Goldwyn Writer

To the long list of distinguished writers who have furnished the literary material for Goldwyn Pictures has been added a novelist of broad and growing popularity in Frank Packard, whose novel, "The Beloved Traitor," is now being filmed with Mae Marsh as the star. He thus takes his place beside Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn, Irvin S. Cobb, Roi Cooper Megrue, Basil King, Porter Emerson Browne, Edward Childs Carpenter and Anatole France in the motion picture ranks of Goldwyn.

Frank L. Packard is a native of Montreal, a graduate of McGill University, holding the degree of B. A. Sc. He took a post-graduate course at the University of Liege, Belgium, and was engaged in engineering work in the United States for a number of years. He began writing for the magazines in 1906.

His first book was "On the Iron at Big Cloud," which contains a number of excellent short stories of railroad life. He wrote also "Greater Love Hath No Man," "The Miracle-Man," which was dramatized by George M. Cohan, "The Beloved Traitor," "The Adventures of Jimmie Dale," and his novel of old Quebec, just published, entitled, "The Sin That Was His."

Know Public's Wants—Supply Them

SUCCESSFUL MANAGER OUTLINES THE POLICY THAT ATTRACTS PATRONS

Edward L. Hyman, who has made a success as manager of the Victoria Theater in Buffalo, N. Y., is a young man who has tried out his theories on entertainment and theater management. Since he has succeeded he speaks with authority. MOTOGRAPHY is fortunate in being able to present the following article to its readers.

BY EDWARD L. HYMAN

The man in love with himself has no rivals!

As a man yet young, and in a business younger, I have not obtained a place in the sun of theater management. I am merely placing before men perhaps of many more years experience, the elements which I have found most telling in what I deem the proper administration of a neighborhood theater presenting motion pictures.

In developing the Victoria theater within the past few years into a residential section playhouse of some note in New York state, the hard and fast rules of human nature have been applied and have worked out well.

The Victoria theater is not unlike many other theaters in the United States insofar as possibilities are involved. It is in the center of a busy neighborhood section, a district peopled by the better class of population. The residents are those who work daily for that which will give them food and diversion.

Strives for Distinctive Service

It is, indeed, a beautiful theater, built along novel lines, for although it has a capacity of 2,000 persons, it has no balcony. It is a playhouse of distinction—and I have striven and am striving now to make it a theater of distinctive service.

My ideas have been frowned upon by older and wiser heads in the business, and oftimes perhaps those frowns were merited. Yet the Victoria stands today a respected institution always well filled with a loyal and generally satisfied patronage.

I believe in theater engineering. I do not mean that the administration should lack the personal force and become a machine of routine efficiency. Such administration has spelled sure death for houses all over the country.

This Is Theater Engineering

My definition of theater engineering is this:

The tactful catering to the moods of all the people all of the time with motion pictures of merit and music of beauty, and with a desire in mind always to prevent the germ of sameness from entering into the entertainment organism and contaminating the patronage with its sluggish interest.

This sounds like stilted and old stuff. Just shake it up, if it is shakeable and dissect it, please. Then scale this list of things I am going to recount below and lay them down beside the definition in analysis. Doesn't it work out right? That will be the question to answer.

Keep On Your Toes

Keep yourself and your aides on your toes every minute. When you and they become stale and new ideas are so hard to sum up that you use the old ones, don't get discouraged but get some exercise in a gymnasium or take a vacation.

Don't let down when on the job! It is not an admission of weakness nor a lack of the dignified quality to quiz ushers and door-men to find out how the folks liked your show. And don't be afraid to let your patrons know who you are to the extent that they will come to your office with their kicks and their suggestions instead of coddling them and going somewhere else the next time.

Don't overwork the big stars, introduce new ones all the time, for Mary Pickford week after week or Douglas Fairbanks night after night is going to decrease his or her drawing power after your patrons have had enough.

Courtesy Costs Nothing

Courtesy has been harped at you so long that it is an old story, yet it is the story that leads to success. When a man or woman asks you to get a picture they like, you'll make a friend by not telling them curtly that you have already booked it. If you have that is dandy but it isn't necessary to snub them. Let them think they were first with the suggestion. It doesn't cost you anything.

Don't let ushers argue with patrons, and don't do it yourself. When they are jammed and a man kicks because he has a ticket and no seat do your darndest without getting mad.

It is my plan always to make the music the oil that makes the picture run smoothly. Arrange your program with a little thought. Don't throw it together. Remember that you must get your money at night and your patrons are at least mentally tired when they arrive. Have the overtures light and fanciful so that worn faces will take on smiles and business and home cares will slide from off their shoulders. Get them interested with a short topical or news reel, anything that wont bore. Then a solo by the most popular man or woman vocalist or instrumentalist you can get.

Perhaps your patrons want just straight pictures. Then eliminate the soloist but he breaks the picture strain to an extent. Above all things don't let your orchestra music background dominate the picture. Have the music for a frame or setting. This means some time in working out music. Any old cue sheet wont do.

Advertising Is the Dynamo

What about advertising? That is the dynamo that propells the whole works. I use small newspaper ads in the amusement columns of the daily papers, where folks are used to looking for entertainment.

One of the most productive of my advertising values is a program of sixteen pages, written in the chummiest, snappiest homey style imaginable. It doesn't "bull" but gets on the level and talks like men do to men and women to women.

Five thousand west siders get this program through the mail and it gets into their mail box. The mailing list was obtained by ushers getting the names in the theater. The mail carriers in the sections aid, by each week giving a list of those in the section who have moved away and those who have moved in. Thus the list has no "dead ones." All are Victoria patron possibilities.

This program, illustrated and on good paper, is so popular that I get called down right when an issue should fail to arrive through some slip-up. This program or house organ is a jazz proposition issued every two weeks, containing attractions for fourteen days. Patrons tell me they guard this program after reading it through as they would the dictionary. It is a book of reference.

Flowers Add Attractiveness

Screen advertising is another factor not to be neglected. By the use of heralds and a new slide making method I produce beautifully tinted slides which announce the current week attractions and those to come. Lobby and facade advertising also counts at the Victoria, I believe.

The outside and inside lobbies are never cluttered with frames and stands. There are just enough well painted and artistic signs so that the outgoing and incoming patrons will not become confused.

Most folks love flowers. I keep my lobbies decorated with them quite often, through arrangement with florist decorators who are willing to take their pay in program space. Then, too, the men's and women's rest rooms as well as every part of the theater is kept clean, absolutely so.

I insist upon the temperature being just right, the air fresh as possible—in fact, upon everything that will tend to make the patron comfortable. He or she has a right to demand everything.

Above all I have tried to gain the confidence and the co-operation of my employer. He is a man of big ideas and knows that young men work best when they are left alone, except now and then when counsel of the experienced is most necessary. An employer who has his manager frightened to death and worrying will never put over a house.

Discusses War's Effect on Picture Business

The members of the Texas Amusement Managers Association will hold a conference on Monday, December 10, in Dallas, Tex., at the Jefferson Hotel to discuss the war situation as it affects the moving picture business. R. H. Campbell, secretary of the association stated that a session of the managers at this time was needed.

"There has been a general advance in price of everything entering into the cost of producing a picture show and vaudeville entertainment," said Mr. Campbell. "Price of carbons have more than doubled, and now another advance is due. Film rentals have materially advanced, with an additional war tax imposed, which the exhibitors have to bear. Upon this comes the tax upon admissions, and then there is the State and county tax, the occupation tax, the Government seat tax, which has never been repealed, and the gross income tax.

"In Louisiana and Arkansas, where no State organization was in existence and no price arrangement was possible, 600 motion picture houses have closed during the last three months, because of their inability to adjust prices to cover the cost of operation, and many are now closing in Texas, while others are cutting down their days for operation to three and four days a week.

The vaudeville and musical comedy houses are having their own troubles as well. More than 1,000 acts have been drafted, with more in prospect, and many smaller time houses are feeling the effects of this shortage."

In this association are affiliated all classes of theatrical amusements, from the larger houses playing the road shows to the 5 cent motion picture house.

E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Waco, Houston, Galveston and Beaumont is president. The board of directors is composed of W. E. Weatherford, Dallas and Waco; A. A. Choteau, Interstate Amusement Company, Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Houston and Galveston; P. C. Levy, Fort Worth; W. J. Lytle, Lytle & Epstein, San Antonio; C. J. Musselman, Paris; Harry VandeMark, Houston. R. H. Campbell of Dallas is secretary.

Puts Tax Up to Public

The Louisiana Amusement and Realty company, owner of the Louisiana Theater in Baton Rouge, La., has put the matter of the tax up to the public in the following announcement carried on its regular weekly program. The tax announcement follows:

"Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Citizen:

"That cutting out picture shows, as some of you have done, will not save you the War Tax? Uncle Sam counted on that $70,000,000 tax from picture shows. If this amount is not realized Uncle Sam will collect from you in some other way. He must have the money and it must come from you. There is no escape.

"Do not cut out your amusement. Enjoy yourself while you may.

"You pay anyhow."

Liberty Theater Opens

The Liberty theater of Wheeling, W. Va., was opened last week with a showing of the Selznick-Select feature, "The Moth" starring Norma Talmadge. The new theater seats 1,650 persons. It is modernly constructed and its owners claim that it is the best moving picture house in the state.

Poli's Palace Is Opened In New Haven

Many Prominent Eastern Amusement Folk Journey from New York, Boston and Philadelphia to Attend First Performance at New Theater

S. Z. POLI'S Palace theater at New Haven, Conn., was opened on November 19th in gala fashion, with an audience which packed every one of the 3,500 seats of the huge theater, and left a crowd of several hundred persons on the street before its entrance, completely blocking the thoroughfare from curb to curb and halting street car service.

In this large audience were a great number of persons prominent in amusement circles, who had come from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia in order to help Mr. Poli make a night of it.

Among this number were Norma Talmadge and her sister, Constance Talmadge, stars of Select Pictures, and Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation. The opening bill at the Palace presents "The Secret of the Storm Country," Norma Talmadge's latest Select picture, and Miss Talmadge made the trip to New Haven in order to be present.

Immediately after the opening number, which consisted of songs by a chorus of New Haven girls, who had been specially trained for this occasion, Miss Norma Talmadge was introduced to the audience by Pat Casey, general representative of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association. Following Mr. Casey's tribute to the genius of Mr. Poli in erecting as handsome a theater as the Palace, Miss Talmadge stepped before the footlights and extended her thanks to the enthusiastic audience for their kindly greeting, and to Mr. Poli for choosing her picture for his opening performance.

Poli's Palace is a beautiful house. It would be hard to find a more restfully beautiful theater, or one better adapted to the purpose for which it is designed. Poli's Palace is a masterpiece of one of the master craftsmen of playhouse design, Thomas W. Lamb of New York. Architect Lamb is the designer of such famous theaters as the Strand and Rialto in New York City, and the New Orpheum in Boston.

Poli's Palace will play all the pictures of the Select Star Series, including those made by Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, and Alice Brady.

Circus Picture Permits Exploitation Stunts

Exhibitors Are Quick to Take Advantage of Opportunities Presented by Mae Marsh's Goldwyn Production

THEATER managers all over the country who have shown "Polly of the Circus," a Goldwyn picture starring Mae Marsh, have taken advantage of the many opportunities offered by the play to exploit it in circus style. Many exhibitors made their lobbies resemble as closely as possible the entrance to a "big top," while showing this picture. Others engaged loud voiced venders of wares usually peddled at a circus, to go among the audience during intermission. Clowns and ballyhoo stunts contributed their share to the freak stunts adopted to advertise the show and the theater.

W. P. Dittmar, of Beaver Dam, Wis., was one of the exhibitors who went "strong" to the circus stuff. He plastered all the available billboard space in the town with huge circus posters, and he had the entire town talking about his show. Another clever piece of advertising Mr. Dittmar put over was contained in the insertion in the newspaper of the town the following "help wanted" advertisement:

WANTED—Young lady of good habits to take care of the baby while I go to the Davison theater and see Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus." Phone 1271 226-2t.

Jones Gets Nickname in Penny Pursuit

When the war tax went into effect, Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, conceived a plan of collection, while swatting the ball on the golf links at French Lick. While the government is manufacturing a million pennies a day, the supply is not adequate to take care of the war tax in the hundreds of thousands of motion picture theaters in the United States. In Chicago alone, Jones, Linick & Schaefer are using an almost unheard of amount of pennies every day.

The new government tax necessitated the appointment of one man whose duty would be exclusively to look after the collection of tax in the Jones, Linick & Schaefer string of theaters. This duty fell upon Louis J. Jones, brother of Aaron J. Jones. It is his duty to secure pennies enough each day to make the necessary change for patrons at the box offices. In this pursuit of the illusive copper he has implored slot machine offices, banks, laundries and newsboys, almost on bended knee.

On the day that the tax became effective there was but $22 worth of pennies available in Chicago. The sub-treasury was drained. The banks employed extra help to count pennies and bag them. Scarcely a nook or corner has been free from the peering eye of Louis J. Jones, in his search for pennies. And this has won for him the sobriquet of "The Penny Man." Even the newsboy on the corner knows him as "The Penny Man," and he is losing his identity as a theatrical manager in the wild pursuit of the copper coin.

Tells How Exhibitor Can Do "Bit"

Mack Sennett, producer of Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, declares that victories in war are psychological rather than physical and that success goes to the nation that believes it is going to win.

"It is a cold military fact," says Mr. Sennett, "that mental depression on the part of those at home is just as dangerous to our cause as the German submarines.

"We producers of motion pictures can do a great deal toward seeing that this mental depression does not occur.

"No other agency comes so close to the people as we do. Our 'bit' will be to redouble our effort toward making pictures that will lighten the burden of worry and sorrow of the mothers and wives who have sent men to the battle front. Every exhibitor who sends one real laugh through a theater is doing a work just as valuable as the boy who pokes a shrapnel cartridge into the jaws of a field piece."

Mr. Sennett says that while it is not possible for the entire motion picture industry to shoulder a musket, yet there is this profoundly important work to be done.

"Only those students of war," he asserts, "who realize how victories are won and lost quite understand what the motion pictures can do for the country in this crisis."

Pictures Show Soldiers in Training

Turner & Dahnken Circuit, through the war department, has secured a permit to make motion pictures at Camp Lewis, Washington, where 40,000 new troops are in training.

Ray Ewell, who for some time has been a photographer in the United States navy, has been sent to make these pictures. The scenes taken will show how young men become soldiers. The contingents from the various cities will each be taken separately. Prints on these pictures will be sold by Turner & Dahnken throughout the United States.

"Best Theater West of New York"

While in the west recently Jesse Lasky attended the opening of the new California Theater in San Francisco, under the management of Eugene S. Roth. This great house has a seating capacity of 3,000 and represents a $2,000,000 investment.

"The New California Theater," said Mr. Lasky, "is the finest motion picture house west of New York. Mr. Roth began his career as an exhibitor with the Portola Theater on Market street, a comparatively small house, but with the profits he derived he was enabled to erect this new and beautiful structure, which opened with an Artcraft picture, 'The Woman God Forgot,' featuring Geraldine Farrar. The success of Mr. Roth is, to my mind, visual evidence of the certain results of properly exhibiting and exploiting high class motion pictures. Mr. Roth is a shining example of the thoroughly up-to-date exhibitor. He is a man of superior discretionary powers and is a showman to his finger tips."

Dance Opens Picture Theater

The new Marysville, Mont., opera house which will be devoted to motion pictures, was opened on November 17 with a dance that was free to all the townspeople. A large crowd accepted the invitation of the management. Another big dance and celebration in the new theater was planned for Thanksgiving when a patriotic concert by the Arthur W. Grier orchestra was on the program. The new opera house was built largely through the efforts of four merchants of the town, J. Otis Mudd, B. Betor, F. A. Boeckman and Mrs. Matt Dorrity.

Roper Gets Complaints

Daniel G. Roper, commissioner of internal revenue, has issued the following statement on the subject of price-raising on theater admissions:

"Complaints have been received of cases where the cost of admission to theaters and other places of amusement has been increased largely in excess of the tax imposed and the increase is explained as necessary because of the war tax."

THE LATEST FROM ALL OVER THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

"Raffles" Is Ready for Trade Showing

Hiller and Wilk Offer John Barrymore in Title Role of Story That Has Been Successful in Book and on Stage

"RAFFLES, THE AMATEUR CRACKSMAN," will be screened for the trade for the first time in the projection room of Joseph R. Miles at 220 West Forty-second street, New York, on November 28.

This is the seven-reel special production for which state rights buyers all over the country have been demanding a screening for several weeks, but which has been delayed by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., who are handling the sale, until everything that goes toward a successful presentation had been prepared.

Mike Donlin, one-time baseball idol, who appears in "Raffles."

Everything including paper, lobby displays, heralds and stills have been delivered and may be seen directly after the showing, at the Hiller and Wilk offices in the Longacre Building.

Beside the preparation for every sales assistance for the exhibitor and the purchasers of the state rights on "Raffles," Hiller and Wilk have prepared a schedule for a large advertising campaign which starts in several of the motion picture trade papers this week and will continue for a long time not only during the selling campaign but after all territory has been sold in order that the purchasers of territory will have the benefit of trade advertising and trade publicity.

"Raffles" is the first big special feature to be presented by the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., and is to be followed rapidly by other high-class productions.

After securing the picture rights to "Raffles," the producers scoured the country for a high-class, well-balanced cast. John Barrymore, of the famous Barrymore family, returned to the screen long enough to play the leading role in the picture.

Barrymore has the support of an evenly divided cast, consisting of Frederick Perry, H. Cooper Cliffe, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Mike Donlin and other players equally well known on the screen and on the legitimate stage.

The picture itself represents six months of concentrated effort on the part of Director George Irving and the investment of thousands of dollars in sets and costumes.

While "Raffles, The Amateur Cracksman," is not a costume play, the attire of the women who visualize the bon ton of English society, is such that the women will be enthralled and the costumes will be the talk of the female world wherever the picture is presented.

"Raffles" as a novel was a best seller, and as a legitimate play it was successful for several years. The picture is destined to be just as popular as the novel and far more popular than the legitimate play.

Prior to taking the leading role, John Barrymore, much against his wishes, associated with some of the most notorious characters in the underworld of New York in order that he might get acquainted with their manner of doing things. In this education of crookdom, Barrymore had the assistance of William J. Burns, the widely known detective, who made Barrymore acquainted with some of the cleverest society crooks in the world. These crooks first laughed at Barrymore and then gave him every assistance, explaining to him their manner of covering their own tracks after they have committed a crime.

Notwithstanding that the first trade showing will not be held until November 28, some of the territory already has been disposed of by Hiller & Wilk. The Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tenn., has purchased the rights for the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee and the Dawn Masterplay Company of Detroit, Mich., has purchased the rights to Michigan. Both of these purchasers took the picture without even having seen it. From now on, however, Hiller & Wilk insist that every purchaser view the picture in order that they may know just exactly what they are purchasing and have explained to them the wonderful possibilities for its promotion.

As a result of the numerous inquiries received from state rights buyers and from foreign right purchasers, Hiller & Wilk declare that there is every indication that the state rights market is opening up and that this is an indication that exhibitors are leaning more and more to open booking.

Cast Announced for Brenon Picture

Herbert Brenon has been putting the finishing touches on the cast of his forthcoming production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is to appear in his famous characterization of the Stranger.

In addition to Sir Johnston and Molly Pearson, whose engagements have already been announced, a notable cast of players has been selected. Ketty Galanta, who made so successful a screen debut in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," and is soon to be seen as "Maryla" in "Empty Pockets," will play Vivian, and Grace Stephens and Ben Graham are to be the Major and Mrs. Tompkins respectively. Miss Kite, the painted lady, will be played by Ricca Allen, and Mrs. Sharpe, the landlady, by Augusta Haviland. Dora Mills Adams has been chosen for the part of the aristocratic Miss de Hooley, while Germaine Bourville is to be the sister.

The roles of Jape Samuels, Darkcom, and Joey Wright will be played by Sydney Golden, Thornton Baetion, and Robert Fisher.

This comprises the entire company, with the exception of Christopher Penny, the young artist, who has yet to be cast.

Lois Wilson is appearing opposite J. Warren Kerrigan in the first Kerrigan-Paralta play, "A Man's Man," released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Sees Gold Lining of War Tax Cloud

M. H. Hoffman Says Present Conditions in Moving Picture Business Are Not Alarming in the Least

OPTIMISM that is backed by sound reasoning is always welcome during times disturbing to the majority. On that account it should be reassuring to many producers, distributors and exhibitors in the motion picture industry to know that a few of the conservative men in the trade regard as unnecessary the anxiety over the future that is felt in numerous quarters.

Exhibitors who have not yet satisfactorily disposed of the war tax on admissions, and distributors who are insisting upon putting the positive print war tax upon the exhibitors, have been more than ordinarily concerned during the past few weeks.

M. H. Hoffman, head of Hoffman-Foursquare, admits that while existing conditions are troublesome there is no need for undue concern as to the outcome. He contends that underneath all the disturbance there is more to be thankful for than most people appear to realize.

"We merely are experiencing a flurry that every man of analytical mind foresaw the moment war was declared by the United States government, last spring. In a comparatively short time the very persons who now are most agitated—as is natural in the circumstances—will be smiling over business. For, in my judgment, motion picture theater owners and managers are facing their greatest era of prosperity.

"This means—if we proceed intelligently to analyze—that producers and distributors must prosper. The reason is, of, course, obvious; for when the world is right with the exhibitor it is right, also, with those whose commercial success is dependent upon the exhibitors!

"I confess that no man can be blamed for becoming a bit pessimistic when his business begins falling off; especially when, simultaneously, some of those from whom he buys his merchandise blandly inform him that they purpose charging him for something they themselves should pay.

"In other words: the difficulties arising with the public over the war tax on admissions, which has held some motion picture patrons temporarily in check, has served as the first wet blanket; the next has been the decision of practically all the distributors to put the burden of the positive print war tax on the exhibitor.

"But all this is to be straightened out. Almost before we know it these matters will be things of the past and business booming as it hasn't since the motion picture sprang into nation-wide popularity. M. H. Hoffman, Inc., which recognized the justice of itself paying the positive print war tax, can see the writing on the wall.

"The first corrective measure will be in the reversal of the stand taken by these distributors who wish the exhibitor to pay the tax they should do. The second step toward more prosperous times than ever will ensue just as soon as the public adjusts itself to paying its amusement tax, and when the country becomes accustomed to having its boys at the front in the thick of the terrible war.

"All that is needed, now, is patience on the part of all concerned in the prosperity of motion pictures; patience and hopefulness and consideration of the other fellow. Never before was there such need of harmonious relationship between producer, distributor and exhibitor. A 'get-together' movement based on fair dealing will do more to solve so many of the old problems harassing the trade than anything I might mention. So let us all cheer up, stand shoulder to shoulder and not be fearful that the future is not as rosy as a red Jonathan apple."

Crest Corporation Buys Lillian Walker Plays

Concerning the taking over of the Lillian Walker releases of the Ogden Pictures Corporation by a distributing concern, Albert Scowcroft, the president of that company, has issued the following statement:

"Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, came in touch with our company through Mr Goldburg in the sale of the foreign rights to the Walker productions. Mr. Carlton, desirous of extending his operations to the American market, resumed negotiations for the handling of the distribution of all the future Lillian Walker attractions inclusive of the second release, 'The Grain of Dust,' just completed and the transaction initiated by Mr. Goldburg was closed this week by Lester Park, the vice-president of the Ogden Corporation, and myself.

"The contract entered into disposes of the world's rights to 'The Grain of Dust,' adapted from the novel written by the late David Graham Phillips, as well as the few remaining states left open on 'The Lust of the Ages.' In short, for a cash consideration paid, Mr. Carlton takes over the sole distribution and negative rights to our productions.

"Mr. Goldburg held a contract with our company as sales and exploitation manager which had about a year yet to run and that contract as well as Mr. Goldburg's interest in the Ogden Corporation was by mutual consent cancelled for a cash consideration.

"While to some the closing of the transaction with Mr. Carlton may appear to have been a business move contrary to Mr. Goldburg's interests since it would necessarily terminate his connection with the company, as much as we desired to continue with him, yet Mr. Goldburg appreciated that it was the desire of the directors to enter into such a deal if it could be negotiated, particularly in view of the fact that the terms of the transaction are decidedly remunerative to the stockholders.

"Lester Park will be associated with Mr. Carlton in the distribution of the Lillian Walker productions, operating from the present offices of The Crest Pictures Corporation in the Times Building."

Mr. Goldburg stated that his own plans are yet to be made. He will remain in the state rights field.

Mr. Scowcroft expects to return to Ogden, Utah, next week.

Crooked Lawyer Portrayed by Walthall

The people who believe that our courts are ruled by corrupt politics will be interested in "His Robe of Honor," the story by Ethel and James Dorrance, which has just been completed under the direction of Rex Ingram and which will mark Henry B. Walthall's debut as a star in Paralta Plays.

The Dorrances have taken for their hero a highly successful lawyer crook whose methods used suggest those of a firm of lawyers of a few years ago, whose infamy was gossiped about the country over. This lawyer has good instincts as well as evil, and his good instincts are aroused by his determination to win a young woman whose noble instincts rebel at the thought of the methods which have won for him the success he has achieved. To get his hands clean he has to break from a corrupt alliance with the "traction trust" whom he has bled unmercifully with his damage cases. Then he is called upon to defend the brother of the boss of Tammany Hall, and seizes this opportunity as a means to compel his appointment to the Supreme Court bench.

His reputation is so bad that the boss and the organization both shy at the nomination, but the "boss'" younger brother faces the electric chair and the shyster lawyer drives a hard bargain. His final defiance to the gang is when, after attaining his goal, he turns the organization down and establishes himself as the people's judge, dealing out justice with no regard to where the hardship falls.

The final cutting and assembling of the production was completed last week and the first print is now on its way to the New York offices of Paralta Plays.

Buck Becomes Manager for Hoffman

M. H. Hoffman, Inc., is adding to its sales executives by securing men of seasoned experience and judgment to direct the various Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges throughout the continent.

The newest member of this independent distributing concern is A. G. Buck, who takes charge this week of the Philadelphia office. Mr. Buck has managed the K. E. S. E. Philadelphia exchange for the past year, and his activities and success have made him prominent in that territory and one whose services have been highly regarded by competitors who admire an executive who invariably has commendatory things to say of another's product.

Before coming east, Mr. Buck was manager of the Chicago Fox Exchange for a year, and before that served the same company satisfactorily in St. Louis.

Exhibitors Compliment and Book Play

New York exhibitors of the discriminating class are saying complimentary things about the latest Hoffman-Foursquare picture, "The Fringe of Society," the seven-part feature recently finished by the George Backer Film Corporation and which has its earliest New York showings the latter part of November. These exhibitors are supporting their commendation by booking the picture. Manager Hy Gainsborg has reported an exceptional quantity of business. Similar reports are being received from all other Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges in Boston, Montreal, Toronto, St. Johns, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Atlanta. A wire from Ben S. Cohen, who has just reached Denver, states that exhibitors in his territory have heard of "The Fringe" and want to see it screened.

"Mother" Helps Red Cross Campaign

Through the courtesy of McClure Pictures, which organization is offering "Mother" for state right distribution, the picture was shown on Monday, November 19, in aid of the drive in behalf of the Red Cross movement. Rev. William H. Jackson, an active participator in the Red Cross campaign, was responsible for the presentation of the George Loane Tucker feature at the club house of the Nassau County Red Cross Society at Oyster Bay, Long Island.

A large gathering witnessed the screening of the picture, among whom were many prominent society folk and several leaders of the present movement which is giving material aid and comfort to the American troops now on the other side. The proceeds derived from the exhibition on Monday will help materially to swell the rapidly growing Red Cross fund. Mr. Jackson commented upon the enthusiastic response which he has met not only from the McClure organization, but from the various other picture producers who are loaning their support in aid of the campaign.

Shows "The Whip" in Circus Tent

J. Frank Hatch, a real showman in the motion picture field, has purchased the Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to the successful Maurice Tourneur production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip." The deal was closed with Hiller and Wilk, sales agents for Paragon Films, Inc.

Mr. Hatch's plans for exploiting "The Whip" are unusual in that he will show "The Whip" as he would a circus. He will carry his own tent, seats, orchestra and lighting system and will be independent of all theaters in the towns he selects for showing the picture.

Buys New Jersey Rights

H. Heidelberger, of the Strand Theater Building, Newark, New Jersey, announces that the purchaser of the New Jersey state rights of the Mayfair six-part production "Persuasive Peggy" is the Civilization Feature Film Corporation. Mr. Heidelberger is the manager of the company.

"The Whip" Is Nearly All Sold

Hiller and Wilk announce that the rights to "The Whip" have not been sold for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico.

Russian Turmoil Accompanies Film Showing

Trouble in New Republic Is Headlined as Brenon's "Fall of the Romanoffs" Begins its Circulation

"THE Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's big historical drama depicting the birth of Russian freedom, will soon be seen throughout the United States. No film production, since the very first silent drama, has come to the film fans of the nation under more sensational auspices.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" will reach the country at the psychological moment. Montreal and Toronto have been viewing the production and a Washington engagement follows; while immediately afterwards "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will be shown throughout New York state. At the same time the various territorial allotments outside of New York are being rapidly arranged. By the early part of 1918 "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will be on the screens of theaters from coast to coast.

The swiftly changing developments in Russia, accumulating in importance since the outbreak of the world war, have reached a point of absorbing national interest. The Russian crisis is the one big thing of the hour. "What is Russia going to do?" is being asked from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

While the interest is at white heat, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is coming to the public.

In Montreal and Toronto, business has been tremendous. The St. Denis theater of Montreal has been smashing every record with "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

On December 2 the production will open for a two weeks' run at Thomas Moore's Garden theater in Washington. The capital showing was arranged through J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Mr. Moore is a prominent member. The opening Washington showing will be a gala affair, the various national executives, legislators and diplomatic representatives will be present.

Sergius Trufanoff, otherwise the Monk Iliodor, will appear at the Washington Garden theater showing, giving audiences an opportunity to see the man who brought about the downfall of Rasputin, the Emperor's illiterate advisor. Iliodor gained his power with the Czar Nicholas through his ability as an orator. He is a speaker of remarkable sincerity and impressiveness. He does not speak English, his remarks being interpreted. Iliodor has just appeared at the St. Denis theater in Montreal, where he was given a sensational reception.

S. J. Berman, in charge of the selling end of the New York territory for "The Fall of the Romanoffs," announces that the production will be launched in this field on January 6, with a smashing statewide premiere. At least twenty theaters will show the picture simultaneously during the week. Mr. Berman expects that over 1,000,000 film fans will see the production before the end of the first week.

Those in the know are confident that "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will shatter every screen record. Announcement is made that offers for various territories of the United States are now being considered, and that important allotments will be announced within the next sixty days.

The newspaper and magazine space allotted to Russia since the outbreak of the war in 1914 has given the Brenon production a heralding unique in the annals of motion pictures. Czar Nicholas, Rasputin and Iliodor have been the vital topics of the hour, just as Kerensky and the latest political shifts in Petrograd are at this moment the big things in the public mind.

"The Deemster" Goes Well in the South

Good big features are, it appears from the evidence that is voluntarily tendered, very profitable investments when the productions are properly handled. There is the testimony of Colonel William E. Condell of the firm of Condell & Greenfield, Liberty Feature Film Company, Shreveport, La. In a recent letter Colonel Condell writes:

"We bought the Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana rights to 'The Deemster' less than three months ago. The picture is a remarkably fine booking proposition. Hall Caine's fame is a great asset. In these times a great feature, like 'The Deemster' is, I consider, as sound an investment as you could have. I am very glad I acquired it."

The remaining unsold territory, in addition to the Colorado district, is the Texas territory and the negotiations that are pending may be consummated in a few days.

Rights to "The Warrior" Are Selling Fast

A tribute to the market value of the General Enterprises, Inc., film spectacle, the "Warrior" came to light last week in the sale by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of the states of Ohio and Indiana to James Grainger, general manager of Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. Grainger bought the territorial privileges of "The Warrior" for Illinois, Michigan, Nebraska and Iowa during the recent flying sales trip made by Sawyer and Lubin in the middle west. The flood of inquiries which have poured in from exhibitors relative to bookings for "The Warrior" induced the Chicago buyer to add to his purchase the states of Ohio and Indiana.

Contracts were also negotiated during the past week whereby W. E. Drummond, manager of Special Feature Co. of Knoxville, Tennessee, becomes the owner of "The Warrior" for the southern territory embraced by the states of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida. More than three-fourths of the country has been sold in the last six weeks.

Louis B. Mayer Links Fortune with Select

Becomes New England General Manager with Headquarters In Boston—A Popular Personality In Industry

WITH the enlistment under its banner of Louis B. Mayer, Select Pictures Corporation has brought to its aid in New England one of the most powerful, and at the same time popular personalities in the entire field of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Mayer has become New England General Manager of Select Pictures, with headquarters at 69 Church street, Boston, Mass.

In associating himself with Select of which Lewis J. Selznick is president, Mr. Mayer has made another interesting move in the ever progressive development of his motion picture activities. Until recently, Mr. Mayer was in control of the Metro franchise for New England, and had become prominently identified with that company's progress in this territory. The New England development of Metro is credited to the energetic and brilliant administration which Mr. Mayer gave to its affairs in New England from the inception of that enterprise.

The story of Louis B. Mayer's rise to prominence in the film industry is a remarkable one. Less than ten years ago, as a young man with little capital but abundant energy, and endowed with a native keen judgment, he made his appearance in Haverhill, Mass. Here he assumed the lease of a small theater which had been running burlesque attractions, and which had gathered for itself a distinctly unsavory reputation.

Mayer announced that he was going to turn this dark spot into an amusement Mecca for the women and children of the town. And he did it—to the surprise of everyone but himself. Soon this small theater, which was operated under the name of the Orpheum, was found unable to accomodate the packed audiences which its program of highgrade pictures attracted.

The theater was enlarged to twice its seating capacity, but still patrons were turned away nightly, as a sold out house became the rule and not the exception at the Orpheum.

Two years after, Mr. Mayer first entered the town, he had built and opened the new Colonial theater, with a seating capacity of 1,500, devoted to pictures, vaudeville, and road attractions. Like the Orpheum, which was purely a motion picture house, this enterprise prospered.

Mr. Mayer investigated the possibility which lay in the conducting of a feature exchange for New England. He was encouraged to enter this field of the motion picture business, and opened a small office in Boston under the name of the American Feature Film Company. Here, in an office equipped with a single desk, and with only two three reel features to sell, Mayer started to carve out a career for himself. Even more quickly than his motion picture theaters had developed, did this enterprise grow and prosper. The two features quickly became two hundred. The Alco program was secured and handled with success in Mr. Mayer's office.

It was from this that the Metro Pictures developed, and the distinguished qualities which Mr. Mayer has brought to his picture activities have been reflected in the establishment of Metro Pictures, not only in New England, but throughout the entire country. While acting as president and general manager of the Metro office, Mayer brought under its control the Bluebird photoplays, and later the Jewel productions.

Perhaps the most brilliant achievement of Mr. Mayer was his handling of "The Birth of a Nation" throughout New England. When this big production was making screen history in Boston, there was a continual struggle with the opposition which was directed against it by the colored population. So strong was this antagonism, that "The Birth of a Nation" was considered a lost proposition for New England.

It was considered impossible to exploit profitably D. W. Griffith's big photoplay in the puritanical cities and towns of this territory after what had occurred.

Louis B. Mayer thought otherwise.

Backing his own judgment, he bought the New England rights for the production following its Boston engagement. This he did in the face of adverse advice from every friend and counselor. The film world seemed a unit in pronouncing his undertaking foolhardy.

Mr. Mayer, however, brought to this problem the same determined energy, common sense, and keen judgment which had distinguished his former successes. The result was that "The Birth of a Nation" was successfully shown in practically every city, town and village of New England, and netted a handsome profit for its backer.

Louis B. Mayer has interspersed his other activities with theater management and ownership with great success. Besides the houses already mentioned, he established a record when he took the Park Theater in Boston, at a time when it had been losing money for a long period, and placed it on the winning side of the ledger during the very first week of his control.

His was the moving spirit in the establishment of the Strand Theater, Lowell, Mass., one of the most elaborate and lavishly outfitted photoplay houses in New England.

As New England manager for Select, Mr. Mayer has already obtained contracts of magnitude with the important first run houses of Boston, Providence, New Haven, Lowell, and other New England cities.

The quick organization of his sales campaign bids fair to create an unusual record for important sales in the New England territory. Mr. Mayer is enthusiastic in his prediction of the future which his district holds for Select's stars, Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, and Alice Brady.

Deitrich Heads New Producing Company

De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Is Organized in New York to Present Miss Doris Kenyson as Star of its Features

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, who retired last week as advertising and publicity director of the International Film Service Company, Inc., announces the formation of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., a $200,000 concern, which will produce high-class feature photoplays with Doris Kenyon as the star. Miss Kenyon is at present with Pathe starring in the new serial, "The Hidden Hand." She will sever her connection with Pathe about the first of the year upon the completion of the serial.

De Luxe Pictures, Inc., was incorporated at Albany on November 1. At a meeting of the stockholders the following day, Mr. Deitrich was elected president and general manager; William L. Chilvers, vice-president and secretary, and Edward V. Goerz, treasurer. Mr. Goerz was for many years connected with the foreign department of the National City Bank of New York. He is a member of the famous Goerz family of lens manufacturers. The board of directors consists of the officers, D. M. Kenyon, and Assemblyman Raymond Kenyon, who represents Essex county in the New York state legislature. He is a brother of Miss Doris Kenyon. The new concern is now fitting up executive offices at 516 Fifth avenue, which will be ready for occupancy on December 1.

In outlining the policy of De Luxe Pictures, Mr. Deitrich said:

"Miss Kenyon and I have decided that there is a growing demand for clean, wholesome, artistic, human interest pictures. We have reached this conclusion after watching and carefully weighing the reports from exhibitors all over the country. We propose to make this kind of pictures in five, six and seven-reel features exclusively. Miss Kenyon will appear as the star in all of the first productions of our company. It is our intention, however, to take on other stars as rapidly as possible.

"We have many splendid stories in hand which I have been collecting during the last two years. Some are book adaptations, some original scripts. I have also commissioned two well known authors to write original stories for Miss Kenyon. One of these scripts will include a part for a famous actor who will shortly sign a contract with us.

"We expect to start making pictures in February or March, but we will not start until I am fully satisfied with my stories. My long experience in newspaper and magazine writing and editing, and more recently my film experience, fits me, I believe, to judge the quality of stories the public wants. Titles will be given the most serious consideration, and no picture will be released until the title is satisfactory.

"We are negotiating now for one of the best equipped studios in the East, although some of our work will be done either in Florida or California.

"We are not yet ready to announce our releasing plans, as negotiations with several concerns are now pending.

"I believe that Miss Kenyon is one of the most popular stars in motion pictures today. She has an enormous following, despite the fact that in many of her pictures she has been poorly cast. Heading her own company, Miss Kenyon will have much to do with the selection of her roles and the cast. She is possessed of all the things essential to great success—youth, beauty and marked dramatic ability. One of the foremost directors of today recently declared she possessed the greatest emotional talent of any star now before the public. We shall endeavor to place her in roles that will afford her every opportunity to demonstrate her ability.

"We propose to secure the best directors obtainable and we will endeavor to combine top-notch direction with a great star and supporting cast, splendid stories and the necessary funds for adequate productions."

"Troublemakers" Ready December 9

Exhibitors have been notified that "Troublemakers," a William Fox standard picture, will be ready December 9.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "Baby Grand" stars, are presented as "Troublemakers" and reports from Fox studios would indicate that in this comedy-drama, as in their other pictures, they have lived up to the title in every respect. A cast of adults support the winsome little stars.

"Troublemakers" was written especially for the Fox "Baby Grands" by their director, Kenean Bule, and deals with the life story of a dashing young widow and her two children who manage to keep things humming and everybody guessing. Their activities and pranks finally "got on the nerves" of one of their victims and he mysteriously disappears. He is thought to have been murdered and a charge of homicide is lodged against the children's best friend, a man-of-all-work about the estate, who always found time to assist the youngsters in perpetrating a joke.

It devolves upon the "troublemakers" to prove their friend's innocence and the way they go about doing it is intensely interesting. It is finally accomplished, however, due entirely to Jane and Katherine's efforts.

Mary Is Surprised at Her Own "Vamping"

Mary MacLane, whom Essanay enticed into motion picture acting, has completed her seven-reel vampire photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

Coming to the Essanay studios without ever having thought of screen acting, the author of "I, Mary MacLane" has proven that the genius that drives the pen can often illustrate the thoughts it transcribes.

Miss MacLane photographs well and she plays her role with natural stage presence and dramatic instinct. Miss MacLane herself was surprised at her interpretation of a vampire. In reviewing the picture at the studio projection room, her comments were many and interesting.

Miss MacLane wrote the script out of her writer's fund of knowledge regarding the world of men and women. This knowledge, combined with her dramatic talent, has produced a cinema classic that must rival the popularity of her strange book.

The story of "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" concerns the fates of six admirers, each of a different type, each making a different appeal to the heart of the vampire.

Second Normand Picture Will Be First

By an application of the adage that "the last shall be first and the first shall be last," Mabel Normand, Goldwyn star, is likely to find her second Goldwyn picture, just begun under the direction of George Loane Tucker, the first of her releases under the Goldwyn imprint.

Having completed her patriotic comedy-drama, "Joan of Plattsburg," a sudden official request made it necessary to postpone its release because it contains material of a military character that it is not desirable or wise to reveal at the moment.

Under the Goldwyn system of production a star at the conclusion of one picture passes quickly into the hands of another director whose production has been made ready well in advance.

Even before "Joan of Plattsburg" was completed Miss Normand was working with Mr. Tucker in her next picture, about which Goldwyn is making something of a mystery as regards authorship and title.

The motion picture rights to Edward Sheldon's play, "The Song of Songs," have been acquired by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for Artcraft release. Miss Elsie Ferguson will be the star.

"The Raggedy Queen"

Bluebird Play Presents Violet Mersereau in a Child Role. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

VIOLET MERSEREAU again plays a tomboyish little girl in her latest Bluebird picture. The offering is similar in many respects to the previous pictures in which she has played "kid" roles and will meet with the same reception. The story, while conventional, has a fair amount of action and gives opportunity for humorous touches and pathos. It is technically up to the Bluebird standard, and the cast of players is good. Its appeal to the patrons of the neighborhood house will be strong if Violet Mersereau is a favorite.

Grace Barton, Robert F. Hill, Charles Slattery and James O'Neil have important parts. Theodore Marston directed. The story is by Will Bronson, scenarioized by J. C. Brownell. Credit for the photography goes to Harry Forbes.

The Story: "Tatters," a little waif in a mining camp, is told by the woman who takes care of her that she is of royal blood. She plays queen to a court of youngsters and rules them with a high hand. In spite of her mischief she is often unhappy because she is so ragged and neglected.

The miners become discontented and a representative from the owners comes to investigate matters. One of the unruly group of miners attacks the young man and leaves him wounded and alone. Tatters finds him and takes him to her home. The owner of the mine visits the district and hears the story. He meets Tatters and in the woman who takes care of her recognizes a former servant in his home. By a little detective work he learns that Tatters is his own daughter. Her mother, a former actress, had left home before the child's birth, believing her husband no longer loved her. He had thought she eloped with another man and had lost track of her. So the "Raggedy Queen" is taken to a more fitting home and the young man she rescued seems to be the "Fairy Prince."

"The Secret of the Storm Country"

Select Picture with Norma Talmadge. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"THE Secret of the Storm Country" with Norma Talmadge is a picture with a big appeal which will be sure of a hearty welcome. It was directed by Charles Miller, and the scenario was prepared by Mary Murillo and Courtney Ryley Cooper, taken from the story of the same name by Grace Miller White which enjoyed a great deal of popularity.

A human interest story has been unfolded with many colorful touches and no effect which might contain a thrill has been overlooked. There are melodramatic parts which are in keeping with the subject, and which make a lively play to one's sympathies.

The story offers a study in contrasts, the rich girl versus the poor—the weak-willed man versus the strong—the wealthy, hypocritical, respected man versus the deformed, wronged one, hunted by the law. The characters are well drawn and have the saving grace of appearing consistent and natural when placed in strained positions. Some of the situations are a little forced but the story is well told, it holds one's interest and it will be enjoyed.

Norma Talmadge, as Tess, gives a delightful performance and her work is indeed a treat. The burden of the picture falls upon her shoulders and she carries it ably. She is given splendid support by a cast which includes Niles Welch, J. Herbert Frank, Ethel Grey Terry, and Charles Gotthold.

The story: Tessibel Skinner and her father live in the despised squatter village on the shores of Lake Cayuga. They are hated by Ebenezer Walderstricker, an influential man of the neighborhood.

Tess is loved by Frederick Graves and they are secretly married. Frederick's mother, however, wishes him to marry Madeline Walderstricker because of her wealth. Frederick rebels for a time and then fearing exposure, and knowing his mother would never countenance Tess, he agrees to the deception, marries Madeline Walderstricker, and departs on a long wedding tour with his bride.

Tess is heart broken but takes up the thread of her life as best she can. Her father dies soon after, leaving her to face the ordeal of becoming a mother alone. She is banished from the church, at Walderstricker's suggestion, but refuses to reveal her betrayer's name.

Lawyer Young gives Tess refuge in his home and grows to love her tenderly. When Tess's eyes are at last opened to the weakness of her idol she returns the love of her benefactor two-fold, and the death of Frederick makes a happy ending possible.

"The Awakening"

World Film Picture With Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly. November 3. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A PICTURE with a simple plot built around excellent types serves as medium for the capabilities of Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly. The scenes are laid in the Latin Quarter of Paris and the types shown are Bohemian ones, mostly genial souls hobnobbing with poverty, but with big, open hearts. It contains a great deal that is human and some splendid dramatic parts.

Montagu Love is cast in an exceptional role which suits him admirably, that of an uncouth, unloved artist who is known amongst his companions as "The Beast." Finding love in a poor girl whom he finds starving in the snow one night, he takes a new interest in life and a reformation takes place. There are many strong love scenes throughout the picture and the acting is excellent. Dorothy Kelly makes Marguerite a very appealing figure, and she wins sympathy from the start. The picture will find favor with all who are looking for something out of the ordinary, it being interesting to the finish with very cleverly drawn characters. George Archainbaud has ably directed it, and some good camera effects have been obtained by Philip Hatkin, notably the snow scenes.

The story: Jacques Revilly (Montagu Love), an artist of the Latin Quarter, because of ill-treatment all his life, has developed into a surly creature known as "The Beast." Having no one in his life for whom he can care, he has become a slovenly drunkard, without ambition even to sell his paintings.

One night he finds a girl in the snow and, taking her to the shelter of his humble home, he helps to nurse her back to health. She is Marguerite (Dorothy Kelly), a poor girl who has been unable to obtain work, and Jacques takes her into his heart as well as his home and insists upon caring for her.

His paternal feeling soon ripens into love, and casting aside his slovenly outfit he becomes quite a different man. Marguerite returns his love and all goes merrily until just before the wedding.

A dissolute young artist in the neighborhood makes a wager with some friends that he can obtain Marguerite for his own. By trickery he takes advantage of her. When Jacques hears of this his anger knows no bounds, and he challenges Chapon to a duel. In the duel he is slightly wounded, but when Marguerite hears he will recover she starts to leave, feeling herself defiled. Jacques calls her back before it is too late and there is the usual happy ending.

"The Queen of Spades"

Second Russian Production Offered Through Pathe. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE high artistic merit of the first Russian photoplay which Pathe offered is not repeated in the second. Pushkin's famous story, "The Queen of Spades," in spite of its clever plot, becomes in this screen version a mediocre costume play with little appeal for any audience. It is clumsily handled by the director and most of its dramatic force is lost. The players, with one exception, seem very camera-conscious and cannot compare with the artists who appeared in "The Painted Doll." The exception is the old lady who plays the title role.

The photography is good and the sets and costumes are interesting. But American audiences as a rule dislike costume plays unless they possess a deep human appeal, and this "The Queen of Spades" does not contain. Your patrons may regard the picture as an interesting curiosity because a product of the country which is at present puzzling the world. They will surely not be interested in the fate of the characters in the play, and for that reason it will not depress them, even though it leaves its hero insane and its heroine heart-broken.

The Story: A young officer, who has a passion for gambling but little money to satisfy it, hears a story about an old woman, the grandmother of one of his friends, who has a secret system which always wins. She learned the secret from a magician in her youthful days in Paris. The story haunts the young man and he determines to beg the old lady to give it to him. Through his friendship for the woman's young companion he gains admission to the house. He frightens the old woman by threats and she dies of heart failure.

Later the young man has a vision in which the woman appears to him and tells him to bet on three lucky cards in succession. He obeys and wins on the first two. He stakes his whole fortune on the third card, the ace of spades, but the queen of spades wins. The revenge of the cruel old lady is complete, and the young man goes insane.

"The Sudden Gentleman"

Triangle Picture with William Desmond. Released November 2. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

IN the Triangle offering, "The Sudden Gentleman," William Desmond portrays an Irishman of the musical comedy type. The comedy situations arise when an uncultured but likeable son of Erin is transplanted from his native country into the heart of an American millionaire's home. He is a sort of male "Peg o' My Heart," utterly lacking in polish but with a sense of humor, so he laughs his way into the heart of the daughter of the house. In fact, he laughs rather annoyingly during the first half of the picture but then, "getting his Irish up," he fights his way to the finish in regulation style. It provides good entertainment for those who enjoy light comedy and character parts a bit overdrawn.

William Desmond as the rollicking Irish lad is a winning sort of person, and Mary McIvor, Jack Richardson and Margaret Shillingford ably take other roles.

The scenes laid in Ireland are extremely pretty, and the Irish characters very quaint. Thomas N. Heffron directed the picture, and the photographic work was done by R. E. Irish.

The Story: Garry Garrity receives word that he is heir to millions but that he must go to America and become the guardian of his uncle's step-daughter, Louise Evans. Garry has visions of a child of about six and he accepts the commission.

The gift of toys was not appreciated.

Louise wishes to marry Count Camminetti, a fortune hunter, and is furious when she learns that she is not sole heir to her step-father's fortune, for she knows full well that it will take a great deal of money to buy the count.

Garry arrives, loaded down with toys for his ward, and is dumbfounded to find she is a grown lady. Louise is humiliated and angered by Garrity's plebeian manners, but soon sees the real worth of the man underneath and they become engaged.

The count is disappointed at losing Louise's millions, so conspires with Mrs. Hawtry, who is in love with him, for a way to obtain the money.

Mrs. Hawtry forces Garry into an embarrassing situation with the hope that he will do the gentlemanly thing and marry her. She plans to then divorce him and marry the count.

Garry learns of the frame-up, forces a confession from the count, is reinstated in Louise's good graces, and we suppose they live happily ever after.

"The Fighting Trail"

Episode 12. "The Desert of Torture." Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

EXCITING situations and daring feats still produce thrills as "The Fighting Trail" continues toward its finish. Seldom have serials been shown with so many clever scenes and such an unusual amount of interest. Gwyn and Nan are locked in an underground vault in their mine and then a dam is loosened which floods this subterranean chamber. They are left struggling in the water, powerless to escape, as the picture closes on this episode. The scenes always carry conviction and are exceedingly well produced.

Carol Halloway and William Duncan, who have done so much toward making this serial one of the best, are as pleasing and daring in these latter episodes as they were in the first. They deserve nothing but the highest praise.

"The Small Town Guy"

Taylor Holmes in Essanay Perfection Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TAYLOR HOLMES adds another to his list of clever screen characterizations in this comedy drama which shows him as a very guileless country youth who comes to the city to win a fortune. A magazine story, published in Munsey's Magazine under the title, "A Picture of Innocence," served as the basis for the picture. While the plot is rather thin for a five-reel feature, it is worked out with the many humorous incidents and clever touches which usually distinguish the Essanay type of comedy-drama. Patrons who have liked Taylor Holmes in previous film plays will, we feel sure, enjoy this one. It is light but holds interest well and is amusing.

Helen Ferguson plays opposite Mr. Holmes. Fred Tiden and Mark Elliston contribute good character sketches as the two crooks. There are a number of minor roles very cleverly played. Photography and settings are up to standard.

The picture is released December 3.

The story: To their great disgust, Swell Dresser and Slim McClearn, two Chicago confidence men, are forced to stay overnight in Compton Center.

And by this incident does young Ernest Gledhill unconsciously beset his road with wrong. Innocent of all evil intent, yet puffed in his guilelessness by the tip from the confidence men that his cleverness should not be stifled in the little burg, he goes to Chicago and lands in with a gang of crooks.

He believes his position is honorable, writing Eleanor, his sweetheart in Compton Center, that he is secretary of the Type-metal Club, soliciting funds, on commission, for a new club house. But the game is caught in its infancy and Ernie, whose innocence is seen by the authorities, is advised to quit the gang.

He goes back home, to learn that his deceased aunt has made him her beneficiary. Ernie hesitates, however, in calling on Eleanor, feeling he is not worthy of her companionship.

The two crooks return to town, having heard of Ernie's good fortune. They try to get "hush money" out of him, threatening him with exposure. Ernie tells them both, though they come separately, to return for his answer at five o'clock.

A few minutes before five o'clock Eleanor rushes in, telling Ernie that he was cheated on a land investment; that property he had paid $25,000 for had been previously bought for $2,500. But Ernie is not the loser in the end, as a syndicate, wishing to use the property for a dam, gives him $50,000 for it.

Ernie then opens his heart to Eleanor, confessing his miserable affair in Chicago. But she tells him that she trusts in his integrity. Inspired with new courage, Ernie pounces on the two crooks who return for their hush money. As he finishes pummelling them, a federal officer walks in and arrests them for violating the mail privileges.

And finally Ernie achieves his heart's desire, cleared of a stain he had unwittingly inflicted on himself.

"Reaching for the Moon"

Artcraft Picture With Douglas Fairbanks. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"REACHING for the Moon," the new Artcraft picture, provides splendid entertainment and opportunities for Douglas Fairbanks to be seen at his best. It is a clever farce, bordering on the burlesque, with an overflow of situations and some very unique ideas. "Doug" is allowed to race through it in a breezy, unrestrained manner, and, aside from performing some of his old stunts which are sure winners, he acts in a little different line. He is seen as Alexis Caesar Napoleon Brown, who is continually reaching for things too high, but when he finds himself crowned Alexis, King of Vulgaria, he realizes the discomfitures attached to that exalted position and is very glad to wake up and find it was all a dream and that kingly duties are not for him. He is satisfied to allow the moon to pursue its course while he stays at home and romps with the "son." The hair-breadth escapes he makes to the tune of "Long Live the King" prove a source of much merriment, and he fights, if not in royal style, at least in a way which picture fans highly approve.

Fairbanks as a fighting prince.

The subtitles, showing Anita Loos' clever touch, are very humorously written and occasion many hearty laughs. The picture was directed by John Emerson.

The story: Alexis Caesar Napoleon Brown, boasting a family pedigree, is dissatisfied with his lowly position. He is continually reaching for the moon until even his sweetheart becomes annoyed and suggests that he come down to earth.

Going home, he flings himself down upon his bed in despair, when there is a knock at the door and two strange men enter. They go down on their knees, calling him "king," and give him the startling information that the Kingdom of Vulgaria is waiting to proclaim him as its ruler. Alexis wastes no time in packing up his clothes.

On the boat he learns that Boris, a rival for the crown, has spies stationed everywhere. Poor Alexis is not allowed to talk, as there is a dictaphone in his room, and not allowed to eat for fear the food has been poisoned. As he feasts on a Uneeda biscuit he realizes that the position of king has its drawbacks.

In Vulgaria he is received with pomp and ceremony; and only a few bombs hurled in his direction and a volley of shots aimed at him mar the gay festivities. After many terrific struggles with Boris' henchmen and evading them by climbing the side of a house, he falls through a skylight into the chancellor's home to the tune of "Long Live the King," only to be informed he must hurry and dress for the reception to be given the Princess Valentina that evening. It is ordained that the Princess Valentina shall be his queen.

One look at her is enough and Alexis tells Boris he can have his comic valentine. A duel ensues. Not being at all familiar with swords, Alexis makes a poor showing and at the tip of a rapier falls over a cliff.

Alexis is next shown falling out of bed, arriving with a thud on the floor. Being cured of his aspirations, he returns to mundane things with a will—and his sweetheart, who is waiting for him with plans of a Jersey bungalow.

William Russell in Excellent Comedy Drama—Mutual Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is the best comedy drama William Russell has ever appeared in, to our way of thinking, and one of the best that has ever been produced. That rare thing, a really clever plot, forms its basis, and good acting and straight-forward directing make of it a most delightful entertainment. Russesll acts his part, that of the unsophisticated country boy, with a fine sense of humor and of characterization. While there is a fight in the picture (staged on the top of an elevator), the situations and the characters are refreshingly different from those in previous Russell pictures, which were beginning to look a bit stereotyped to one who had seen them all. This is new and funny and interesting.

The surprise ending, very cleverly managed, adds the final touch of excellence to the comedy. If you wish to give your patrons full benefit of the author's and director's skill in presenting the story, be sure that you do not reveal the secret in advertising or program.

You can recommend this picture without any fear, whether Russell is a favorite in your house or not. If he is, so much the better. If he is not, he will be liked in this anyway.

Francelia Billington, as usual, is the leading lady. Clarence Burton, Harvey Clark and others do good character acting. Edward Sloman directed the play from a story by Charles Dazey.

The story: When a former resident of Hohokus, Maine, returned from New York City as a famous motion picture director, the hero of this story decided to seek his fortune in the big town. He was also seeking a girl whom he had seen once when she stopped off at the little burg between trains. She had dropped her bag accidentally, and the country boy kept it, intending to find again its owner.

The village band accompanied the young adventurer to the station, and his father and all his friends expected to hear great things of him. But the boy found New York a very lonely place and was about to pack up and go home when his adventure began. He found the girl and also foiled a plot by which an imposter was to obtain important papers her father held. Our hero put up a good fight and saved the day and the girl and the papers. Then we learned that all this wild adventure was a story the homesick boy had invented to write home to his dad in order to cover up his own discouragement. However, the story is to have a happier ending. For the motion picture director, who came from Hohokus, appeared on the scene and greeted his young friend warmly. The boy showed him the letter he had written. Whereupon the director offered him a thousand dollars for the scenario rights and a job on the scenario staff of the studio.

"The Judgment House"

Paramount Offering. Released November 19. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

J. STUART BLACKTON'S adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Judgment House" is a picture built along conventional lines and is quite British in flavor. The picture is decidedly slow in action. It is much too long as it now stands and doesn't really start until many reels have been unwound.

It is a pity the picture just misses fire throughout. Rudyard Byng never impresses us with the power he is supposed to have; Jasmine is never quite the coquette she is supposed to be. Krool, the villainous servant, disappoints us sadly by becoming a veritable Gunga Din when the battle is o'er, and we were led to expect a sword thrust at least. Fellowes, the villain, drops out of sight and we don't have the satisfaction of seeing him punished. Stafford, the hope of the spectators, inconsiderately dies, leaving the wife to go back to her husband whom we had grown to dislike. The scenes are laid in England at the time of the Boer war, switching to India in the last reel and bringing in an element of bloodshed. The women in the picture are consistently made to wear unbecoming 1905 frocks and figures, but it might be mentioned, en passant, that the men all wear the latest 1917 models in clothing.

The photography is excellent and stands out as the finest thing about the picture. It alone makes the picture worth while. A notable cast has been selected, including Conway Tearle, Violet Hemming, Wilfred Lucas and Paul Doucet.

The story: Jasmine Grenfel is beloved by two men but selects Rudyard Byng for her life partner because of his power. She always secretes a feeling of love for the other man, Ian Stafford, however, and he continues to be desperately in love with her.

Rudyard Byng, after a few years of married life, fails to become the forceful, powerful person his wife had expected him to be. At a moment when Jasmine is feeling rather dissatisfied, Stafford comes into her life again, with the result that they are to elope. They are prevented from doing so by the husband, who suspects another man, and, in his rage, makes them see the error of their course. Jasmine, however, refuses to remain longer with her husband.

Eventually they all turn up in India during the Boer war, Jasmine as a nurse, Byng and Stafford to throw themselves into the fighting. Byng wins his wife's love by exceptional bravery, while Stafford is killed in battle. Byng and Jasmine, reunited, start together on a new and happier life.

Brownie Vernon Is Featured in Butterfly Melodrama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MELODRAMA depending for its thrill upon the last-minute rescue of its heroine who is sentenced to death for murder, is the vehicle in which Brownie Vernon appears for the first time as a Butterfly star. The situations which are built up are so improbable that the play will appeal only to patrons who crave excitement and suspense at the expense of reality, and these may find the first part too draggy to suit them.

The production as a whole is not one of Butterfly's best. Miss Vernon is a pleasing player and deserves better things from a scenario writer. Frank Borzage will be liked as the young doctor. The supporting cast includes a number of skilled players, who enact their roles well. The photography and settings are up to standard. The story is the weak point in the production.

Murdock MacQuarrie, Joe Girard and Myles McCarthy are among the players. The story and scenario were written by J. G. Alexander and Fred Myton. Allen Holubar directed.

The story: Hilda is the daughter of James Morington, addicted to drugs. His younger brother, Allen, is also a dope fiend and exerts a very evil influence over James. Hilda refuses to marry Franklin Shirley, a young doctor who is in love with her, because she fears her children will have an inheritance of evil. She and her father go to live in a quiet village under an assumed name. The doctor who attends Mornington is found murdered, and Hilda believes that her father is guilty. She urges him to escape. He becomes insane and wanders away. Hilda is accused of the murder, tried and found guilty. She is sentenced to be hung. Shirley hears of the case but does not know, because of the assumed name, that Hilda is supposed to be the murderess. He gets permission to make a scientific test of her sanity, and thus meets his former sweetheart. Then he sets about proving her innocent, and is able to get a confession from Allen Mornington, who committed the crime, just in time to save Hilda.

"Who Goes There!"

Vitagraph Picture With Corinne Griffith and Harry Morey. Released November 26. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A PICTURIZATION of another Robert W. Chambers story is the weekly Vitagraph offering with Corinne Griffith and Harry Morey playing leads. It is essentially a Robert W. Chambers theme with Robert W. Chambers touches paramount. These screen productions of his works should prove very successful, as his popularity is undisputed and reaches the same class of people who frequent the movies. The story deals indirectly with the war and describes the adventures of a Belgian officer in trying to safely conduct a German woman out of England.

The production inspires more than the usual interest, as the theme is both timely and different, and has been very well handled. Corinne Griffith makes Karen an interesting character and her beauty is a decided asset to the picture. Harry Morey realizes the part of the Belgian officer and makes him a com-

The story: Kervyn Guild, an officer in the Belgian Guards, is brought before General Von Reiter with other Belgian refugees. The general offers Guild his liberty and amnesty for the refugees if he will safely conduct Karen Girard out of England. Guild agrees.

In London he meets Karen and while taking her to the boat realizes that he is being protected by German agents and watched by British secret service men.

Karen carries a satchel about which she maintains the strictest secrecy, and Guild believes it to contain papers of value to the Germans. Karen insists that they are not of a military nature. Guild, however, obtains the papers by force, and finds they contain valuable information for the English. Karen admits she is General Von Reiter's affianced wife.

When they have made their way safely through the German lines Karen avows her love for Guild and expresses her determination to go with him. Their flight is intercepted by Von Reiter, who arrives unexpectedly upon the scene.

A duel ensues in which Von Reiter is wounded and made to write out papers of safe conduct for Guild and Karen.

"The Ship of Doom"

Triangle Picture. Released December 2. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS picture of the sea shows many picturesque scenes, contains many thrills and is above the average for entertainment. The scenario was prepared by Wyndham Gittens and he has also ably directed the picture.

There are many splendid character studies shown and the scenes throughout the picture abound in vivid atmosphere. One can fairly taste the good old flavor of the ocean. There are intensely interesting dramatic moments and the story carries a big appeal, human in theme and unusual in treatment.

Most of the scenes are laid on a trading ship bound for the South seas, and the cruel captain is shown bullying the crew and trying to obtain Clara, whom he rescued for his own evil designs. He is only prevented from doing so by a mutiny of the ship's crew and a fire which destroys the craft. This scene of the fire is very spectacular and highly exciting. Finally, washed ashore upon a desert isle, the two lovers are reunited in a dramatic fashion.

Patrons are sure to be more than pleased with this offering, as it manages to hold one's attention throughout. Monte Blue and Claire McDowell enact the leading roles in a very satisfactory manner.

The Story: Martin Shaw, resident of a little fishing village, kills Jeff Whittlesey because he had the audacity to kiss his sweetheart, Clara Gove. The villagers want retribution but Martin and Clara escape in a fishing boat.

There is a storm at sea and their engine becomes disabled, but they are finally rescued by "Sundown" Shattuck, captain of a trading ship bound for the South seas.

Shattuck is a despicably cruel man who beats the members of his crew on the smallest provocation. He figures to obtain Clara for his own property, but a fire on the boat drives all to the life-boats. As the life-boat leaks Martin is made to jump overboard to save the others. Clara throws him a keg and he manages to keep afloat and is finally cast upon an island.

The boat with Shattuck and Clara is washed up on the same beach. Shattuck makes advances to Clara and in pursuing her falls into a bed of quicksand and disappears. Clara and Martin find each other on the island and are joyfully reunited.

"The Gift O' Gab"

Jack Gardner in Essanay-Perfection Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS time Jack Gardner stars in a comedy drama of the typical Essanay kind, instead of a "western" story, and he is fully as clever as either of the other stars Essanay has introduced in similar roles. The vehicles, which H. Tipton Steck adapted from a story published in Ainslee's Magazine, is exceptionally good in that it offers opportunity for the humorous touches and bits of characterization for which Essanay is becoming noted.

The story is made up of several episodes in the life of Tom Bain, who has "the gift of gab," and can talk himself out of the trouble he is always getting into. In presenting the story, we are treated to a well staged foot-ball game, followed by an early morning escapade much more amusing than this sort of thing in pictures is usually. Part of the entertainment is due to the clever twists of direction and not a small share to the engaging personality of the star, who is entirely at home in the role. The building of the tunnelling machine, which is shown in the picture, and its explosion, is a very funny episode. A number of excellent character roles and well chosen types add greatly to the fun throughout the entire picture. Helen Ferguson is pleasing as the girl in the cast, and Frank Morris as her brother is very likeable. As a whole, the release is a fine one, and should delight any audience.

The Story: Tom Bain was a hero when he won the foot-ball game for his college. The next morning, after a celebration, he landed in the police court, but was let off easy. Next he fell in love with a rich girl, and determined to become rich himself. He invented a tunnelling machine and his "gift of gab" won him financial backing, but didn't make the invention a success. However, his gift won him a position as salesman at a high salary; so he was able to marry the girl, even though he landed in a hospital before he found her again.

"The Fuel of Life"

Triangle Picture. Released November 18. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS picture takes its title from some profound poetry which is flashed on the screen at intervals throughout the transmission and which adds a symbolic touch hardly in keeping with its melodramatic theme. It, however, serves to add a certain amount of color to the picturization and to bring into play some philosophical treatises in the subtitles. The story is somewhat loosely constructed but tells in the main an entertaining tale. It has to do with a woman who, when she learns of the infidelity of her husband, turns against all men and ruthlessly wrecks hearts and fortunes with a sardonic smile. Her chief efforts and wiles revolve around a certain mine and its owner over both of which she is trying to gain control. She finally falls in love with said man and learns the error of her ways.

Belle Bennett in the leading role really has a chance to do hardly more than look pretty and wear some gorgeous costumes. Texas Guinan, J. Barney Sherry and Lee Hill play their parts in an acceptable manner. The picture was directed by Walter Edwards.

The story: Bob Spalding journeys to New York to interest investors in his mine, the "Bob Cat." He puts his affairs in the hands of Roger de Haven, an unscrupulous business man. Bragdon Brant is anxious to gain control of the mine and commissions Violet Hilton to obtain stock from de Haven at any cost. Angela de Haven finds her husband in a compromising position with Violet and leaves him.

Disillusioned, judging all men by her husband, Angela takes an apartment and breaks the hearts of all men who come within her circle. Brant becomes greatly infatuated with her and, still greatly desirous of obtaining control of the "Bob-Cat" mine, he sends her west to play up to Spalding and buy the stock.

Spalding falls in love with Angela but refuses to sell his share of the mine. She is strangely attracted to him, but desiring only revenge, she refuses to marry him and obtaining the stock from his partner, she starts back home.

Spalding follows her and arrives just in time to prevent her putting the stock on the market. With Spalding's appearance she realizes the error of her ways and admits her love for him.

"Her Silent Sacrifice"

Select Picture with Alice Brady. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"HER Silent Sacrifice" is melodrama and as such holds all the elements necessary to make it popular. Picturesque rural scenes in the first half of the picture, and contrasting high life in Paris in the last half, raise the picture out of its own class and make it pretentious. It is never vital because it is a little inhuman, but it is never ordinary owing to a splendid production. There are plenty of scenes which will make one's pulse beat faster.

The heroine is winning and self-sacrificing, the villian cunning and unrelenting, the hero (if such he can be called for he isn't aroused to chivalry until the last reel) is brave and commanding when he finally gets into action. The picture is well represented, moves smoothly, and is more entertaining than enlightening.

The picture was taken from the play "The Red Mouse" by Henry J. W. Dam and has been directed by Edward Jose.

The story: Arlette lives with her grandfather, Chupin, proprietor of the Inn in the village. Richard Vale, an artist, makes his headquarters in the village, setting up his equipment in an old mill. Things have gone badly with him and he is nearing the starvation point.

Arlette poses for him and falls madly in love, but his impersonal manner holds her off and she carefully hides her feelings.

Prince Boissard comes to the little village to recuperate and desires Arlette for his mistress. He offers to make a great lady of her, and a great artist of Vale, if she will listen to his suggestions. Arlette wavers at first, but thinking Vale cares for nothing but his art, she finally agrees, stipulating that the Prince fulfill his side of the bargain first.

The Prince lives up to his word. Vale becomes celebrated as an artist and Arlette becomes the toast of Paris. Then the times comes for the girl to pay the price.

Sarthe, the Princess Hindoo servant who is devoted to Arlette seeks out Vale and tells him the state of affairs. The two rush back to Arlette's aid, Vale by this time realizing his love for the girl and horrified at the thought of her sacrifice.

In the struggle which ensues the Prince is mysteriously stabbed and dies. Sarthe, to save Arlette, sent his master to his grave.

"The Mate of the Sally Ann"

Mary Miles Minter in Fine American-Mutual Picture. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is one of the very best pictures Miss Minter has appeared in. Her role is congenial; the story is interesting, and there is plenty of comedy. The picture is also very beautiful, the sea-coast locations being unusually fine. Mary plays a ragged role, with an opportunity to wear pretty clothes in some of the episodes. She is especially delightful in this story, but she has a rival for favor, and we are quite sure that she will not mind sharing honors with Teddy, the dog, who is the cleverest animal actor we have ever seen. In spite of the fact that his fore-paw was in a cast, this canine star plays a leading role with much zest and intelligence. The director, Henry King, who trained him and introduced the many clever comedy touches into the picture, is to be complimented on his skill. George Periolat and Alan Forrest have the chief roles in support of the star.

November 26 is the release date. The many exhibitors whose patrons look forward to Miss Minter's pictures can promise an extra good one in this.

The Story: Sally lived with her grandfather, on his little ship. Her mother had died when she was born. Her grandfather could not tell her anything about her father. His object in life was to find and kill this man who, he believed, had wronged Sally's mother.

Sally never had any playmates, so when she found a little dog on the beach she smuggled him on board the ship. One day he ran away and Sally followed him to the big house on the hill. There she met the owner, a famous judge, and a young friend of his. The judge invited her to go to a party with him, when he learned that Sally had never been to a party. Sally ran away from the ship on the night of the ball and went to the judge's house, where a beautiful costume was waiting for her.

But her grandfather discovered her absence and followed and broke up the party in his rage. Then it was discovered that Sally was really the daughter of the judge, who had become separated from his wife through an accident and had never found her or known of Sally's birth. So everything turned out happily, with a romance promised between little Sally and the judge's young friend.

"The Hungry Heart"

Famous Players-Paramount Picture with Pauline Frederick. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE eternal triangle, taken from the viewpoint of the neglected wife, is the theme of "The Hungry Heart," from the novel of the same name by David Graham Philips. A splendid production and Pauline Frederick's charm make the picture one of special interest. The types depicted are everyday ones and the attitude taken by the wife is the attitude almost any woman would take. The subject is timely and holds a good moral for husbands who are in the habit of putting their work before their wives. Parts of the story are a bit preposterous but it will hold the interest of the average theater-goer.

The situations shown are by no means new ones to patrons of the theater, but they are ones which are always more or less open for discussion and they offer splendid dramatic opportunities. Pauline Frederick makes the part of the wife and mother a particularly appealing one. Her performance will be hugely admired. Howard Hall as the husband gives her able support.

The story: Courtney Vaughn finds she is being neglected by her husband shortly after their honeymoon. She longs to take part in his work but he believes it is sufficient for a woman to merely look pretty and do nothing. A child fails to take the place of grown-up love in Courtney's life.

Courtney, becoming disheartened, leaves her husband and goes home to her mother, but she is persuaded that her child needs the protection of a father's love, so she reluctantly returns to her domicile.

On her return she finds that her husband has taken an assistant to help him in his work and very soon this man Basil avows his love for her. Her hungry heart, yearning for love, is not able to resist him, and she becomes happy in this new-found attraction.

The husband's forced absence from home proves too much of a lure for the lovers, and their indiscretions are told to Vaughn by the housekeeper when he returns. In rage he is about to kill Basil but Courtney helps him to escape. She pleads with her husband to give her a divorce and the custody of her child to which he agrees.

Time elapses and Vaughn returns to carry on some experiments in his laboratory. He asks Courtney to help him. She is very happy in this work and when Basil returns to ask her in marriage she realizes she loves her husband after all, now that he has learned to understand the yearning in woman's heart.

"Molly Entangled"

Paramount Picture with Vivian Martin. Released November 19. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"MOLLY Entangled" is endowed with a wealth of delightful scenes, quaint characters and a particularly bewitching star. The setting is a village in "Ould Ireland" and brawny Irish sons and gay colleens frolic through the scenes in picturesque review. A pretty and luminous little story serves to place Vivian Martin in an appealing role which suits her admirably. The picture may be termed wholesome, and clean and sweet and then not clearly express its vast amount of charm.

Vivian Martin is seen as Molly Shawn who weds the son of the house of Barry on his death-bed in order to save the Barry lands from falling into the hands of the O'Maras. Inconsiderately Jim Barry doesn't die, and Molly is left with a husband on her hands she doesn't want, and a big longing in her heart for Barney Malone. There is a surprise at the finish which brings about the happy ending.

Irish wit sparkles in the sub-titles which contain many a laugh. "Molly Entangled" is a refreshing treat and can not be too highly praised. Vivian Martin is wholly delightful and her supporting cast is entirely competent. Harrison Ford as Barney Malone does satisfactory work as do G. S. Spaulding, Noah Beery and Helen Dunbar.

The story was picturized by Edith Kennedy and directed by Robert Thornby.

the two are delightfuly happy in the knowledge of their nearby wedding.

There is a feud existing between the Barry's and the O'Mara's, gentry of the neighborhood. It is the O'Mara's wish that Jim Barry will drink himself to death, thus allowing the Barry fortune to pass into their hands.

The Barry's have befriended the Shawns in the past, and the Shawns are their sworn servants. When Jim Barry, in a drunken stupor, falls down stairs and the doctor gives him only until morning to live, he thinks of a way to still keep the Barry lands for his mother.

Molly Shawn is sent for and a marriage ceremony is performed by a visiting priest. Molly is heart-broken that she is thus separated from Barney, but her father tells her it is the least she can do for the Barrys who have so many times befriended her.

It happens, however, that Jim Barry doesn't die, and Molly is miserable. She refuses to allow him to touch her and remains true in her heart to Barney.

After Molly has been thus entangled for a brief space, it develops that the priest who performed the ceremony was no priest at all, but a man escaping from the law who had disguised himself in a priest's robe. So Molly has her Barney and we hope Jim Barry learned his lesson.

Find Well Under Theater

Builders of the new Tacoma, Wash., moving picture theater at Ninth and Market streets, struck an old abandoned well when they started excavating. The old-time well had been in use many years ago, before Tacoma had a water works system.

Pictures Supplant Vaudeville

The Colonial Theater in Detroit, Mich., has thrown up the sponge as a vaudeville house and has adopted a program entirely of pictures. Hoffman brothers who controlled the house have sold out to A. J. Gillingham of the Gillingham and Smith enterprises. This firm controls the Empire theater in Detroit, the Circle theater in Indianapolis and houses in Grand Rapids.

Caught Stealing Film

Exhibitors of Pinegrove, Pa., were instrumental in bringing about the arrest and conviction of George Knapp, a boy, who was charged with stealing moving picture film from the railroad station at Pottsville.

New Theater in East

The B. W. Visscher Theater company has opened its new $15,000 photoplay house in Phoenix, N. Y.

Exhibitor Off to War

J. H. Norris, owner of a picture theater in Scandia, Kans., has been examined for service in the army hospital service. He expects to put in a year's time in training before getting into active service.

May Get New Theater

Peoria, Ill., may be supplied with another moving picture theater in the near future. William E. Hull of that city has announced the immediate improvement of his property on Madison and Main streets. He has not decided whether he will erect a modern hotel, a moving picture house, or a combination structure embracing both.

Admits Women Free

The management of the Columbia theater of Kansas City, Mo., admitted free the first 500 women who appeared at the playhouse to see "For the Freedom of the World." Needless to say the house was packed that afternoon. At an evening performance of the same picture all the Boy Scouts of the city were invited to attend the Columbia as the management's guests.

Women Faint in Fire Scare

Two women fainted in the Park theater of Omaha, one night recently when a small fire started in the projection room. The promptness of the theater employes in calming the audience prevented anyone being injured, and the two women who fainted were revived immediately afterward.

Coast Firm Active

Turner and Dahnken are reported to be planning the erection of a $150,000 moving picture theater at Ninth street and MacDonald avenue in Richmond. The Pacific Coast firm's project, it is said, calls for a playhouse that will seat 1,200 persons.

Students in Local Movie

Exhibitors of Lafayette, Ind., will have an opportunity to put on a local subject soon. Students of Jefferson High School of that city, have produced a moving picture in which all the participants are locally known. Some of the acting in the piece is said to have been good.

Help Food Campaign

All of the two hundred motion picture theater owners of the state of Utah have agreed to aid the government in its campaign against waste of food products. William H. Swanson, government representative for Utah of the federal food administration, who has charge of the plans for spreading propaganda by means of the moving picture screen, has enlisted every theater manager in its fight against waste.

Fire Sweeps Theater

Fire that accomplished $300,000 worth of damage gutted the Auditorium theater in Dayton, the largest moving picture theater in that city, and the Auditorium Hotel adjoining the playhouse. The blaze started at an early hour in the morning. The theater had recently been remodeled and considerable money had been spent in getting it in shape for the winter season.

Son Smiles from Screen

Seated in the Strand theater in Minneapolis, watching a picture of Uncle Sam's boys on review in London and in training in France, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Bliss, were nearly knocked from their seats when suddenly their son, John Martin Bliss smiled out of the screen at the audience. John wore a corporal's insignia. He was shown among a group of American soldiers on duty in France, and the likeness of him was so excellent that several of the Bliss family's neighbors recognized him.

Preacher Finds Movies Useful

Rev. F. O. Beck, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Chicago, declared in a recent sermon that moving pictures are so much more interesting than dull church services that every minister should introduce them in his church. Rev. Beck shows two reels of film at his Sunday evening services.

Operators Are Locked Out

Following differences with the moving picture operators' union, C. E. Stilwell, president of the Stilwell Theaters company, operating the Casino, Class A. Rex and Unique, in Spokane, Wash., locked out his help in all four houses and announced that they would run on the open-shop plan hereafter. The trouble is the result of the alleged blacklisting of the Stilwell houses by the building trades union.

This is said to have followed Mr. Stilwell's action in having the Casino and Rex painted by nonunion labor last summer. When he learned of the action of the building trades' union Mr. Stilwell asked his union operators to have the ban lifted. This, he says, they promised to do but failed to carry out. Representatives of the operators declare this was being done as promised.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

The remarkably life-like characterization contributed by Elisabeth Risdon in the title role of "Mother," the latest McClure Pictures offering, has evoked praise in every branch of the profession. The young actress who is at present playing the ingenue lead in "Misalliance," a William Faversham stage production, assumed in "Mother," the part of a woman fifty years of age, care-worn and trouble-ridden. In order to secure an exact idea of the habits and manners of the type, Miss Risdon scoured the environs of the Dartmoor section of England for several weeks, which is the locale of the Tucker production. She finally discovered the wife of an English farmer who answered in every particular the character in question.

Preparations are under way for a remarkable shadow dance, which is to be a feature of Marguerite Clark's Christmas play, "The Seven Swans." Practically the entire Famous Players studio in New York City will be taken up by the setting for this scene.

George Loane Tucker, director of the Hall Craine screen production, "The Manx-Man," and many other pictures that have widespread popularity with exhibitors and the public, directed Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man."

Baby Ivy Ward, Metro's three-year-old emotional actress, has been in motion pictures since she was six months old, making her first appearance in a "Better Babies" picture. At the age of nine months she appeared in a feature with Nat Goodwin.

One of the most spectacular scenes, as well as one of the most unusual, in motion pictures this year will be filmed in a few days in California. It will consist in snapping a great conflagaration in some oil fields. The scene will be incorporated with Gladys Brockwell's new production for William Fox, which Bertram Bracken is directing.

Helen Ferguson, demure young Essanay star, admits she has never had a beau. Of course she has hosts of admirers and gets hundreds of mash notes.

Emily Stevens, Metro star, is now working in a picturization of the play "Daybreak" by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. The adaptation for the screen was made by June Mathis and Albert Capellani and the latter is directing this, his first production under the Metro standard.

A hundred live pigeons released from underground traps to heighten the beauty of the Alexandria street scene in Goldwyn's picture version of "Thais" were recovered, thanks to the ingenuity of George Bertholon, assistant director. He supplied half a dozen homing pigeons to lead the uneducated birds to a nearby cote.

Jack Gardner, former musical comedy star now being featured in Essanay comedy dramas, is looking forward to his first opportunity of many years to have a Christmas day away from the footlights.

"It will seem strange to have a day not interrupted by a special Christmas matinee and a night performance," says Jack, "and I sure am going to take full advantage of it. I'm just going to gorge on a big Christmas dinner and go to see a photoplay at night and be thankful to the guy that invented moving pictures."

Nazimova, who has just completed her work in "God's Message," executed an artistic Bacchanal dance in the Apache den scenes in this production. The star was well fitted to present this dance as she is an ardent student of the dance and studied the art while studying the drama during a three-year course in Moscow, Russia.

A scene from Triangle's "The Ship of Doom."

A select party of friends with Grantland Rice of the New York Tribune viewed the first number of Essanay's new scenic series, "The Wonders of Nature, Science and Industry" at a private showing at an uptown projection room.

A new World-Picture Brady-Made having June Elvidge as its star is called "The Tenth Case" and centers upon a divorce trial in which the presiding justice finds the wife guilty and characterizes her defence as too ridiculous for belief. To prove her case the defendant ingeniously stages the identical situation in the judge's own home, making him feel like a very cheap sort of citizen and incidentally clearing her own character.

Edith Storey is having great sport riding a motorcycle in scenes for her coming picture, "The Legion of Death" written by June Mathis. Miss Storey is called upon to be a dispatch bearer of the Russian fighting forces and makes daring dashes at great speed between the first line trenches and the headquarters of the General Staff.

Billy Moran, the international jockey, is a frequent figure seen in Metro pictures. Moran has made three trips around the world riding thoroughbreds in races. He was whipper-in for the big fox hunt staged by Director Brabin for the coming production "Red, White and Blue Blood," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle taught his dog, "Luke," to hold a skein of yarn while the ponderous comedian in Paramount-Arbuckle comedies was being initiated into the mysteries of knitting. Kathleen Clifford was the instructress.

Douglas MacLean, popular juvenile of the Oliver Morosco stock company playing at the Morosco Theater in Los Angeles, was loaned to the company producing Vivian Martin's new Paramount picture, "The Fair Barbarian." Mr. MacLean is a popular western actor and has a good role in this picture.

In the ninety-fifth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "The-Magazine-on-the-Screen," the training of the mounted police of New York City is shown in detail. The work of stopping runaways, and similar dangerous feats, is depicted in this subject.

Olive Thomas, former Follies favorite, has just completed work on her latest Triangle vehicle, "Betty Takes a Hand," which was directed by Jack Dillon, and will begin work almost immediately on her next Triangle picture, "Limousine Life," adapted from the Ida M. Evans' Red Book Magazine story.

Following the release of "His Mother's Boy" in which Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, in Paramount pictures, will be seen during December. "The Hired Man" is announced as the third photoplay in which he will be featured. It is a story of New England life and includes among other features a typical country fair.

Surrounded by enough courtiers, ladies-in-waiting, knights, princes-of-the-blood, picturesque peasantry and other characters dear to the heart of readers of fairy tales to people a town, charming little Marguerite Clark, attired as a Princess with a tiny golden crown upon her head, was presented last week with a delicious, many-storied and befrosted cake, known as "Queen of All Cakes," which was awarded her by the Ladies' World, as a prize for winning a popularity contest recently held in the pages of that publication.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

Screen Needs Cleaning

Would you please publish in the Projection Dept. of Motography how to clean an aluminum screen?—C. W., California.

Here is a question that I will have to leave open for the readers of this department. I have never had any experience in cleaning an aluminum screen and as there are several different kinds and makes I would not attempt to make any suggestions on the subject. If any of the readers of this department can give any information on the above question I would be very glad to hear from them and to publish their suggestion.

Lens Changes Color

I have been a reader of the department for some time and I would like to have a little information as to why a condensing lens after being used a few weeks will turn a purple or greenish color. I notice this with the domestic lens but not so much with the imported lens. Does this color in the lens have any effect on the light? Will you please give me the rule for measuring the focal length of condensers and objective lens?—P. G. P., Alabama.

The discoloration of the condenser is caused by the heat action of the arc upon the metallic substances in the material used in the lens. Do not use a discolored lens. In buying condensers, pay a little more and get a good, clear lens. The discolored lens may be a trifle cheaper but the amount of amperage used and the result on the screen will more than offset what is on the original purchase price of the lens.

To measure a condenser, use the following rule: Take the flat side of the lens and focus an object against a white wall, or a piece of paper pinned on the wall. Use some object at least twenty-five feet away, and be sure to have the lens in position where the focus is sharpest, and then measure from the flat side of the lens to the wall. Then turn the lens around with the convex side next to the wall and focus the object the same as you did before and measure the distance from the flat side of the lens.

It will be found that the measurements differ considerably, and their sum divided by two will be the focal length of the lens. This rule does not apply to objective or stereo lens. They are measured thus:

Focus the projective or stereopticon lens on a white wall or a piece of paper pinned on a wall, using some object at least twenty-five feet away. Hold the lens square with the wall or paper, being careful to get it as sharp as you possibly can. Measure from the wall to the face of the lens nearest the wall, and that measurement will be the back focus of the lens. If, instead of measuring from the back lens to the wall, you measure from a point half way between the front and back combinations of the lens to the wall you will get a measurement and that will be equivalent focus of the lens.

Rectifier Is Puzzling

I have been working as an operator for the last three years in this town and have been working until this week in a theater using a compensarc on the lamp but now I am working at a house where they have a General Electric mercury arc rectifier and as it is something new to me I would like to have you explain to me what really occurs when you change the regulating switch dial. Another question I would like to have you answer is this: What is to be done if the tube on the mercury arc gives out? Can you use the main reactance as an economizer?—C. B., Mich.

When you change the regulating switch on the mercury arc rectifier, you either raise or lower the amperage on the direct current side. Changing this switch acts the same on the mercury arc as changing the points on an adjustable rheostat. The regulating reactance is nothing more than a choke coil with taps taken off at certain points in the winding.

On the front of the panel board of the mercury arc you will find a triple pole, double throw switch in the center of the panel. This switch is for the purpose of immediately changing from direct to alternating current, using the main reactance as an economizer in case anything should happen to the tube, or in case it should be, for any reason, necessary to use alternating current at the arc. The switch is set for direct current when thrown on the top set of knives and by throwing it over, downward, the direct current rectification is stopped and alternating current is supplied at the arc. If the switch is thrown over to alternating current it may be found that the current is too low, in which case the lead wire connecting with the studs on the regulating switch may be moved along the studs until the right current is obtained. Do not use more than sixty amperes. It should be borne in mind that the rectifier is built primarily for changing alternating to direct current and, while its main reactance may be used as an economizer and provision is made for that purpose, that provision is only designed for emergency. The machine should, so far as possible, be used exclusively as a rectifier.

Bearings Become Heated

I have just installed a new generator set in the booth of my theater and the operator complains that the bearings get warm after the machine has run for an hour or so. What is the cause for this and what should I do to remedy it?—H. B. M., Kansas.

Open the drain cock at the bearings and let all of the oil out. Then wash out the bearings with coal oil. Close the drain cock and fill the oil wells with fresh, clean oil, and be sure that the oil rings are running perfectly free. In buying oil, get first quality dynamo oil. Never run the generator when it shows the least sign of heating unnecessarily at the bearings, as this is a sure sign that the oil rings are not working right or else there is dirt in the bearings.

Heat Waves Show on Screen

I have noticed in the last two weeks that when I have a light piece of film on my machine, like a letter or a snow scene, that there appear to be wavy lines running through it. This also appears when I throw the light on the screen without any film in the machine at all, but you can not notice it in the darker films. Can you tell me what is causing this and what can I do to eliminate it?—R. F., Minn.

I think that from what you have said that you can remedy your trouble, or at least find your trouble very easily. You say that the wavy lines have appeared in the last two weeks. If you will examine your heating system in the theater I believe that you will find a radiator or furnace opening in direct line with your picture on the screen and the lines that you see are hot air waves. Cut off the heat on this radiator or furnace opening and you will have no further trouble.

Suggests New Attachment

I am an operator working on two Simplex machines and I have a suggestion to offer to the readers of the projection department who use Simplex machines. I made an attachment out of sheet brass and attached it to my machines. I find that it is very handy in holding open the door on the front of the machine when threading up or when cleaning the intermittent sprockets. This door has a spring on it and to hold it open I used to lay a pair of pliers or tongs on the door, but with this little attachment I can open the door or close it at will. To affix the attachment, remove the set screw that holds the idler pulley shaft on the pedestal and replace this screw with another screw of the same size and thread but with a head on the screw. Use this screw to hold the attachment in place. Use a small washer between the attachment and the screw head. By bending the attachment the proper amount of tension can be applied to hold down the door.—R. Van C., Ind.

Helen Holmes Performs Perilous Stunt

Helen Holmes does a most risky bit of business of "The Lost Express," her new fifteen-chapter Mutual-Signal photonovel, in "Daring Death," Chapter XII, released December 3.

Helen crosses the railroad tracks on a temporary footbridge, built on the principle of the suspension bridge with ropes instead of cables. The action of the chapter provides that as Helen is midway across the plotters are to cut the ropes.

Helen grasps the severed rope, swings sixty feet to the tracks below and rescues a companion from the wheels of an onrushing train. It is the most perilous stunt which Director McGowan laid out for his star in the new chapter play, and the most hair-raising bit of action in the picture.

"The Lost Express" is nearing completion at the Signal studios near Los Angeles. Chapter XV will reveal the mystery of the lost express train which disappeared mysteriously in Chapter I.

Mary Miles Minter will start work on her fifth American Film picture immediately. The new play makes its bow as "Madamoiselle Tiptoe." It was written by Arthur Barthelet. Henry King will supervise the direction.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

William Heaney, manager of the Virginia Theater, 809 West Madison street, kept the spirit of Thanksgiving Day by giving a special morning performance at his theater at which the children from several orphan asylums were his guests. George Kleine contributed the picture for the occasion, the Essanay-Perfection feature, "Pants," in which little Mary McAlister is starred. The youthful star herself did her bit to make the occasion a success by appearing in person and making a little speech to the audience of youngsters.

Announcement was made this week of the marriage of Irving A. Mack, publicity manager of the Universal Film Company in Chicago, and Miss Belle Harris. The ceremony took place at the bride's home, 2307 Cortez street, on Tuesday evening, November 27. Only immediate members of the families of Mr. Mack and Miss Harris attended. Mr. Mack will return to his work in about ten days.

Fred W. Hartman, western representative of the Motion Picture Exposition which is to be held in Grand Central Palace, New York, beginning February 2, 1918, will establish headquarters in Chicago on December 1. He will be located in Room 1416 Masonic Temple, where he will look after the exposition interests of western producers and exhibitors. Mr. Hartman has been in New York for several weeks working with Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who is to be the general manager of the exposition.

I. Van Ronkel has announced that the private showings of Bluebird pictures that have been held on Wednesday mornings at 10 o'clock, would hereafter be held at 10:45 o'clock.

The city of Chicago is accused of violating its own law in regard to the storage of moving picture film. The charge is made by Aldermen Maypole, Kimball and Cullerton, who are members of a council committee entrusted with the handling of ordinances having to do with the industry. According to the aldermen, Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, Chicago's second deputy superintendent of police and moving picture censor, has stored in the neighborhood of 800,000 feet of film cut outs in the city hall. The alleged violation occurs in the office of the police secretary on the tenth floor of the building where film is said to be lying scattered about, some of it exposed. This, the aldermen declare, is a menace to the city hall and to the lives of persons employed in the building.

"Over Here," the two-reel World picture showing the building of the cantonment at Camp Pike, near Little Rock, Arkansas, which was completed in fifty-three days, was given a special presentation by L. A. Rozelle of the Chicago World exchange, before the Western Society of Engineers at their recent housing conference in this city. The film had its first public showing in McVickers Theater, the Jones, Linick & Schaefer vaudeville house.

Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Brothers, has arranged to show all the Bluebird features in the chain of theaters owned by his firm. The first of these offerings is "The Savage."

Owners of Chicago theaters have made vigorous protest to the city council against a proposal to increase the amount of city license they are compelled to pay. A number of exhibitors have appeared before a council committee, and explained that the various increases in expenses incident to the war, has reduced profits to such an extent that any addition to the license fee would be a severe hardship.

Arthur S. Dowd, Chicago manager of the Universal sales department, spent several days last week in Milwaukee.

Maurice Fleckles, general manager of Universal's state right productions, made a flying trip from New York to Chicago and return last week. He said he had several more rides on his New York-Chicago commutation ticket which he wants to use up before the end of the year. Another Chicago visitor last week was E. H. Goldstein, otherwise "Manny," general manager of exchanges of the Universal organization.

Charles O'Connor, projection expert of the American Film Company, tested out twenty-nine of the new American Projectoscope machines last week and sent them on their way. Every machine is accurately tested twice—once from the factory and once before it is allowed to leave the American shop.

Endorse Attempt to Unite Exhibitors

PRODUCERS, DISTRIBUTORS AND THEATER OWNERS SEE GOOD IN PLAN

THE imperative need for a united organization of exhibitors, voiced in the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY, has been seconded by a large number of exhibitors, distributors and producers of the country.

In the current edition of this magazine, the subject is called to the attention of exhibitors in a second editorial. Exhibitors' attention is called to the fact that a membership in either the American Exhibitors' Association or the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is only half a membership, and that if all the energy being expended by both organizations were combined—and it should be because both are seeking the same results in bettering the position of the individual exhibitor—an enormous amount of good could be accomplished.

Producers O. K. Magazine's Action

MOTOGRAPHY'S advocacy of a harmonious union of all exhibitors, as urged in a recent speech in Chicago by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has been indorsed by a large number of producing organizations. An official of one of the largest producing corporations in the country wrote:

"It is our opinion that all branches of the motion picture industry should present a united front, particularly in these critical times. A breach in any branch of the industry will seriously affect all the branches."

No Time for Wasted Energy

The president of another producing company said:

"We thoroughly agree with MOTOGRAPHY that it is a good thing to get the motion picture exhibitors together. They should not work at cross purposes when it is for one common cause. The exhibitors throughout the country should realize that they have to get together and work in harmony to accomplish anything, especially in view of everything which has transpired in the past few weeks."

Producers generally are watching with interest the increasing sentiment in favor of a united exhibitors' organization. Many of the most influential ones have congratulated MOTOGRAPHY on its action in taking the initiative in this movement.

Exchanges Would Welcome Union

Exchange men and a large percentage of the exhibitors would welcome the bringing about of a union between the divided factions of theater owners and managers.

An example of the feeling that exists among the exchange interests is voiced in the following comment by Cresson E. Smith, manager of the Chicago Metro office, in which he says:

"If the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association could be brought together, it would be one of the best things for the motion picture business that ever happened.

"The present chaotic condition of the industry on account of taxes imposed, due to the war, as well as other matters can only be handled by the exhibitors as a whole, working with the N. A. of M. P. I., and with the industry divided as it is at the present time, we cannot hope for much relief."

Marcus Loew Regrets Situation

Marcus Loew, one of the biggest exhibitors in the country, endorsed MOTOGRAPHY'S attitude on the subject of getting the exhibitors' branch of the industry together in these words:

"It goes without saying that all industries, especially the motion picture, should be a united one. There can be so much more good accomplished, not only for the good of the industry, but at this time so much could be done to assist our government in its present crisis. It seems too bad that differences should exist in an industry such as ours at the present time."

There Are Stumbling Blocks

The officials of the differing factions of exhibitors do not look with favor on any proposal that will bring the two organizations together, unless the unifying is done under plans that they would make. Lee A. Ochs, president of the League, has made an appeal for a united exhibitors' body, but he said nothing regarding what he, himself, would be willing to concede in order to bring this desired result about.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the Association, declared the organization he represents has nothing to gain by consolidating with the other organization.

"I am quite certain," he said, "now that our organization has been built and put on a sound financial basis, our members will not deliver it over to any other branch of the industry."

Factions Work Independently

The Association is devoting its energies to seeking a solution of the tax situation in Washington. A large number of exhibitors, according to reports from over the country, will attend the Washington meeting this month, called in Washington by Lee A. Ochs.

Whether they will make a genuine attempt to bring about a reunion of the exhibitor forces of the country is uncertain.

Continue Fight Against Reel Tax

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS ARE UNDAUNTED BY ADVERSE COURT DECISION

THE court decision, adverse to the Cleveland exhibitors who sought an injunction to prevent the collection by exchanges in that city of the fifteen-cent reel tax, did not end the tax controversy in the Ohio city. Last week the Cleveland branch of the Exhibitors' League at a meeting called to discuss the court action, unanimously declared in favor of carrying on the fight against the exchanges.

The fact that Judge Phillips had thrown out of court the exhibitors' plea for an injunction, served to spur the exhibitors on to further action against the exchanges attempting to collect the reel tax.

Reviews Fight Against Tax

A committee appointed to carry on the fight against the fifteen-cent assessment gave out the following statement which sets out the exhibitors' contentions:

"In August, 1914, the war began, and since December of the same year motion picture theater managers have paid a seat tax due to the war cutting off United States revenues, previously derived from foreign trade.

"In April of the present year, while Congress was framing the War Revenue law now in force, Cleveland exhibitors went on record in favor of a high rate of income tax with the lowest possible exemption provision: $1,000 for single men and $2,000 for married; opposed admission taxes in any form and so notified Congress through our Senators and Congressmen. Fred J. Herrington carried copies of our resolutions as national organizer to seven state conventions, and they took similar action.

"League members were shocked to receive telegrams from President Lee A. Ochs a month later, supplemented by telegrams from the attorney of a manufacturing firm, asking exhibitors to wire Congress opposing the footage tax on film and favoring an admission tax on receipts.

Action Results in Muddle

"Meantime Varner, of Carolina, was on the ground at Washington denouncing Ochs and the manufacturers for trying to double cross exhibitors.

"The muddle thus produced was apparently cleared up somewhat by July, and at the Chicago convention we were assured that the matter had been settled and that the motion picture trade was to be let alone, chiefly because the showmen had given such loyal co-operation in the sale of Liberty bonds and other propaganda work.

"October 3 brought another shock, which showed that the manufacturers had failed to save their own business and had dragged 10,000 10-cent theater exhibitors in with them by advocating, jointly with Lee A. Ochs, for the admission tax on tickets. It then became a national law.

"C. C. Pettijohn immediately advised all exhibitors to do business as usual, keep a record comparing November receipts with the receipts of November, 1916, and prepare statements for action on a repeal or a revision of the law if results warranted such action in December.

Price Advance Is Urged

"On the other hand, Lee A. Ochs advised publicly to raise the prices of admission and pass all the taxes on to the patrons. Another muddle followed. Those who could raise did so, chiefly the strictly high-class 20 per centers. They went up a nickel—not all of them, though. Another 10 per cent group raised a nickel and are paying the tax.

"Meantime the great backbone of the industry, the 10,000 70 per centers, found that 11 cents and 6 cents is emptying their theaters, and as the film exchanges started early in October to assess and collect their '15 cents per reel war tax,' they became frantic. Something must be done.

"It was then that Cleveland men decided to act to show Washington the chaotic conditions brought about.

"Just as Lloyd George's brutally frank speech at Paris has brought about inter-allied co-operation, we figured that court action against the manufacturers would do likewise and induce Washington to meditate carefully.

Expected Test to Be Friendly

"We expected that a friendly test of the law would clear the atmosphere, but our friends, the manufacturers, showed no such disposition. They blocked every move in the court proceedings at Cleveland and prevented the opening of our case for evidence completely. At a meeting with our committee after the trial they insisted that the only solution was for the 10,000 70 per centers to raise to 15 cents, admitting it might put half of them out of business as well as half of the manufacturers.

"Can the trade stand this? If so, which half? It is no longer a question of who is to blame. It is, what are we going to do at Washington?

"We can at least prove that chaos now exists in our business and ask for relief. That is why Cleveland sued the manufacturers.

"W. J. Slimm,
(Signed) "J. H. Simpson,
"George Heimbuch,
"Sam Aubley,
"Committee."

Sunday Problem Vexes

While giving consideration to the tax subject the Cleveland exhibitors also are facing a Sunday closing problem. In Mansfield, O., a court decision was handed down which declared that Sunday motion picture shows violated the laws of the state.

There is a move on foot in Cleveland to close all the small stores that keep open every day in the week. The owners of these stores contend that Sunday is their best business day, and that if they are forced to close, they will see to it that every moving picture theater in the city is dark on the first day of the week.

Theaters Contribute Millions

The enormous amount of money flowing into the government's hands through the tax on amusements is indicated by the compilation of revenue department figures up to October 1, 1917.

Since November 1, 1914, there has been collected from the theaters of the nation, including motion picture houses, $3,271,116.85 in special taxes.

This figure does not include the vast sum of money turned over to the government under the new war revenue law which provided for a footage tax on film beginning October 4 and the admission tax which started operation on November 1, 1917. These taxes are expected to net the government $30,000,000, in addition to the taxes already in operation which were not repealed in the new war revenue measure, and which require theater owners to pay a special tax.

Soon after the war began in August, 1914, it became necessary to enact a war revenue law to enable the United States government to make up for loss in customs revenue. The original war revenue law bore date of October 22, 1914, and was scheduled to expire by limitation December 31, 1915.

Old Law Continues in Force

On December 17, 1915, Congress adopted a joint resolution which extended the special war revenue taxes on theaters, film houses and other amusement places until December 31, 1916.

Theater managers were hoping that with the end of the calendar year 1916 this law would be thrown into the discard and their special taxes to the government stopped. In the summer of 1916, however, it became apparent that a new and steeper war revenue bill would have to be passed in an attempt to produce an additional $21,000,000 of revenue.

Chairman Claude Kitchin of the ways and means committee of the national house of representatives introduced a new war revenue bill which proposed even higher taxes on theaters and film houses. The theatrical world protested, and this bill when passed contained modifications which did not materially raise the revenue derived from special taxes on theaters. This second war revenue bill became law September 8, 1916. It was not repealed when the war revenue law of October 3, 1917, was passed and is still in effect.

Collections Exceed $1,000,000

How the law of September 8, 1916, has operated with respect to the theatrical and film worlds is disclosed in the annual report of Colonel W. H. Osborn, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, made public by his successor, Daniel C. Roper. This report does not classify motion picture houses apart from other theaters. From the report it appears that during the fiscal year 1917, that is, between July 1, 1916, and June 30, 1917, the collections of the special theater tax under Section 407 of the War Revenue Law of September 8, 1916, amounted to $1,027,927.63.

This represented an increase of $13,016.35 over the fiscal year 1916, which was based on the original law of October 22, 1914.

Commissioner Osborn's report shows that between July 1 and November 1 of the present year—the first three months of the fiscal year 1916—the collection from the special tax on theaters under the law of September 8, 1916, aggregated $438,280.87.

Tax Receipts Grow Steadily

During the first three months of the fiscal year 1917 —the months of July, August and September, 1916— the collection from the special tax on theaters under the old law of 1914 aggregated $278,309.48, these figures disclosing that during the first three months of the current fiscal year the theaters paid in this special tax $159,971.39 more than during the first three months of the fiscal year 1917.

On the basis of a collection of $438,280.87 during the first three months of the present fiscal year, the theaters of the country would during the whole fiscal year of 1918, which ends June 30 next, pay about $1,752,000 in special taxes, in addition to what they collect for the government from the admissions tax. The special tax must be paid regardless of whether the theatrical business is good or bad. It is a special license tax. The new admissions tax is, of course, based entirely on the number of admissions to theaters and film houses and is collected from the public by the theater for the government.

Pictures Do Not Injure Sight

"A review of the literature to date records no permanent harm to the eyes from moving pictures. The fact that 10,000,000 persons enjoy moving pictures daily with no definite reports of specific harm or injurious effect, and with but few complaints of slight inconvenience, proves that the moving picture can have no injurious effect upon the eyes."

So concludes C. A. Bahn in the Annals of Ophthalmology.

"Moving pictures, under favorable conditions, do not cause as much fatigue as the same period of concentrated reading," he says. "Most persons who complain that moving pictures cause ocular discomfort have some ocular defect. Moving pictures, under favorable conditions, act as a slight test of distance eye endurance. A person with no defect of the sight mechanism should be able to enjoy at least four sittings of one and a half hours each week with no discomfort. Under unfavorable conditions moving pictures cause increased fatigue which, if continued, produces symptoms that are unpleasant and may be harmful. By staring fixedly at one object on the picture for a prolonged time fatigue is greatly increased and unpleasant symptoms are produced. A person should not stare at any one object, but should try to look at different parts of the screen, and should either close the eyes or look about the theater for a few seconds about every five minutes.

"Every person has an individual standard of eye endurance. When your eyes become fatigued in a picture theater, leave. Within bounds either your eyes or the picture are at fault. If the picture, go where they are presented under more favorable conditions; if your eyes, see an oculist that he may study and eliminate the cause."

Honors Theater's Fighting Men

To honor the twenty-two men of New York's Strand Theater staff who are now fighting in France, Harold Edel, managing director, is having a bronze tablet made, which will have engraved on it the names of each of the absent employes. The tablet will be placed on the wall of the lobby, and will be unveiled with a ceremony as soon as completed.

Do You Always Get What You Want?

Many exhibitors have difficulty locating the pictures their patrons request them to book. Patrons do not always remember the name of the producer. Your exchange man may not be able to put you right unless the picture you seek happens to be one of his releases.

Motography can always help you. Our Service Department is at your disposal. Make use of it. Ask us anything.

Newspaper Opposes One-Man Censorship

Declares Situation in Chicago Is Wrong and Urges That Motion Picture Industry Be Given Square Deal

UNDER the heading "Motion Picture Industry is Entitled to a Fair Deal," the Chicago American editorially points out the evil existing in Chicago where Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy police superintendent, is the sole judge of what is fit for the people of Chicago to see on the screen. The editorial in part follows:

"The moving picture industry, in its first inning, before the Steffen Council Committee, made a showing which must have impressed the aldermen.

"That they are convinced that they have been cruelly wronged under Chicago censorship is evident, and they made out a case which would have appealed to the reason of a non-prejudiced jury.

"What William A. Brady, speaking for the moving picture industry of America, and Herbert Friedman, representing the Chicago Film Exchange, said, throws light on a big subject.

"The moving picture industry objects to being placed under a police club, under one man's power, and in the environment of lawbreakers. That Mr. Funkhouser has the wrong viewpoint is indicated, in the opinion of the picture men, by the speech attributed to him, in which he delivered what amounts to a blanket indictment of the morals of the moving picture industry.

"No voice is raised in behalf of morally objectionable pictures. No denunciation of obscenity could have been more severe than Mr. Brady's. He pledged the co-operation of the whole industry to jail any man showing an offensive picture. He declared that if censorship were removed entirely in Chicago for a year, as an experiment, the film industry would pledge its word that no obscene picture would be shown, or, if one were shown, that the moving picture men would take all responsibility for arresting and prosecuting that one black sheep.

"The point that seemingly made the most impression was that the picture people, who send millions of dollars' worth of films a week into Chicago, come under the power of one man—that beyond him there is no practical appeal.

"We hold no brief for the picture industry, but this wonderful business, the fifth in the country, is entitled to a square deal, and it would be entitled to the same if it were the smallest business in the nation.

"We look to the Steffen committee, which evidently has started with fair, open mind, for a sane, sensible solution."

Vitagraph Wins Final Decision

The Vitagraph Company has scored its third successive victory in its suit against Anita Stewart and Louis B. Mayer of Boston.

On Friday, November 30, the Appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York with Justices J. Proctor Clarke, Francis M. Scott, Lloyd Smith and Alfred Page sitting, handed down a unanimous order affirming the injunction against Miss Stewart and Mr. Mayer which was granted by Justice Edward C. Whittaker in part one of the Supreme Court of New York on October 19, 1917. The injunction restrains Miss Stewart from acting for any corporation or individual other than the Vitagraph Company.

Rothapfel Books Triangle Feature

Manager of New York's Rialto Is Impressed With "Until They Get Me"—Runs for Solid Week

THE Rialto Theater in New York ran the Triangle feature, "Until They Get Me," for the week beginning December 2. Following a private showing of the film in the Rialto projection room, at which time Manager S. L. Rothapfel termed it "A splendid picture," it was decided to book the feature.

Mr. Rothapfel was so well impressed with the picture he sent the following telegram to the Triangle west coast studios:

"It gives me much pleasure to inform you that we have selected for the week of December second "Until They Get Me." My staff also reports that they have looked at five other Triangle pictures and find them very satisfactory. I can assure you you will have our every support. Keep up the good work."

Triangle pictures have not appeared on the Rialto program for some time. The decision to run this picture is considered an important recognition of the new Triangle standard.

Pauline Starke, who plays the part of Margy in "Until They Get Me," is only sixteen years old. She has risen to stardom through the excellence of her own efforts. After getting work as an "extra" in the Triangle studios, she executed each role offered her with an unassuming determination to reach the top.

She lives with her mother in Hollywood. A great lover of animals and children, Miss Starke's nature plainly shows in her picture work. She has previously appeared in the following Triangle features: "The Rummy," "Puppets," "The Wharf Rat," "Cheerful Givers" and "Madame Bo Peep."

"Until They Get Me," was written by Kenneth B. Clarke and was produced by Frank Borsage.

De Mille Returns to Coast

After a month's vacation, during which time he visited New York City, Cecil B. De Mille, director of Artcraft pictures, has returned to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, California. Immediately after his arrivel at the studio, Mr. De Mille took up the work of finishing the new Geraldine Farrar production, "The Devil Stone," which will be released by Artcraft next month.

Zukor Visits Coast Studios

During his sojourn in California, Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation took occassion to visit the Thomas H. Ince studios where many important productions for Paramount and Artcraft are made and noted with interest the progress of the productions under way. S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the New York Rialto Theater, was present on this occasion and together these two representative figures in the film industry saw the progress of Dorothy Dalton's newest Paramount picture; Enid Bennett's first photoplay for the same company, and likewise enjoyed a view of Charles Ray working before the camera.

ACTUAL CRITICISM OF FILMS BY EXHIBITORS, FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

(Editorial Note:—"The trade paper than can give the most accurate information about current features is the paper every exhibitor wants," said a prominent manager recently. In addition to its regular reviews Motography publishes in each week's issue the actual, unvarnished opinions of exhibitors on films they have run in their houses, with the idea of aiding other exhibitors in making up their programs. Managers and bookers like to get various opinions concerning a feature before they run it. Upon request Motography will gladly furnish the opinion of men who have run the feature in question. Give both titles and makers of pictures about which you inquire. Simply address, Motography, Chicago.)

THE Rise of Jennie Cushing, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—"A good production, a clever star and a good story. Business fair. Star not known here."—A. E. Ableson, Zelda Theater, Duluth, Minn.

The Rise of Jennie Cushing, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—"A very pleasing picture which satisfied the audience very well. It drew pretty good business. I believe Miss Ferguson will become a very good drawing card in the pictures."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Silent Man, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"One of Hart's best, full of action and spectacular events. Satisfied everyone very well."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Man from Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Good business on a return engagement. Story not as good as others this popular star has appeared in."—A. E. Ableson, Zelda Theater, Duluth, Minn.

The Man from Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"We always pack 'em in with Fairbanks. I don't think this is his best but it is first class."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Barbary Sheep, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—"Best picture I ever saw, from the standpoint of star, lighting and settings. Business good."—J. C. Taylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Kentucky.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"A great picture. Star excellent. Business fine."—J. C. Taylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Kentucky.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"A real production, not just a picture. It is a beautiful thing, complete in every detail. I would advise any manager, whether catering to 'low-brow' or 'high-brow' patronage to book it. It is one of the best Artcraft has turned out in many months."—H. C. Miller, Boston Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"A spectacle pure and simple. It needs proper music, capable of swaying the emotions of the audience. The star is splendid and the supporting cast notable. Gorgeous scenery, color effects and tinting."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle-class neighborhood.

The Clean-up, with Franklyn Farnum (Bluebird)—"Just an ordinary program picture."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Two Little Imps, with Jane and Katherine Lee (Fox)—"Great, positively a clean-up. These kids are wonders."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

All for a Husband, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"This picture is like a table d'hote dinner, a whole lot of something with nothing in particular at the finish. If you book this as a feature, have a strong one or two-reeler to back it up or you will have a disappointed audience."—H. C. Miller, Boston Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—"Milton Sills does some good work in this picture, yet his name is not mentioned on the advertising matter. A big picture, well produced, well acted, with a good cast. People went out praising it all day. Advertise it as much as you can, as the title is a little against it. We had an eight-reel copy."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle-class neighborhood.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Very good production which played to excellent business."—L. A. DeHoff, New Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Excellent comedy, but played to very small audience. Poor investment."—L. A. DeHoff, New Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Fighting Odds, with Maxine Elliott (Goldwyn)—"Very poor picture, no business."—L. A. DeHoff, New Theater, Baltimore, Md.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"This is the best that Goldwyn has released up to this time. Well liked. Played to good box office business."—L. A. DeHoff, New Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"A very pleasing comedy drama. The audience was tickled to death with it. Very good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high-class neighborhood.

The Lady of the Photograph, with Shirley Mason (Edison-K. E. S. E.)—"A good picture and a good house.

What more can you ask?"—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theater, Harvard, Ill.

Open Places, with Jack Gardner (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"We played this picture to capacity business with Douglas Fairbanks for opposition."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theater, Harvard, Ill.

Outwitted, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—"One of the best pictures Metro has ever made. Good business."—A. J. Fyhn, Utah Theater, Ogden, Utah.

The Voice of Conscience, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"A good picture. The photography could be improved a great deal."—A. J. Fyhn, Utah Theater, Ogden, Utah.

The Adopted Son, with Francis X. Bushman (Metro)—"A very good picture. Business good."—A. J. Fyhn, Utah Theater, Ogden, Utah.

Threads of Fate, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"Picture good. Photography mediocre. Business good."—A. J. Fyhn, Utah Theater, Ogden, Utah.

Silence Sellers, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—"A very pleasing offering. Star at her best."—A. J. Fyhn, Utah Theater, Ogden, Utah.

The Square Deceiver, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"As usual, one of those classy comedy dramas in which two attractive young people appear. It is a picture which will go over big in a neighborhood house. It has to do with a classy chauffeur and a pretty girl and will furnish romance for boys and girls in their 'teens. All in all, it is pretty much of the love story order, but will interest elders as well. I consider it a good picture."—H. C. Miller, Boston Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Outsider, with Emmy Wehlen (Metro)—"A story of high society life. Story is a bit tangled and a little too long. It could have been made in five reels instead of six. Star O. K."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle-class neighborhood.

Heroic France (Mutual)—"This went big. We played it as a benefit for the boys at Camp Dodge."—H. N. Turner, Family Theater, Pine City, Minn.

Shackles of Truth, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"My patrons say this is the best picture ever shown in Moroni, and we having been using Bluebird and Artcraft releases."—William Call, Kozy Theater, Moroni, Utah.

The Masked Heart, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"A good picture. Russell is registering fast."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Charity Castle, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"These pictures get better, if this is possible, all the time. This one pleased everyone and brought big business."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theater, Harvard, Ill.

The Zeppelin's Last Raid (Ince special)—"One of Ince's spectacular productions, which I doubt very much if Ince directed. The picture deals with the German air raids and the snuffing out of the lives of defenseless women, children and old men. It brings home the barbarism of the Kaiser's wrath. If you are an American the picture will make you want to enlist. I believe it will go over in any locality not pro-German. I would advise American exhibitors to book it, even though in the production there are some things left undone."—H. C. Miller, Rose Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Pictures Promote Patriotism

The following editorial from the Chicago Tribune tells something of the part moving pictures are playing in the promotion of patriotism:

"The moving picture theaters are becoming community centers of patriotism. The producers are turning out films reflecting the American war spirit and the majority of the theater owners have devoted a part of each program to pictures and slides calculated to arouse support of the government. In addition the theaters have thrown open their doors to the four-minute men, who are exercising a very great influence, especially in combating German propaganda. In communities largely made up of persons of foreign birth or extraction the work of the movie theaters and the four-minute men has been of special value."

Plan Western Feature Series

Having identified Harry Carey with features that especially involved western atmosphere, wild riding and straight shooting, the Universal is undertaking a campaign of promotion for this particular style of photoplaying in which Mr. Carey will be coupled with the production of a series of special features. Jack Ford, who has directed the dashing horseman for many months, will produce these attractions from stories he will invent as collaborator with George Hively.

Getting the Exhibitor Organizations Together

WHEN we have two electrical dynamos we have our choice of two different ways of operating them together in the same field. We can connect them "in series," which doubles their voltage, or we can connect them "in parallel," which increases the quantity without adding a particle to the voltage of either one standing alone. Taking "voltage" as meaning power to overcome resistance (which is exactly what it does mean) it is evident that two units "in parallel" are no better than one unit.

The two exhibitors' associations now in the field are operating in parallel. They have increased the total quantity of organized theater men; but the aggregate pressure exerted against obstacles by the combined membership is divided by two. Either association alone can accomplish as much as both together. Each exhibitor's membership in either one of the organizations counts for only half a membership.

The only way to gain the full power of organized effort in the motion picture field is to connect the separate organizations "in series" as a single, high pressure unit.

Out of every pound of energy exerted, when there are two trade organizations, several ounces are wasted in harmful effort to win something from the competing association. Competition is a fine thing, of course, in business conducted for profit. But a trade association's only profit lies in the benefits enjoyed by its members; and those benefits grow less, the more pressure is exerted against the association.

The exhibitors of this country—of the world, for that matter—are all in the same business. They are dependent upon the same sources of supply, they face the same enemies, they are influenced by the same conditions. The requirements of their daily occupation demand, for success, all the power they, as a body, can muster. Their most malicious foe could wish them no greater added burden than that they be forced to fight among themselves.

And that is what a divided organization in a busy trade field amounts to—an internecine war that costs money, saps strength, and opens the gates to the enemies without.

Most association members, whatever side enjoys their present affiliation, will agree with us in this. All of them would prefer membership in a single all powerful organization to membership in a divided, half-powerful one.

But unfortunately the solution of difficulties does not lie in argument, however logical and agreeable it may sound. Every association member, of either party, would welcome a merger of the two bodies, provided only that the OTHER association would forego its mistaken opinions and join with the right one!

There is a tinge of intolerance in most differences of opinion; and the two conditions working together are responsible for everything from family squabbles up to the present great war. It is difference of opinion that has built a wall between two great groups of picture theater men. Difference and intolerance; for each association representative is doubtless ready to declare that the other association is "impossible."

What do they mean by "impossible"? Not the actual members of the other association, surely; for those individuals are simply exhibitors the same as themselves, doing the best they can. And certainly not the constitution and by-laws, which are of the conventional sort, and do not differ greatly in their provisions. By elimination we come to the unavoidable conclusion that it must be the officers and directors and their doings which are "impossible" in the view of the opposing association.

Now the officers and directors of both present associations are, we hope, our friends. We can only trust that our attempt to dissect the situation will not lead to the conclusion that we are criticising any official of either organization.

As a matter of fact, the only criticism directed at association officers has come from members of the opposing association. It is expecting a great deal of a man to ask him to resign because a competing organization does not like him. It suggests a policy of "turning the other cheek" that is not ordinarily practiced in business.

Nevertheless—for the good of motion picture theater organizations—that is exactly what we expect to see done. We have so high an opinion of all exhibitor association officials that we believe they would gladly sacrifice their own ambitions, if necessary, for the general good of the industry.

But no sacrifice is really necessary. The official conduct of a trade association is a task for altruists; it has no rewards beyond the satisfaction of good accomplished.

Therefore the officers and directors of both the League and the A. E. A. will undoubtedly be glad to retire to their private occupations (the running of picture theaters) and leave the task of officering and directing the fusion association to a new set of incumbents—elected by the vote of all the organized exhibitors.

The Producers' Melange

WHILE we discuss ways and means of getting all the exhibitors together, a prominent New York producer comes forward with the calm proposal to merge the facilities of all the producers into one grand facility. If all the studios were one studio, what a great studio that would be!

The producer's scheme is economically right, of course. A combination of producing machinery would eliminate a lot of waste and turn out good pictures with the least possible resistance. The soulful sentimentalists of the picture art will please hold up their hands in horror as we mention Chicago's union stock yards for an example. The elimination, or regulation, of manufacturing competition is always a good thing so long as the ultimate consumer gets the benefit of the saving.

Unfortunately, in a long history of industrial trust building the consumer has been consistently the loser and not the gainer. Instead of increasing the quality of the product at a lower cost price, which the economies of combination make practicable, the temptation—and practice—of combination has been to profiteer upon the opportunities of monopoly.

The theory of combination is in bad odor. It does not matter that this or some other proposed consolidation might be sans peur et sans reproche; the beans have been spilled by previous "trusts."

A lily-white combine might live down the suspicions of its class by virtue and righteousness, if it were let alone. But it would not be let alone. The temptation for those outside its circle to traffic on its vulnerability is too great.

Just as soon as a producers' merger, or anything that smacked of one, was well under way, imagine the flock of promoters who would seize upon the word "Independent" to blazon forth in "caps"—with that other sinister line under it, "Down With the Trust!"

That is exactly what would happen, and a substantial proportion of trade ad-readers would believe the "anti-trust" shouters. They always do. Don't think for a minute that the real honesty and sincerity of the combination would protect it. We will wager there are men watching the proposition right now and hoping it will go over, so they can start their "Independent" campaign.

An industrial combination for economy, that will enjoy the love and respect of all the trade, is one of those ignes fatui still pursued by business idealists. They will never get it. The only time a trade combination works out successfully is when its promoters are at their strongest, prepared to crush violent opposition and override all objectors.

Largest Music Publisher Quits Society

THOUSANDS OF DESIRABLE COMPOSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE FOR USE

Remick Music Is Non-Taxable

Jerome K. Remick and Company, the foremost publisher of popular music in America, has withdrawn from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

This action released to moving picture exhibitors of the country thousands of desirable selections for use in theaters, without their submitting to the music tax demanded by the society.

News of Remick's withdrawal from the composers and authors' organization will be received with exceeding joy by the moving picture industry. It is believed that this move forecasts the withdrawal of other influential members of the society, and that its efforts to levy a tax on exhibitors using the compositions on which its members owned copyrights have failed utterly.

MOTOGRAPHY, through the courtesy of Miss Katherine C. Melcher, who is compiling music lists free from tax for the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is able to present a partial list of Remick selections, along with a new list of other publishers whose compositions are not taxed.

Secures "The House of Glass" Rights

Clara Kimball Young Obtains Screen Privilege to Stage Success from Pen of Max Marchin

IN the face of tremendous competition among the producing companies, Clara Kimball Young has secured the screen rights to "The House of Glass," the great stage success of a few seasons ago. Owing to the number of prospective purchasers, Miss Young was forced to pay a record figure for the play, but her satisfaction in securing the prize overshadowed its price.

"The House of Glass" is a powerful melodrama from the pen of Max Marcin, and with Mary Ryan in the leading role enjoyed a record run at the Cohan and Harris theater in New York two years ago.

It is the story of a reformed girl crook and her desperate efforts to regain her lost status in society. The plot abounds in tense scenes and thrilling moments and the role of the little ex-thief affords a rare opportunity for emotional acting.

The end of last week witnessed the last hit of filming on "The Marionettes," and work on the new play will follow immediately. Scenario writers are already busy on the script and nothing is being left undone to facilitate production. It is Miss Young's determination to make "The House of Glass" the banner play of the year.

"The Marionettes" which is now being completed will be one of the holiday releases and will follow "Shirley Kaye," Miss Young's latest picture. Distribution will be through the Select Pictures Corporation.

Sends Out Plan Book Month Ahead

Vitagraph Supplies Exhibitors with Press Matter and Advertising Suggestions for Big New Serial

GREATER Vitagraph, in line with its policy of doing things in a finished manner, has started mailing, one month in advance of release date, a complete plan book for the use of exhibitors in putting over "Vengeance—and the Woman," the new serial which is to be released late in December. The book covers every angle of the fifteen-episode picture, from advance press material and advertising cuts to banners and lobby displays for the entire production, episode by episode.

Prints were shipped to all Vitagraph exchanges for pre-release showings to exhibitors, hundreds of whom already have booked in advance or made reservations for "Vengeance—and the Woman," placing their orders on the results they have achieved with "The Fighting Trail," the other big Vitagraph serial.

"The Fighting Trail," it is declared, is shattering many records in the serial history of the industry. It has shown in more theaters in a given period of time than any of its predecessors, and it has the distinction of being the first serial many theaters have run.

"Vengeance—and the Woman," is a melodrama of the great outdoors, the story containing some of the greatest thrills ever devised for the stage or screen. William Duncan and Carol Halloway, prime exponents of western rapid-fire drama and stars of "The Fighting Trail" and Wolfville features—"Dead Shot Baker" and "The Tenderfoot"—are featured in it. Mr. Duncan also is directing it. In the cast are included George Holt, S. E. Jennings, and the Vitagraph cowboys.

Albert B. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady are co-authors of "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Brown Pleased with Outlook

Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta Plays, Inc., returned to New York last week from the Paralta Studios in Hollywood, Cal., where he had been spending several weeks devoting his time to the activities of the studio.

"It is gratifying," said Mr. Brown, "to see the progress we have made since my last visit to the coast. Every stage in the studios is working every moment of the time and the results we are getting are really remarkable."

"The additional studios, which are now being built on the large tract of land we recently purchased adjoining the present location are rapidly nearing completion, and when these are finished we will have a plant that is second to none in the world. The carpenter shops, wardrobe and property departments, the electrical and scenic studios are about finished, and work on the stages has progressed to such a point that we will probably be using them within a week or so."

Star Shells Illuminate Trench Scene

Night photography in motion pictures is one of the biggest problems that directors have to face. Until a year or two ago it was supposed to be impossible to make a good picture at night, and when the idea was broached of reproducing the battle front in France and showing a night attack the general comment was "impossible."

The picture in question was "For the Freedom of the World," a tremendous patriotic spectacle produced by Ira M. Lowry, and now being distributed through Goldwyn channels.

As the full co-operation of the Canadian government had been granted for the filming of this thrilling story of the famous American Legion of Canada, there were no difficulties regarding the thousands of men in uniform who were to appear. The only thing that worried anybody was photographing an attack at night.

The Canadian Ordnance Department granted permission to use the necessary number of star bombs, trench rockets and fixed lights. These various devices give a light more brilliant than anything else in the world.

The result is an exact reproduction of war front conditions, no trouble resulting in photographing even the most remote sections of the trench system.

Triangle Offers Business Drama

"Fanatics" Heralds Return of Olga Grey, Alluring Screen Star—"The Learnin' of Jim Benton" Follows

THE Triangle programme for the week of December 9 offers features certain to attract attention. "Fanatics," with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role, supported by Olga Grey and Donald Fullen is scheduled as the first release.

"The Learnin' of Jim Benton," with Roy Stewart as the star and Fritzi Ridgeway supporting, will follow.

Miss Grey is an unusual type, possessing all the appealing Slavic traits of her Hungarian blood. Her work with Douglas Fairbanks in "Double Trouble," "Jim Bludso," and with Henry Walthall in "The Pillars of Society," recommends her for the exacting role in "Fanatics." "Fanatics" was written by John Lynch. The scenario is by Jos. A. Roach and the play was produced by Raymond Wells.

The results of a country school teacher's efforts to convert a ranch owner and two gun-man, are shown in "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Roy Stewart, whose work in Triangle productions has attracted considerable attention of late, plays the part of Jim Benton. Fritzi Ridgeway is the school teacher.

will also take up with the heads of the express companies the question of the quickest and best routes for the handling of films. They will insist that C. O. D. collections are promptly and properly attended to, and they will undertake to see that both exhibitors and exchanges obtain a quick adjustment of their claims against the express companies.

Use Old Fort Site

The massive monastery setting used in many scenes for "Revelation," Nazimova's first Metro picture, directed by George D. Baker, was built on the ruins of an historic fort outside the city limits of New Orleans.

Reissues Hart and Fairbanks Plays

Triangle Puts Early Releases of Big Stars' Pictures on Market in Response to Demand

THROUGHOUT the country the demand for the re-issues of Hart and Fairbanks' Triangle pictures continues. Photoplay patrons are eager to see the re-issues, in spite of the fact they all enjoyed long runs when first released. Furthermore, this demand shows that time need not necessarily relegate a good film to the shelf.

The Triangle Distributing Corporation is receiving telegrams and letters from various exchanges, all referring to the enthusiastic reception accorded the many Hart and Fairbanks' pictures produced under the Triangle banner. As a measure of the drawing power of these re-issues, it is cited that the latest pictures released by different companies, with Hart and Fairbanks in the title roles, are being boomed by the Triangle re-issues. Theater-goers ask for all the Hart and Fairbanks' pictures that can be secured.

Not wanting to detract from the present work of these stars, Triangle nevertheless feels the work they did as members of the organization cannot be improved upon. Some advances have no doubt been made, but there has been no advances in genuineness of inspiration, or thoroughness of production. When Fairbanks first came to Triangle, his acting was not well known. He made his reputation and gained fame while acting in Triangle comedies.

A statement was recently made in which it was asserted that the latest Hart pictures are experiencing a boom directly traceable to the Triangle re-issues now on the market. Such a statement in itself seems to be proof that the earlier productions have enjoyed a following all their own and as re-issues, increase the popularity of newer pictures now being shown. This fact has significance for film men who allow many of their best works to gather dust in storage after the original campaign has waned.

Exchange Managers Get Together

The Northwest Film Association was permanently formed last week in Seattle, Wash. The new organization is getting down to business in earnest.

The transportation and traffic committee is bringing pressure to bear upon the express companies to induce them to make a later daily delivery of films and also to give more prompt service to the exchanges during the rush of the Christmas season, when films are often delayed. The members of this committee

Griffith Impressed with Speed

Managing Director S. C. Burr, of the Triangle-Keystone studios, tendered an informal party one night last week to Roy Stewart and his director, Cliff Smith, of the Triangle-Hartville studios. The occasion was a special run of the comedy, "Blood and Thunder," recently completed by Director Reggie Morris.

Among the notables present at the preview were, D. W. Griffith, who recently returned from Europe, and Robert Wagner, staff writer on the Saturday Evening Post. Others who attended were Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Burr, Mr. and Mrs. Reggie Morris, as well as Ray Griffith, Franklyn Bond and Rose Carter, the principals of the comedy.

Ray Griffith returned from the American Lake training camp just in time for the showing. Everyone present complimented Director Morris for the high quality of the picture. D. W. Griffith said it was the fastest comedy he has ever seen. Reggie Morris began his picture career under the tutelage of Mr. Griffith, when the master producer was making Majestic and Reliance releases.

The Morris comedy, a great part of which was made at the Hartville studios, is a burlesque on the Roy Stewart type of drama and will be released early in January.

"Cleopatra," the William Fox Standard Picture which has been running at the Lyric Theater, New York City, since fall, will make way there soon for William Farnum in "Les Miserables."

Points Way to Save Ten Million Dollars

SAMUEL GOLDFISH ADVOCATES WORKING ORGANIZATION OF PRODUCERS

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, started something when he submitted to the public through an interview published in the New York Times, an analysis of the conditions attending the manufacturing and marketing of films. He showed the way to save $10,000,000 to the industry within a year.

The interview—which is well worth reading—brought a quick response from several of the leading figures in the industry. MOTOGRAPHY presents the interview as it appeared in the Times.

Disaster Is Threatened

"The motion-picture industry is in a dangerous condition," Mr. Goldfish declares. "Disaster is very close indeed. The war has not hit attendance at motion-picture houses as hard as it has at the Broadway theaters, but that is only because the scale of prices is so much lower, and the great democratic audiences of the screen are drawn largely from those who are getting more employment and more profitable employment through the war. The success and the health of the motion picture is based on the modest price of admission at which good films can be seen. The dangerous, even disastrous conditions in the industry of which I have spoken are due to the fact that all manner of competitive extravagance is threatening to destroy that one safeguard—and, with it, the industry itself.

"I am not a calamity howler by temperament. And I'm not disgruntled; for Goldwyn is getting its share, and more than its share, through the most careful attention to organization. But in the plain face of the criminal waste of the producer's money, the exhibitor's money, and—in the last analysis—the public's money, somebody should speak out plainly.

Producing Organizations Wrong

"If you ask me what is wrong with this topheavy industry of ours, I should say—organization. Fundamentally all our producing organizations are wrong. Fundamentally all our distributing organizations are wrong.

"Take distribution. There are about twenty-five different distributing organizations in America, all of them maintaining some two dozen branch offices throughout the country. These twenty-five exchanges serving the State of Maine, to take a single flagrant example, have only twenty-eight cities and towns—small ones at that—in which to sell films. Think of the absurdity of twenty-five salesmen trying to sell the same product—motion-picture entertainment—to only twenty-eight customers! It is worse than absurb. It is ruinous. The cost to a producer of maintaining his score of exchanges, with managers, salesmen, clerks, stenographers, film inspectors and traveling men, is easily $10,000 a week. And no exchange is working at anything approaching half its capacity.

"Two big distributing organizations could handle all the films in America—and save the industry $200,000 a week. That $10,000,000 a year would mean something to producers, to exhibitors, and to the public. To get another angle on it, suppose every magazine in America maintained its own exclusive distributing channels. Would The Cosmopolitan still sell for 20 cents or Harper's Magazine for 35 cents?

"We are facing just the same problem in production—lack of organization and topheavy financing. Everybody in the industry is being overpaid except the pocketbooks that furnish the capital. All in a mad, unscientific scramble for a very few illusory big profits which have been made here and there.

Production Cost Enormous

"The cost of production has gone up at a terrific rate, a rate that the public has no cenception of. When we made the first Geraldine Farrar picture, 'Carmen,' during my connection with the Lasky Company, it cost only $35,000. Today the same production could not be duplicated for less than $150,000.

"Rentals, the prices charged exhibitors for the films, have advanced accordingly. To pay these increased rentals the exhibitors have had to increase prices—to strike at the prop of popularity on which the public's love for this new entertainment fundamentally rests. The producer, in turn, has had to put more and more money into productions in order to give the exhibitor the quality pictures which will induce the public to pay higher admission prices. Obviously, the producer is paying too much, the exhibitor is paying too much, and the public—through all this extravagance—is paying too much. It is a vicious circle that only the producer can break.

Big Salaries Do Harm

"It isn't easy—trying to put matters right. See what happens under this condition of abnormal competition. A man who has picked up enough capital in Wall Street to make a single picture can jump in, offer some big star a fabulous salary—about all the money he has—and then, with the contract safe in his pocket, draw forth enough further capital to start making pictures. Meanwhile his big salary to the star has done its great harm and sent other salaries skyrocketing.

"The exhibitors themselves are now coming into this game. Some of the theater owners have organized a circuit which has gone into a new form of production and distribution, and is now bidding against the producers for stars. Up go salaries again. And up go rentals, too.

"It has got to the state where, if a star wakes up and finds it's a nice day, she makes up her mind she wants a million dollars instead of eight hundred thousand.

Few Stars Aid Box-office

"The joke of it is that there aren't twelve stars in pictures that really draw money to the box office. For the balance, the industry is simply wasting money in extravagant competition for a doubtful product—personal fame. For no matter how big a star may be, unless there is a big story, too, business will begin to wane after the first night. Broadway has found that the star is very nearly played out as a lone drawing card. Some of its biggest stage figures have had ignominious failures this season because their plays were no better than the so-called 'vehicles' which had done service for them in the past. The screen is as 'star-crazy' as the stage was five and ten years ago, but evolution is at work in the studios quite as much as on Broadway.

Produce Too Many Pictures

"Another tremendous evil of the industry's disorganization is the overproduction of pictures. We are making too many for either profit or art. More than twenty long feature films are being turned out every week. We could get along with ten. We could give them to the exhibitors for less, and they would earn more money for us. The public would like them better and talk about them more. Word of mouth advertising would take the place of exploiting star names. It is simply impossible to find good stories at the rate they are demanded by our present system.

"Spending money for famous plays to make into films is no cure-all. Goldwyn encountered a very interesting difficulty with Margaret Mayo's 'Baby Mine.' A year or so ago film versions of plays were supposed to kill theatrical versions. The all-star 'Trilby' had to quit because it found the film 'Trilby' taking all its business and utilizing the advertising it had created. Right now, within my own knowledge, the condition has been reversed. When 'Baby Mine' was announced in a large up-State city, a stock company promptly put the play into rehearsal and got the benefit of all our publicity.

Producer Must Organize

"What's to be done about all this? Well, first of all, box-office prices must

"What the Picture Did" Aids This Exhibitor

The following letter tells its story:

Kozy Theater
Eureka, Illinois

Editor, MOTOGRAPHY:

I read with great interest your section of MOTOGRAPHY, "What the Picture Did for Me," and have found it to be of great help both in my bookings and in letting me know how strong to push a coming feature. It is hard to tell sometimes from the press sheet furnished by the distributor just how good a production is, but if I know what it has done for others and how their audiences received it, I can judge my advertising accordingly.

(Signed) BERT NORTON.

be kept within reason—or this great, popular, democratic industry will be killed. The strength of the motion picture lies not in its novelty—which would have been exhausted long ago—but in its ability to satisfy a great, broad desire for entertainment at a price within the reach of all the people. The two-dollar spectacle is done for. As a matter of fact, there was only one that ever made money. And for every dollar made by 'The Birth of a Nation' twice as much has been lost by producers who tried to follow that lead.

"The big factor in keeping down moving-picture prices, I feel, is the producer. He must organize. The great steel industry was in just such a chaotic condition before the coming of the United States Steel Corporation. If the producing factors in moving pictures do not shortly come to their senses, I predict failure—spectacular failure—for a great many of the leading plungers of filmdom today."

Mastbaum Makes Reply

Following the publication of Mr. Goldfish's interview Stanley V. Mastbaum, the Philadelphia exhibitor and distributor, sent the following telegram to every producer of features:

"Five hundred thousand dollars is wasted weekly by overproduction, over-advertising, too many exchanges—which necessarily means the exhibitor must pay. How long can he continue to pay? What will happen when he cannot continue to pay? Do you know that the producers are conducting their business in open warfare on each other? The exhibitor must pay for all tremendous salaries paid by the manufacturers to every branch of the business. What is the solution? Who will solve it? The crisis will soon be at hand. There is but little time to save the motion picture industry from several severe setbacks. Should these be temporarily avoided others will come, and will continue, until the motion picture industry is standardized on sound basis. In the meantime the exhibitor must pay.

Pleads for Business Methods

"The manufacturers cannot help the exhibitor because the manufacturers have made no effort to help themselves. The trouble is at the manufacturers' end, not the exhibitors. There are three factors that make for success in any line—observation, deduction, concentration. Why not apply them to this business? Features released per month by various organizations based on an eight weeks period for two months—October, 1917, and November, 1917. Artcraft, 2; Bluebird, 4; Butterfly, 4; Fox, 6; Goldwyn, 2; Metro, 4; Mutual, 8; Paramount, 8; Pathe, 4; Perfection, 4; Select, 4; Triangle, 8; Vitagraph, 4; World, 4; miscellaneous, State rights, etc., 14; total, 80.

"This makes a total of eighty pictures purchased during each four week period at a negative cost running all the way from $12,000 to $160,000 per feature. It is true that there are very few made as cheap as $12,000, and very few made as high in cost as $160,000. A fair average negative cost, however, would be about $40,000; so that, taking this four week period and dividing it into eighty, we find that we are manufacturing on the American market at the present time twenty feature negatives at an average cost of $40,000 each, amounting to $800,000 per week negative cost.

"In addition to this negative cost there is a positive cost of prints to be added. Anywhere from twenty to forty-five prints are used on each production. A fair average would be thirty positive prints. Positive prints of a five-reel subject cost at the present time $225 each; therefore the positive prints that are being used would cost $6,750 and twenty times $6,750 would amount to $135,000 for positive prints of features only.

Overhead Is Enormous

"The overhead for the handling of these features is immense. In each territory there are at least twelve offices, meaning salaries for twelve managers, twenty-four solicitors, twelve office rents and twelve separate and distinct inspecting forces, shippers, night men, etc., and all of this in at least twenty-five points in the United States and Canada.

"The American market cannot possibly absorb these expenses. The burden is placed on the American public and the exhibitors. Not over nine features could be legitimately absorbed and if the negative cost were reduced and carried by nine features there would be a remarkable saving for the exhibitor and the manufacturer. If the business organizations for distribution now handled by not less than twelve distributors were concentrated in not more than two, or, better yet, in one center, an immense overhead could be saved for the exchanges and thus save money for the exhibitors, so that it would be a practical saving in our business—by co-operation and concentrated efforts—of not less than $500,000 dollars each week, as follows:

"Saving of ten negative costs at $40,000 each would amount to $400,000 each week. Saving of ten times thirty-five prints, which would amount to $67,500, saving of overhead and operation of exchanges by concentration, the very modest estimate, $32,500 per week. In total this is an estimated saving of $500,000 per week. Why should we, as exhibitors, carry an unnecessary burden of $500,000 per week? No other line of business would. These conditions can be cured by amalgamation."

Berst Sees Other Side

J. A. Berst, in a letter to Mr. Mastbaum, took exception to the view expressed in the telegram in the following words:

"The so-called waste and overproduction about which you complain in your 833-word telegram of November 26 mean the salvation of the exhibitors of the United States and not their destruction, as you seem to believe.

"It is true that the competition to-day is so keen that a great many of the producing companies that are not making good pictures are losing money. The distributing companies that have no good pictures to sell are also losing money by reason of the same competition, but Pathe and a few of the other good companies that are selling pictures at prices that assure a profit to exhibitors are prospering and will continue to prosper.

"This very competition is the exhibitors' strongest protection. It means to you better pictures at lower prices. It is my opinion, based on twenty-three years experience in the motion picture industry, that any combination of the producing and distributing units would strangle the exhibitors of this country. The combination you seem to have in mind would mean fewer pictures which would shift the burdens of competition from the shoulders of the producers and distributors to those of the exhibitors. Any decrease in competition would mean an automatic increase in prices and I am frank to admit that at the present time the exhibitors generally are not able to carry any more burdens that they are now struggling under.

"I am answering your telegram by mail because I think that waste of all kind should be eliminated when the Government is striving so hard for economy."

Hodkinson Challenges Industry

W. W. Hodkinson in an open letter reply to Mr. Mastbaum's telegram said:

"Would you, Mr. Mastbaum, amalgamate producers after stating that they have made no effort to help themselves? But suppose they did amalgamate. What then about the exhibitors? Does anyone imagine that this prospect would be pleasing to the owners of houses representing millions of dollars of real value?

"This aggregate exhibitor investment is the only considerable value there is in the business, the value upon which producing and distributing companies have been built. I, as an exhibitor, with a memory of past producer co-operation, would not welcome it."

Offers to Share Profits

In the course of the letter Mr. Hodkinson stated that it is the plan of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to "turn back three-fourths of the profits of the company to the exhibitors who join in its plans on the recognition," stated the letter, "of the exhibitor for what he is, the all-important, indispensible element in the business, where the larger profits should center."

Mr. Hodkinson summed up conditions as follows:

"Nearer and nearer we are working toward civil war. Each side overestimates its own strength; each lacks the perspective to see the other's rights and power. So we have producers on one side, exhibitors on the other. I cannot see how further progress is possible except through the working of some competent force independent of both groups, helping them to meet their joint problems from an unbiased viewpoint, based on long years of experience gained in studying and working on this problem.

"Today I, as an exhibitor, could not start a theater with any assurance of a continuous product on which I could depend and build successfully year in and year out.

"I, as a distributor, would not encourage a producer to invest money in motion pictures to be rented in competition with all the other films going out and all the exchanges which handle them.

"I, as a producer, would not spend money on product to meet present conditions."

British See Pictures Every Two Weeks

THIS IS AVERAGE ATTENDANCE ACCORDING TO CONSULAR REPORT

THE following report by United States Consul E. Haldeman Dennison, stationed at Birmingham, England, sums up the motion picture situation in the United Kingdom of Great Britain:

"Motion pictures in the United Kingdom continue to increase in popularity, so that at present a large proportion of the population depends upon this form of amusement for regular recreation. According to the latest statistics there are 4,500 picture houses in the British Isles, with an annual attendance of 1,075,000,000. The average for the entire population is a visit to a picture show once every two weeks.

Bishop Heads Inquiry

"A commission was appointed by the National Council of Public Morals about a year ago to inquire into the physical, social, moral, and educational influence of the films, with special reference to the young.

"The president of the commission was the Bishop of Birmingham, and he had as colleagues several clergymen, educators, representatives of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights, and Composers, and various experts. The commission received evidence from all parts of the country, and the results of its investigations have just been published. It devoted careful attention to the nature and extent of the complaints that had been made against picture exhibitions.

"It was decided that improvements in picture houses could and should be made. Better lighting and closer supervision are recommended. While recognizing the impossibility that all shows should be determined by exclusive regard for children, the commissioners feel that care must be taken to protect them from what would be morally injurious to them.

Urge Stricter Censorship

"They say that a much stricter censorship should be exercised, and urge that this should include not only fims, but also the posters advertising the films. Some connection of the motion pictures with imitative juvenile crime was found to exist, but only to a limited extent. It is suggested that apart from 'sex' and 'crime' films, an injurious effect on young minds is produced by excessive sensationalism and frightfulness.

"Greater provision is urged for special exhibitions for the young, and the educational authorities and societies that are interested in the welfare of youth are invited to co-operate. Films for the young, the trade declares, are 'not a commercial proposition,' so that if the need is to be met it must be through the agency of philanthropic effort or by public authority. As a set-off aganist the evil of which the pictures may be responsible is placed the benefit to be derived from keeping the young off the streets, and their elders from the public houses.

Pictures Help Young

"The commissioners further consider the decrease of street gangs to have resulted in no small measure from the popularity of the pictures, and they conclude their findings on the moral and social aspects by declaring that the abolition of the picture house, as advocated by some, is impossible even if it were desirable, and in their judgment it is not desirable. On the other hand they are strongly of the opinion that not only is improvement practical, but also of great national importance.

"Although they refer in high terms to the existing censorship, they are of the opinion that for the protection of the motion picture, as well as for the insuring of its continued suitability to the nation, it should have the support and official countenance of the state, and therefore advocate a state censorship."

Chooses Titles for Three Features

William Fox Names "Stolen Honor," "Cupid's Round-Up," and "A Heart's Revenge" All in the Making

Titles have been selected for three uncompleted pictures which have been tentatively set for January release as Fox Special Features. The arrangement, as it now stands, is to start the month with a Gladys Brockwell picture and to follow with Tom Mix's first production as a star in Western dramas. The third offering of the month in the 52-a-year series probably will be another Sonia Markova feature.

The Brockwell picture is to be called "Stolen Honor" and the Mix debut will be made in "Cupid's Round-up." For the Markova picture, the title "A Heart's Revenge" has been decided upon.

Miss Brockwell's production has to do with the international situation, being, in some of its most important phases, a war picture. Involved in the story are a woman's love affairs, which are worked out under the most trying and difficult conditions. It happens that most of the action is laid in Berlin and one of the strange co-incidences of studio life was the appearance on the ground, during the filming of these scenes, of James W. Gerard, former United States Ambassador to Germany.

The period of the play corresponds to Mr. Gerard's term of office and much of the action is similar to that in which the Ambassador had a very real part. The director was especially interested in the visitor because of his presence affording opportunity for constructive criticism of the sets.

Walthall Play Ready

Henry B. Walthall's first Paralta Play, "His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance and adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamothe, was recently completed at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, California, and the first print was received in New York on Thursday of last week.

Chicago Censor Is Declared "Film Czar"

MAJOR FUNKHOUSER ACCUSED OF BROWBEATING TACTICS

A BOMBSHELL was hurled into last week's session of the censorship hearing being conducted in Chicago by a committee of the city council. Michael L. Igoe, an attorney of Chicago, appeared as representative of a member of the board of censors. He attacked Funkhouser's methods of arbitrary rejection of films and declared the "film czar" of Chicago had "browbeaten and threatened members of the board with discharge" after they had been ordered to appear before the council committee which has under consideration the proposed Steffen ordinance creating a censorship board of ten members to replace Chicago's present "one man censorship."

Attorney Igoe's spectacular entry came when, after hearing from Major Funkhouser, Miss Kerr, acting chief censor, and Miss Sigler, censor, the committee called Mrs. William H. Stuart, another censor, to the stand.

Then Mr. Igoe, who had sat quietly through the session, swung into action.

Makes Threat Charge

"I came here," he said, "as an attorney for Mrs. Stuart, a civil service employe.

"This 'major' of yours has browbeaten women censors on his board and threatened them with discharge.

"Last Saturday, after Mrs. Stuart was subpoenaed before your committee, Funkhouser threatened her and attempted to intimidate her. He read her and the other censors a rule of the police department which absolutely prohibits a member of the police department from giving out any information.

"Neither Mrs. Stuart nor any member of the censorship board is a member of the police department, and I charge that an attempt is being made to withhold information from this committee with reference to censorship conditions in Chicago. And you aldermen created Funkhouser's job and the jobs of all these censors. Didn't you read her this rule last week, major?"

Admits Part of Charge

"I read that rule to the whole board," replied Major Funkhouser, taken by surprise on account of the suddenness of the attack.

"Do you consider her a member and your other censors members of the police department?"

"I do," replied Major Funkhouser.

"Do you, Mr. Ayres?" asked Mr. Igoe, turning to the assistant corporation counsel, who has been Funkhouser's aid in moving picture fights.

"She is a member of the police force, not of the police department," replied Mr. Ayres.

"What is the difference between force and department?" demanded Mr. Igoe.

Mr. Ayres said there was some difference.

"Then if she is a member of the police department or the police force, why does she pay money into the municipal employes' pension fund?"

"I don't know," replied Mr. Ayres.

"What was your purpose in reading that rule to your censors after they had been subpoenaed here?' demanded Mr. Igoe.

"They were not subpoenaed," answered Funkhouser.

"Why, you have stated here that you knew they were subpoenaed here."

"They were requested to come before the committee," replied the major.

"Oh, say, let's not quibble," exclaimed Mr. Igoe impatiently. "They were subpoenaed or requested, anything you like to say. Was your purpose to scare the censors into remaining silent about conditions in your office?"

"No," replied the major. "Information had got out of my office with reference to the way one member of the censorship board voted on a picture that was appealed to the courts."

"Did you suspect Mrs. Stuart?"

"No," replied the major.

Police Rule Orders Secrecy

"Major" Funkhouser made an answer which some took as an intimation that he suspected former Head Censor Willis, who is now in the United States army in Texas. Mr. Igoe brought out that this particular incident occurred more than a month ago.

"You did nothing until last week," continued Mr. Igoe. "Then you read this secrecy rule."

Mr. Igoe read the rule calling for iron-clad secrecy—a rule so drastic that it was a revelation to the aldermen.

"Was your purpose to keep information from this committee, the council that created your job?"

"No," replied the major. "My purpose was to see that no information was divulged except to a body properly constituted to receive it."

"Do you regard this body properly constituted?"

"I do," replied the major.

"Then you are willing that Mrs. Stuart should tell anything and everything she knows about censorship?"

"I am," replied the "major."

Major Is Final Judge

The committee then adjourned until next week. The other two women censors called were not on the stand long. They did not volunteer anything. Miss Kerr, however, contradicted Major Funkhouser on important points in reply to questions from Chairman Steffen of the committee, Alderman Maypole and Alderman Rodriguez.

She denied the Funkhouser charge that there had been a difference in the handling of pictures between the Healy and the Schuettler police regimes.

She admitted a contention of the picture men that unless the board was unanimous the picture was referred to Major Funkhouser. Mr. Ayres clinched this point.

"Major Funkhouser," he said, "is the only city official who has the right under city ordinances to censor pictures."

"Then what is the use of the board?" Chairman Steffen demanded.

Major Funkhouser had declared that "a great many pictures" were ordered on the screen "over his head" when Charles Healy was the police chief.

Miss Kerr could name but one, "The Little Girl Next Door," and said there were not more than "one or two others" ordered in over the heads of the censors.

Attorney Hits Censorship

In an interview given out after the hearing was adjourned, Attorney Igoe struck at censorship conditions in Chicago.

"The censorship hearing demonstrated to my mind," he said, "that Chicago is afflicted with one-man censorship. It was brought out, chiefly by Mrs. Juliette L. Stuart, my client, that the censorship board is not a free agent. Pictures are not voted up or down by a majority vote.

"Major Funkhouser is the official censor. He has two 'pets' on the board who follow his orders and his absurd set of standards. It makes no difference what a majority of the board thinks—and I think there is a competent, intelligent majority. If 'Major' Funkhouser's two confidants decide against a picture he decides with them and the majority opinion is of no force.

"For instance, 'Crime and Punishment,' a picture based upon an anarchistic novel, was turned down by a big majority of the board, but passed under Major Funkhouser's order.

Majority Is Ignored

"'The Little American,' with Mary Pickford the star; O. Henry's 'The Guilty Party,' and the great film, 'The Tiger Woman,' were passed by a big majority of

These Are "Standards" for Cutouts

Testimony before Chicago council censorship committee revealed the following things arbitrarily prohibited by Censor Funkhouser's "set of standards," although not forbidden by ordinance:

Women or men in one-piece bathing suits. (City ordinance permits bathing in one-piece suits.)

Women sewing baby clothes, in anticipation of arrival of stork.

All snakes; (lizards, mice and rats, however, are O. K.).

Nude statues and paintings, including "Twilight and Dawn," in Chicago Art Institute.

Dead bodies.

Gambling scenes, although roulette might be shown if in highbrow environment.

Apache or hula hula dancing; any boisterous cabaret scenes.

Intoxicated women; (man-jags O. K.).

Professional boxing exhibitions.

Girls who flip up their dresses.

Men in underwear.

Soft pedal on sex pictures, "Because," the major was quoted as saying, "Women's minds are not as strong as men's. Women, protected and cooped up at home by their men, might lose their minds at the sight of—for instance, 'Ibsen's Ghosts.'"

It was charged that Major Funkhouser is opposed to woman's suffrage.

the board but were kept off the public screen by 'Major' Funkhouser.

"The Funkhouser-enforced standards, to my mind, are absurd, and, what is worse, there was evidence to indicate that some producers are favored by occasional abolition of the standards.

"As I told the club women present and the members of the committee, the last legislature at the request of Chicago's club women passed a law which, without censorship, would be a powerful weapon in fighting any improper pictures.

"This new law, which I helped pass, makes it a misdemeanor to show an obscene picture and provided for a jail sentence for any one convicted of being responsible for the production of the picture. If that new law could be generally understood it would eliminate the fear that some people entertain that the bars could be let down to immoral pictures.

"I came into the case on account of threats made against my client, who made a full and frank statement of censorship conditions before the council committee, and I believe gave the aldermen a better insight into their problem than any other witness.

"If any charge is filed against her with the civil service commission by 'Major' Funkhouser on account of the testimony she gave to the aldermanic committee I am prepared to take up her case and cause before the civil service commission.

"The cloak of secrecy legally cannot be thrown around the censor board. It is a public body supported by the taxpayers."

War Forces Jap Trade Papers to Wall

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, is in receipt of a letter from M. Tokiwa Yuasa, publisher of the Film Record of Tokio, which indicates a troubled condition among motion picture publications of Japan.

The writer says that some of the publications which have been most successful in the past have been forced to discontinue and many others are on the verge of closing shop, owing to high prices, presumably because of the war. The Kinema Record Company, the oldest in Japan, has had to discontinue. Mr. Smith's correspondent asserts, and has sold all its photos in order to help pay its debts. Several other papers are mentioned by name as being in a deplorable financial condition, and the writer says that they, too, will have to close sooner or later.

M. Tokiwa Yuasa also volunteers the information that Japanese motion picture patrons incline more to stars than they do to the dramas that are presented. This, however, is not unexpected, in view of the fact that the Japanese have always idolized their actors rather than the plays they appeared in.

"Troublemakers" Ready

"Troublemakers," a Fox Standard Picture featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, will be ready for exhibitors December 9.

Writes Remarkable Letter to Petrova

Nurse Is Inspired by Polish Actress to Do Her Bit Behind the Battle Lines in France

A REMARKABLE human interest document in the shape of a letter from a former hospital worker behind the French lines has been received by Madame Olga Petrova. The writer, a southern society girl, who has just returned from the battle fields of Europe, where she labored in the services of the American Ambulance Hospital, ascribes her courage and fortitude under the most trying and nerve-racking conditions to the inspiration which she has received from the screen artistry of Madame Petrova. The author of the communication has requested that her name be kept secret.

An artistic pose by Madame Olga Petrova whose new play "Daughter of Destiny" will be released at the Rialto Theater, New York, December 23.

Madame Petrova has become so deeply interested in the extraordinary tributes contained in the following letter that she has extended an invitation to the writer to be present at the initial showing of "Daughter of Destiny" at the Rialto Theater, New York, on Sunday, December 23. The letter received by the Polish star follows:

My Dear Madame Petrova:

I took that "calm" that is eternally "you" with me into that Land of Horror, fair France. You took my impulse, my emotion, all of me that feels, you took it in your hands and said, "Peace be still," and I was still. As hand in hand you went with me, seeing and assisting at this and that amputation, from my lips spake your calm to those dying men; some of them were youths with boyish quivering chins and lips not yet old enough to stay in a straight line under torture! It was you, not I, that did your "bit" somewhere in France.

Please accept my warm southern good wishes for your future success and happiness.

Madame Petrova has had the communication framed and gave it a place of honor among the extraordinary tokens which decorate the walls of her dressing room at the Petrova Studios.

Star Shows Camp Chef Cake Secrets

Agnes Ayres, who is being co-starred with Edward Earle in the new "Vitagraph Comedies" which are to be released this week, has done more than knit sweaters and wristlets for the boys in khaki and found the way to the hearts of the soldiers at Yaphank last week in a most practical way. Miss Ayres' brother is a sergeant in the National Army. Last Sunday she and her mother paid a visit to him in camp. During their tour of the cantonment, her brother introduced her to his company's cook.

The cook, in reply to a question from the little star, said the boys were well fed and happy, but they lacked one essential—cake. Miss Ayres, who is some pastry maker herself, gave him a recipe and showed cookie how to mix the ingredients. The result was that the boys of the company had cake for supper and when the news got around to the other mess halls there was a general demand for the recipe.

Brabin Finishes Second Metro Picture

Director Charles J. Brabin has completed a new Metro production, "Red, White, and Blue Blood," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which is his second Metro picture with these co-stars. "Red, White, and Blue Blood" was written by Shannon Fife and adapted for the screen by June Mathis.

Army Picture Is Mutual Release

Margarita Fischer Appears in "Miss Jackie of the Army"—Helen Holmes Serial Progresses

MARGARITA FISCHER'S first production under her recently made contract with the American Film Company, Inc., "Miss Jackie of the Army," is set for release on the Mutual schedule for December 10.

Miss Fischer, heroine in "Miss Jackie of the Navy"—a box office record breaker—is cast in "Miss Jackie of the Army," as the irrepressible daughter of an American army post, desperately but coyly in love with one of her colonel-father's aides, a young lieutenant.

The picture shows both the social and military sides of life at an army post. There are pretty and impressive camp scenes, there is a perfectly gorgeous Red Cross benefit with a kiss auction as a side issue, alien spies, traitorous soldiers, and knitting bees.

Miss Fischer produced "Miss Jackie of the Army" under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, who has directed the last few Mary Miles Minter pictures, at the American studios, Santa Barbara. It is from the pen of Beatrice Van and William Parker, adapted for the screen by Chester Clapp.

"The Escape" is Chapter XIII of "The Lost Express," released December 10. In this episode of the Mutual-Signal photo-novel, Helen makes her famous leap from a burning railroad coach as it crosses the bay. The plotters, thinking that Helen is killed, renew their conspiracy to rob the mine. The false secretary is exposed after a thrilling fight, the robbery of the safe is foiled, but by some clever impersonation the villains gain the upper hand once more. It was for this chapter that "Signal," the private car of the Signal Film Company, was wrecked, after having been used in every production starring Helen Holmes.

Billie Rhodes wears a dress suit, gets tipsy and caught in "Putting One Over," the Mutual-Strand comedy, slated for release Tuesday, December 11. Billie decides to put the kibosh on Fred's flirting. She impersonates a count, calls on herself when Fred is watching, keeps him in suspense just long enough, but she upsets things when she tries to hide her disguise by slipping her dress over the trousers.

Jerry uses unfair but effective methods of beating the high cost of living in "Jerry's Boarding House," Cub comedy, released by Mutual, Thursday, December 13.

The Mutual Weekly, No. 154, released Monday, December 10, carries scenes of the latest and most important of world events up to the hour of going to press.

Smith Becomes Industry Director

At a meeting of the supply and equipment division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held in New York, Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, was nominated as a director in the national board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of J. F. Skerrett.

The meeting was presided over by W. J. Moore of the H. C. Miner Lithographing Company in the absence of J. E. Brulatour, and routine matters were discussed without any definite action being taken. It was decided to hold regular monthly meetings on the second Tuesday of each month and the first meeting will be held on December 12, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the offices of the National Association. The following were in attendance at the meeting: Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing Company; L. P. Weber, Acme Lithographing Company; L. J. Lynch, representing George I. Cooke, Alpha Lithographic Company; Theodore F. Comstock, assistant to the assistant manager of the Pathescope Company, representing Willard B. Cook; S. Snowden Cassard, assistant general manager Nicholas Power Company; A. P. Lombard, representing E. S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, and B. F. Porter, Joseph F. Coufal, Novelty Slide Company; S. H. DeRoy, Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company; J. H. Hallberg, United Theater Equipment Corporation, and H. A. Rosenberg, of the Greater New York Slide Company; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary National Association.

Essanay Program for December Ready

Essanay now has ready for exhibitors its entire December program and work is well under way on the first pictures of the new year.

In the December list are "The Small Town Guy," featuring Taylor Holmes, "Sadie Goes to Heaven," Little Mary McAlister's latest picture, and "The Dream Doll," a novelty picture with "living" dolls.

"The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes' fourth picture, shows the comedian in the role of a rube. The play is from the novelette, "A Picture of Innocence," in Munsey's Magazine, and has a screen time of sixty-five minutes.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" offers new opportunities for six-year-old Mary McAlister in that she plays the part of a child of the tenements and then is seen in the home of a rich matron. "Sadie Goes to Heaven" is from the pen of Dana Burnet and was published in Good Housekeeping.

"The Dream Doll," in which dolls have a major part of the screen time, is the work of Howard S. Moss, an expert doll maker and the inventor of the system by which the manikins appear as life-like on the screen.

Look Into Future with These Men

ZUKOR, ABRAMS, GREENE AND LASKY SEE GREAT YEAR AHEAD

BY ADOLPH ZUKOR,

President Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

IF the year to come develops as great advancement in the motion picture industry as that which is just passing, no one will have cause to utter a complaint. During 1917 it progressed by leaps and bounds and, in spite of untoward conditions, its impetus was by no means stayed even after the advent of the United States in the war.

What of business in 1918?

My answer to this question would be—it depends on the individual or, rather the individual organization. I can see only increased interest in pictures on the part of the public in the next year, as a natural outcome of the increased demand for moderate priced amusement, always a necessity in war-times. I am frank to state, however, that I believe it will be a case of the survival of the fittest. Certainly the public is becoming more discriminating with every passing year and will not be satisfied with mediocre productions or inferior players and stories. Pictures being no longer a novelty, it is certain that only those companies which are capable of producing superior screen entertainment will share in the increased business that I believe is bound to come.

Industry Has Settled Down

While the past year and previous years have seen many changes, it now appears that the industry has settled down to a normal condition and that the ultimate result of all this chaotic shuffling is destined to be beneficial to those who are solidly entrenched in the business as well as to the photoplay-public. After all there is but one ideal to be attained—the production of the best pictures that are to be made. From a commercial angle, the consummation that is keenly desired is naturally to make a substantial profit from the investment. These two hinge, the one upon the other.

By making the best pictures, the producer will make the most money, and by showing the best pictures, the exhibitor will likewise profit to the largest extent. Inferior product, depending entirely, or at least in part, upon spasmodic exploitation, can never continue to succeed or satisfy. In the long run it is the best that wins, and the best in motion pictures as well as in any other line of production can only be the result of honest application, experience and confidence, which build for the future rather than for the present.

Must Strive for Success

To the industry in general there can come only that meed of success that is justified by the constant striving of each and every one to do his best. While we all hope for an early end of the great conflict that is now dwarfing the normal conditions of life and rendering the world a militant dwelling place for men of blood and iron, we are equally unable to prophesy when the end will come.

Meantime, the motion picture industry, having given many of its best men from every department to the direct service of the country, stands ready and willing to make whatever sacrifices are demanded further. It has served already, as an institution, in the important work of disseminating national information and propaganda to a wonderful extent. It has won the respect, regard and appreciation of the government by its service.

And it has still a great work to do. It must be the means of lightening the cares and burdens of the people, of removing their thoughts even for a time from the constant contemplation of the gigantic drama, greater than any we may hope to depict, which is spread upon the great screen of Europe.

What of 1918?

Service! Service to the people, service to the government, and in giving this service, giving of the best that is in us, we shall be best serving ourselves and the industry.

Industry Carves Own Future

I look ahead to a prospect of infinite potentialities; to a future too great to be foreseen, but which we must carve for ourselves out of the material at hand. That material is growing in volume and quality every day. It is for us to recognize it. It is for us to set aside petty bickerings, and work toward the end of giving the people the best entertainment that can be made from this material.

This done, we will have achieved all that can be expected of us. And we will have been working for the future on substantial lines.

BY HIRAM ABRAMS,

NO one could spend several months as I have done recently in traveling the country over, meeting motion picture exhibitors day after day, without getting new angles and acquiring much invaluable information. With General Manager B. P. Schulberg, I have traveled and talked until it seemed that not only would I be exhausted myself but that I would also exhaust the topics of conversation—but I have survived and there are still things to be learned.

Exhibitor Gains Knowledge

What has been the outcome—the result—of this personal contact tour? It has, for one thing, proved to me that the exhibitor of today, by and large, is far and away the superior of his predecessor of yesterday. He has achieved showmanship. He has become a master of the art of presentation of pictures. And what, from the standpoint of producer or distributor, could be more important?

When the maker of photoplays has done his part by producing a picture that has all the essentials of success; when it has been distributed in the best manner, with all the helps and means of exploitation possible (in our case, including the great million dollar advertising campaign which brings patrons literally to the doors of the theater), unless the picture is presented in a manner that justifies all the time and expense that have gone into its making, and which affords the public the most pleasing variety of setting, appropriate music, etc., the preliminary work has been largely wasted.

It is, then, cause for distinct congratulation that exhibitors have advanced with the other units of the industry; have brightened and bettered their theaters, built new and costly houses in many instances, provided excellent music, courteous attendants, and generally kept up with the pace set by the producers.

Know Picture Requirements

In my talks with showmen I have learned that they are realizing fully the requirements of the pictures—also they have learned to gauge their public. They have become students of human nature. I have seen many instances where the manager himself has mingled with his patrons, particularly in the smaller communities, establishing a personal contact and producing confidence. I have witnessed many examples of clever advertising, lobby display, etc., and I have been more than pleased by the manner in which the exhibitors have tied-up with our million dollar advertising campaign, thereby proving themselves awake to opportunities.

I have been pleased to note the immense advance in discrimination and have learned that the vast majority of exhibitors know pretty much what they want and will not be put off with cheap substitutes. In borrowing this phrase from the patent medicine manufacturer, I feel that I have cited a genuine analogy. Only, the line of demarcation is even more pronounced. There is a set standard for pictures. And the discriminating exhibitor demands, and is justified in demanding that kind and no other. The poor picture is doomed to failure from the start. The mediocre picture may die a more gradual death but it is fated to go down in the crush of better films.

Prices Move Upward

Next year will see a very general increase in admission prices, a thing justified by the advanced cost in every department of production, distribution and exhibition but this increase will work no material hardship upon the public to whom pictures will continue to be the cheapest form of amusement.

Nineteen eighteen will see also continued improvement in exhibiting conditions. From being an ephemeral form of entertainment, the films have won their own legitimate place and one that is on a plant of quality with the best in the drama. The days of the film freebooter are past; the times of juggling and uncertainty are at an end.

There will be changes, but they will be legitimate, the outcome of new conditions engendered by the war, by the advent of new ideas and new methods in all departments. But my trip has proved to me that eternal vigilance is the price of success in the industry. That the least slackening in effort, the failure at any time to recognize the increased discrimination of the people will result in a sudden slump for the one who thus blinds himself to his own best interests.

I have found material for reflection in my tour, and I have recognized to a greater extent, perhaps, than ever before, the necessity of studying every phase of the industry with the closest application and dealing with each new problem that arises from that standpoint.

Not Through School Yet

We are none of us through our school days yet. Nor are we likely ever to be. No one that has not experienced the opportunity I have had of seeing first hand the effect of pictures upon the public, the methods and ideas of the exhibitors in practice, can have any real conception of the extent to which the industry has grown. And I feel that the future is secure to those who strive with all earnestness to realize fully the importance of the work upon which they are engaged.

BY W. E. GREENE,

MUCH has been written in newspapers and magazines of the remarkable growth of the film business, of the amazing excellence of the productions and the acquisition of world-famous stars and writers but little has been said of the causes that made this effect possible.

A review of the past will show that the rest of the industry has kept pace with improved methods of film distribution. It only seems like yesterday that there was no fixed method of operation, when film was "fillum," and motion pictures were exhibited in stores, patrons being content to sit in cheap wooden chairs. "Exchanges" bought cans of film, didn't know what was in the can, and didn't care, and exhibitors rented the cans on the same basis.

Industry Would Have Died

It will thus be seen that the industry would have died in its very infancy, after the novelty of seeing pictures in motion had worn off, if something had not occurred, and that something was the fact that a few exchangemen discovered that some pictures were better than others, and limited their purchases to certain brands. Unconsciously, the exhibitor received the benefit of this discrimination, and when the increasing number of theaters created competition it was found that the theater obtaining service from the discriminating exchange was having the better of the argument.

The methods of distribution were lax, and many, many times the houses would miss a show. Posters were then added to the service, some of them crude and others glaring, and all of them the cheapest product the lithographers could turn out. Much as we may laugh and ridicule the early steps of the baby industry, each one played an important part and led to bigger and better things.

Make Better Pictures

It is unquestionable that large capital would never have been attracted to the more or less precarious business of exhibiting motion picture films if the method of distribution had not been improved, for people with money would not have constructed costly theaters for the purpose of exhibiting motion pictures if an adequate supply, regularly obtainable, had not been available.

The policy of the exchanges in ceasing to purchase mediocre films spurred the manufacturers to better efforts, which in turn gave to the public better pictures and made it possible to secure capital willing to make a permanent investment in pretentious picture houses.

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn star, in "The Cinderella Man."

BY JESSE L. LASKY,

Vice President Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

WHILE pure optimism is frequently liable to overreach itself and blind a man to things that should be seen, I am not averse to saying that I am optimistic over the future of the industry.

Production in the year to come offers a vast field for speculation, but I believe that further changes, of a radical nature, at least, will come less frequently than in the past. There will doubtless grow out of the experiences of the past and the efforts toward advancement new ideas and inventions directed toward more perfect productions, but I will frankly admit that it is difficult now to anticipate.

What can be done that is not now being done? I believe that the majority of changes will be technical in character. There may be added improvements in the matter of lighting. For example, I have noted the effect of the new photolight which was used in Miss Marguerite Clark's Paramount Christmas play, "The Seven Swans." In one scene something more than a million candle-power was employed with the additional use of the new Harmer-Mark lights and the brilliancy thus obtained was almost indescribable.

May Have Color Pictures

Perhaps 1918 may see new results in color photography, in plastique effects, in other directions of a technical character. For the rest—what is there to be done, beyond employing the best actors, writers, directors and others in the varied departments of the work, that can be secured?

I am speaking, of course, of our own organization. What others may do is entirely outside my jurisdiction. That all will follow similar lines is probable. I am satisfied if we continue to lead.

I believe that pictures will be kept within the five-reel length, generally speaking, though there may be occasional extensions to greater footage. But the standard will be five thousand feet. And standardization is the order of the day.

I believe that there will be a continued market for the original scenario—if it is of sterling quality. The day of hack-writing for the films is over and done. Great plays and novels will, in our case, be employed largely as the basis for many of our star vehicles.

Stars will continue to maintain their place—we have placed them on their own feet through our new booking system. It is a question of earning capacity solely. Whether the day of the non-starless play will ever arrive, I am unable to say. I scarcely think it will.

I do believe thoroughly, that pictures will be the greatest medium for historical works in the future. This great war will be told on the screen for future generations in addition to being written in books.

I further believe that the entertainment of the people will be very largely dependent upon the motion pictures in 1918 and future years. It is the ideal method because it combines moderate cost with quality and variety. To make the best pictures that we can make—that is our duty as I see it on the threshold of a new year.

New York Exhibitors Will Dance

Arrangements have been completed for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Ball, to be held at Terrace Garden, December 7, under the auspices of the Manhattan Local Exhibitors' League. An orchestra of sixteen pieces will furnish dance music in the main ball rooms. A jazz quartette of colored musicians and entertainers will provide dance music and singing in the upper annex ball room. Invitations have been sent to all the motion picture stars and a great many of them have promised to attend. Nearly all the producing and distributing companies have subscribed for boxes, have expressed their intention of being present. This will be the only exhibitors ball to be held in New York City this season and the indications are it will be a memorable event.

LIVELY HAPPENINGS ASSEMBLED FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO KNOW

BY RICHARD WILLIS

EDWARD SLOMAN'S little daughter is but a few months old, but the American director says she already has a gentleman admirer. In acknowledging the receipt of a picture of Ed's beautiful baby, her serene highness received the following:

Dear little Miss with the wondering eyes,
Generous lips framed for future "whys";
Sweet little girl with the curly hair,
Welcome to everyone—everywhere.
Happy be life dearie, blessed from above,
Surfeited baby! may I add my love?

Alfred Whitman is acting the title role of "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger" by Hamlin Garland for the Vitagraph company and he is spending a week or more on Mount Wilson, where much of the action of this stirring story will be developed. A good supporting cast has been engaged and Mr. Whitman has a fine part and one which he can do full justice to. Young Whitman has a reserve strength in his playing which is rare in these days of over emphasis. The scenes are being taken at quite an altitude.

Enid Markey has appeared in two especially big roles, the one after the other. She was featured in a Fox film under Dick Stanton with the working title of "Responsibility," but which has been renamed and will be a standard release. Then came a totally different kind of part, under Scott Sidney, in "Tarzan of the Apes," which has just been completed. Miss Markey will be featured in both of these big special photodramas.

Syd Chaplin will live in the beautiful home which fronts the five acres on which the Chaplin studios are being built. Manager John Jasper is camped on the studio grounds and a motion picture camera records daily the extraordinary progress being made. Charley Chaplin will probably continue to live at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Every day the great little comedian visits the grounds and says, "Say! isn't this studio done yet?"

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star, recently delayed the progress of a photoplay, although it was not her fault. The company had been south and returned to Brooklyn to complete an O. Henry story and Corinne's trunk, which contained all her dresses, went astray en route. Ensued much wiring, but it was several days before the missing trunk turned up, when the company had to work night and day to make up for a week's delay. Miss Griffith declares that she discovered one gray hair as a result, but nobody believes her.

Henry King is directing Mary Miles Minter in a particularly pretty story entitled "Madamoiselle Tip-Toe" by Arthur Berthelet. Miss Minter will be seen in lots of new frocks and the fans will have an opportunity of seeing what a very capable dancer the little star is. If this photoplay is as good as the one King last turned out, it will be very good indeed because "The Mate of the Sally Ann" is about the best thing Mary Miles Minter ever did.

John A. Roscoe and Clover Roe, who manage the Book and Play Department for the Los Angeles firm of Willis and Inglis, have been making some interesting deductions from their recent sales. They are convinced that the features of the future will be original stories written by men and women who make a study of writing for the screen, and they believe that the adaptation of novels and stage plays is waning in popularity. The screen requires more skilled authors and the managements are slowly but surely finding it to their benefit to properly recompense such writers. Mr. Roscoe and Miss Roe are regarded as two of the best authorities in the business and they have methods all their own.

So Herbert Rawlinson is leaving the Universal at last! The popular Rawley seemed like a fixture with the big U. Here is some company's chance. Give Rawlinson the right plays and direction and he is a sure fire hit; he shines particularly in comedy drama.

Wally Reid is now working in the last feature he will appear in before going east for awhile. Anna Little is acting opposite him and will continue to do so in New York. The last story these two attractive young people appeared in was Frank H. Spearman's "Nan of Music Mountain."

Referring to the performance of Crane Wilbur in the morality film, "The Finger of Justice," recently made and exhibited for three weeks in San Francisco, the Reverend Paul Smith declared that it would accomplish more towards the elimination of vice than many written or spoken words. Crane Wilbur played the part of Noel Delaney, a virile and manly minister, who understood the world and fought vice in a way which appealed even to the wrong doers. His performance was a sterling one and one which is bound to be appreciated wherever the film is shown.

Monroe Salisbury is a big favorite with Los Angeles audiences and his latest starring vehicle, "The Savage," was put on at Quinn's Rialto Theater weeks ahead of the time it was scheduled to be shown. Salisbury's western characters have a peculiar romantic charm all their own and his vogue is testified to by the enormous increase in his personal mail.

Bryant Washburn is busy at the western Pathe studios, very busy in fact, because his director, Richard Baker, is quite sick. Bryant is directing himself until Baker returns. The name of his latest photoplay is "Kidd and Ko."

Myrtle Stedman, "state-trotter" and warbler-in-chief at the theaters she is appearing in, is now on the home stretch and another month will see her in New York City. In fact she hopes to eat her Christmas dinner in the little eastern village, where the angels come from.

Again is the one and only Fay Tincher shaking the moth balls from those famous black and white frocks and—er—stockings and things, for Fay is starting on her first two reel comedy with her very own company.

Charles Ray turned the laugh on himself recently when he owned up to taking a box at a war-charity benefit in Los Angeles. Ray paid for the box with its six seats and promptly forgot all about it until someone mentioned the event on the day the performance took place. He managed to reach two friends by 'phone, but the rest of the box remained empty.

All those who see "Madame Who" will appreciate what a wonderful personality Bessie Barriscale possesses. She has far more than beauty, she has the "indefinable something" which compels attention and sympathy. Her very fair hair (oh, quite natural) and her very dark eyes are as attractive on the screen as off it. Miss Barriscale's appearance in "Madame Who" is much looked forward to. She is now preparing her fourth Paralta picture.

William D. Taylor, the director who recently renewed his contract with the Paramount concerns, turned down an especially big offer to make features in England. Taylor is a lover of the west and has steadily declined most attractive inducements to go to New York. He believes that better pictures can be made in California than elsewhere.

Webster Campbell, the Vitagraph actor, is a great football enthusiast. It is not so long ago he was playing the game himself at Ann Arbor where he was interested in many forms of sport. Webster is willing to work all night to pay for an afternoon at one of the big football games.

Show Hart Film Play to Prisoners

Arrangements have been made by the W. H. Productions Company to show their first release featuring William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," to the prisoners at Sing Sing. The entertainment will be held under the auspices of the Mutual Welfare League, which is responsible for so much good in the way of prison reform.

The principal character of the picture, Two-Gun Stokes, played by Mr. Hart, is a notorious bandit and desperado, made so by necessity and not inclination.

The Mutual Welfare League desires to show this picture to the prisoners, feeling that the moral effect cannot fail to be beneficial to the prisoners. Mr. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, in conjunction with an official of the W. H. Productions Company has devised a unique method to create the desired moral effect upon the prisoners.

Exposition Plans Are Progressing

Large Producing Companies and Many Industries Not Directly Connected With Pictures Seek Space

NOT only the motion picture industry, but other lines of business as well, will be interested in the big Motion Picture Exhibition to be held in Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 18, 1918. At a meeting of the Exposition Committee, held at headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, New York City, November 27, considerable progress was reported.

General Manager Frederick H. Elliott, with whom Sam Grant, F. W. Hartmann and others are co-operating in the organizing of the exposition, expressed himself as being highly elated at the substantial number of entries of larger motion picture producing companies who already have contracted for space.

It was also encouraging to note that numerous inquiries regarding space have been made by concerns not directly connected with the industry, but catering to a certain extent to motion picture actors. Among these are creators of gowns, tailors, milliners, toilet article and make-up manufacturers, wig makers, and others.

Arrangements are being made to give space to a number of these higher class concerns and several of the fashionable dressmakers who are making creations for the foremost leading women in the screen profession plan to exhibit new models of frocks and evening gowns on mannequins. At least one make-up manufacturer will have a booth in which the art of make-up as applied to motion picture studies will be demonstrated.

"We shall endeavor only to take in exhibitors such as these when they have displays to offer which are really interesting to the visitor. It is not desired to have booths which will simply resemble a department store counter," said Mr. Elliott.

"It is our intention to keep the exposition as high class as possible. I am convinced that it will be not only a much larger exposition than has ever before been held for the motion picture industry, but it will be higher in quality and more replete in novel features than anything heretofore offered. The part that motion pictures are playing in the war will be illustrated in a novel manner."

Application for space may be made at the office of the association in the Times Building. There is a small amount of the more desirable locations still to be secured.

Fairbanks Plans South American Trip

Douglas Fairbanks is planning on a trip to South America, where he hopes to film three new picture-plays. He will be accompanied by his two directors, Allan Dwan and John Emerson, photographic staff and a supporting cast.

The Fairbanks company expect to leave California the early part of the new year, going directly to Buenos Aires, where headquarters will be established.

This marks the first time that a film company ever figured on a trip of this kind, because of the tremendous expense, and time lost in traveling. It is Fairbanks' ambition to invade unpicturized country, and therefore his desire to take his organization to South America.

The Fairbanks scenario department has issued a call for South American stories.

Man Who Met the Kaiser Writes Play

George Scarborough, known nationally as the author of the dramas, "The Lure," and "At Bay," has written a big war play that William Fox is to produce. Mr. Scarborough, who has been lawyer, reporter, detective and dramatist, is called by members of the United States Secret Service, with which he was long associated, "the man who met the Kaiser."

Build War Tanks for Picture

Having reproduced the Sphinx and pyramids of ancient Egypt for "Cleopatra," the mosques and minarets of Oriental Bagdad for "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the Nashville of 1830 for "The Conquerer" and the mob-swept streets of Paris for "Les Miserables," all within the last few months, the William Fox technical department has added another to its list of achievements in the construction of tanks and trenches which are duplicates of those "over there."

These newest products of constructive genius will be seen in "The Pride of New York," a photoplay starring George Walsh. Unable to borrow the original tank that was brought overseas to aid in the Liberty Loan drive, Director R. A. Walsh told his needs to the technical staff.

Pick Cast for Next Fischer Play

The complete cast of the American-Mutual production, entitled "Molly Go Get 'Em," has been selected. This is the second Margarita Fischer feature. True Boardman and Emma Kluge have prominent parts. Others in the cast are Hal Clements, Margaret Allen and Alfred Ferguson. Jack Mower will play opposite Miss Fischer.

Music Is Second Only in Importance

PRODUCER SAYS APPROPRIATE SELECTIONS MUST ACCOMPANY PICTURES

BY. W. E. GREENE,

SECOND only in importance to the house itself is the matter of appropriate music in the proper presentation of photoplays. With the growth of the motion picture, and its uplift from a manufacturing project to an artistic industry, music has become a vital consideration.

The idea of musical accompaniment, of course, was coincident with the exhibition of pictures, but the matter of appropriate music is a subject that has kept pace with the progress in film production. It is admitted that crimes without number have been committed against musical art, and I recall—with a shudder—an incident I witnessed on South Halsted street, Chicago, some years ago when the Passion Play was exhibited to the accompaniment of the "Hootchy Kootch."

Artists' Work Harmonizes

When the producer has spent a vast sum of money, often running into six figures on a photoplay, he has brought together an artistic ensemble, in which the composite work of numerous artists are harmoniously joined together. In an Artcraft picture we have such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Wm. S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson, Geraldine Farrar and George M. Cohan.

Their work is directed by such wizards of the screen as D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. De Mille, Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, John Emerson and other famous producers. Expert photographers film the scenes and attend to the developing and printing.

When the producer has finally placed the picture in the theater he has exhausted every avenue and used every means at his command to make a pleasing picture, but as viewed on the screen it appeals only to the sense of sight, and is, in fact, "the silent drama." The addition of musical accompaniment gives it tongue, and in reality furnishes the "soul" of the production, as well as making it doubly attractive by appealing to the sense of hearing of the audience.

The average patron of a high class motion picture theater, and even the musicians themselves, probably do not realize how important the music is, but employes of the producing companies, who see the picture in the projecting rooms of the studios without music, and then witness the presentation at New York theaters like the Strand or Rialto, appreciate the worth of music.

Accompaniment Helps Success

The value of the recent Artcraft spectacle, Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot," was greatly enhanced by the accompanying music, which has no doubt had much to do with the great success of even the magnificent production.

D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" was made a stirring subject by the accompanying music, and no one who has witnessed the picture will ever forget the high bugle notes as the Klu Klux Klan appeared, which fairly lifted the audience out of its seats.

Consideration of these two pictures, which are conceded to be the most stupendous and artistic film productions in the history of motion photography, produced by Cecil B. De Mille and D. W. Griffith, respectively, shows that the best photoplays it is possible to make, entirely regardless of expense, are made materially more pleasing by the addition of the proper musical accompaniment.

How much more, therefore, is it necessary to give attention to the musical score for lesser pictures, which are the daily sources of income for the theaters. And I am sure that if the musicians knew how much their co-operation with the industry is appreciated by every one in it that it would be an incentive to high aims on their parts.

Three "Big V" Comedy Companies Working

Semon Signs New Contract with Vitagraph and Goes West—Two Earle-Ayres Parlor Comedies Are Completed

LAWRENCE SEMON, author, director and star of the originial of the three "Big V" comedy companies now working, has just signed a contract for another year. He went with his troupe last week to the coast and already is engaged in making a picture.

Semon, with Joe Basil and Pietro Aramondo, comedians, and Len Smith, his cameraman, left New York on the Twentieth Century Limited and arrived in California last Friday. A company of acrobats and pretty girls had already been engaged for him by W. S. Smith, western studio manager for Vitagraph, and the company was ready to start as soon as the director landed.

The activities of these three laugh-making companies in the West are distinct from the "Vitagraph Comedy" company in which Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres are starred under the direction of Graham Baker. This is the new brand of high class comedies announced by Vitagraph, the first of which is to be released the first week in December.

The initial "Vitagraph Comedy" will be entitled "The Family Flivver" and will show a little page from real life wherein a young married couple decide to buy their first car, immediately the two families of the newlyweds declare themselves in on the first ride. This complication is barely met when the bride has a new fur coat sent home on approval with the idea of dressing up to the new automobile. The picture closes with the youthful husband despairingly consulting the checkbook so suddenly transformed into a bankroll ragamuffin.

Earle and Miss Ayres have just completed the second in this new series of farces, the title of which will be "Paging Page Two."

President Albert E. Smith of Greater Vitagraph, declares the first two comedies will give exhibitors and the public an idea of the high plane of story to be used in the comedies.

"I believe these little pictures are going to do their 'bit' in making the picture lovers forget the war," said Mr. Smith in discussing them. "That is their aim. As I announced some time ago, our policy during the period of the war shall be to produce 'happy' pictures. That is one reason why Vitagraph now has four comedy companies at work instead of one as was the case a few months ago. The people, I believe, need entertainment more now than they ever have needed it since motion pictures were invented. What with millions of families giving up their sons for whatever fate the war may hold for them and other millions confronted with the problems of high living cost, this country has worries enough and it is up to the motion picture manufacturers to give the people every laugh possible."

The arrival of the Semon company now gives Vitagraph five companies at work in its western plant, which has recently been greatly enlarged. One of these is a Blue Ribbon Feature Company headed by Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, under the direction of William Wolbert, a serial company with William Duncan, director-star, and Carol Holoway, at its head, and three "Big V" comedy companies. One of these is the Semon company, another is that with Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock under the direction of Dave Smith, and the third is headed by Jack Dill and Carolyn Rankin, under direction of J. A. Howe.

President Smith, in putting three companies of slapstick artists to work simultaneously, declared the move was necessary because of the demand for this form of entertainment, and because of his desire to give the directors all of the time they require in order to turn out finished pictures. Until about two months ago, only one company, that headed by Semon, was engaged in making these one-reel subjects, and it kept him and his associates busy keeping up with the demand. Mr. Smith, in the interest of better pictures, then organized a second company, featuring Montgomery and Rock under the direction of Graham Baker, who had written many of the comedies produced by Semon. They made several pictures, with Patsey De Forest in the leading feminine roles, and then they went to the coast. They have just completed their first western comedy, entitled "Stowaways and Strategy." The Dill and Rankin company has been making pictures in the west for six weeks.

Russell Favors Wrestling for Soldiers

"The best news I've heard in a long time is that the U. S. government is going to put expert trainers at the various camps to teach the boys the old time art of wrestling," says William Russell, athletic hero of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara. "It's a fine thing to do. Three months of expert training in wrestling and boxing will give many a youth confidence in his ability to take care of himself under any circumstances."

Four Large Calibre Pictures Offered

Goldwyn Releases Quartette of Big Features in Quick Succession, Each of Proved Worth as Holiday Attraction

THE Goldwyn Pictures declaration that "good pictures cure bad times in the theaters" is strikingly verified by the tremendous acknowledgment from exhibitors of Goldwyn wisdom in releasing in quick succession four pictures of the caliber and drawing power of Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Auction Block"; Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter and directed by George Loane Tucker; and Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France.

Each of these productions possesses proved-in-advance drawing power and the quartette was greatly strengthened by the inclusion of Rex Beach's production, which had been produced to sell at advanced rentals. It had been booked at advanced prices by many Goldwyn contract customers to be played in between Goldwyn Pictures. These Goldwyn customers found themselves in the fortunate position of having contracts that they had signed for this separate attraction returned to them by Goldwyn. They now receive "The Auction Block" at their regular Goldwyn rental and as a Goldwyn Picture. This picture is released December 2.

Two weeks later, on December 16, "The Cinderella Man," produced as a beautiful and powerful holiday picture, will find the public eager to receive it. "The Cinderella Man" is declared to be the most beautiful picture in which Mae Marsh ever starred and the best made and most picturesque production ever directed by George Loane Tucker.

Keen anticipation is shown for the screen debut of Mary Garden in "Thais." Frank Crane, the director, and Hugo Ballin, the art director, have made this their most notable work, and Miss Garden seemingly has a larger audience awaiting her than any star has ever had before.

"Nearly Married," the first of these four pictures to be released, already is scoring a big box-office success throughout America, and Madge Kennedy has brought delight to Goldwyn by establishing herself as a nation-wide success both with the public and exhibitors.

Announcement of the release of these productions in rapid succession has brought a flood of new contract business into all Goldwyn offices and paved the way for a record-breaking business throughout the winter and spring months.

The big special productions distributed through Goldwyn, "The Manx-Man," George Loane Tucker's picturization of Hall Caine's great novel, and "For the Freedom of the World," Ira M. Lowry's thrilling war picture, are being booked by exhibitors in every part of the country.

Make New Animated Cartoons

E. B. Hetrick, who has charge of the animated cartoon department of the International Film Service, announces a series of "animated comedies." International's present animated cartoons usually are 500 feet in length, issued as a part of a split release, in association with a scenic or educational film. Two of these will shortly be released. One of them is entitled "The Tale of a Monkey," and the other "The Last Straw." Both of these comedies have the Katzenjammer Kids as the principal actors. The scenarios were written and the animating done under the direction of Gregory La Cava.

Screen Actors Will Speak Titles

Carl Laemmle Undertakes Experiment in Making Next Mersereau Release—Received Hunch from "Constant Reader"

LIP readers will be interested in the experiment Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird photoplays, has ordered undertaken in the production of Violet Mersereau's next release. The titles will be rehearsed and "spoken" into the feature as it progresses. The characters will thus speak the titles and the printed word will serve as a confirmation of what has been said during the production of the scene, immediately preceding the title.

To further develop the public interest, the advertising and press work will make reference to the "spoken" titles and there will be printed lists of the complete set of titles provided for the use of exhibitors in distributing them to their audiences. No less a benefactor than "Constant Reader" is responsible, in a letter to the editor of one of New York's dailies, for the idea that will be worked out by Mr. Laemmle in the forthcoming Bluebird.

The newspaper reader, in his expressions to the editor, related how he was able from the last row of a theater to hear the dialogue when his eyes were open; but declared that with his eyes shut the lines spoken by the actors on the stage were a mere jumble of sounds. "Constant Reader" went on to say:

"I was greatly interested in this experience. The eyes take in at a glance a conversation; they note from the expression on the face of the person speaking whether what he says is serious, amusing or otherwise, and in many instances, without previous training, they recognize the actions of the visible speech organs, interpreting the word pictures formed by them with the aid of the mind into spoken language, even if the sound of the voice cannot be heard. Many of us are unconsciously doing just this same thing when attending a moving picture play and are perhaps startled by the sudden voices coming out to us from the silent screen."

Mr. Laemmle proposes to have these "voices from the screen" speak in absolute harmony with the action that has led to the title being inserted. And to that end titles will be used to express more in conversation, the progress of the action. Mr. Laemmle believes there will be an incentive to an increased interest in the story, and added enjoyment to witnessing the photoplay.

Three of a series of Essanay one-reel comedies have been completed, for release through General Film. These are of the slapstick variety, inaugurating some new types of rapid-action comedy, and are titled, "Hard Luck," "The General" and "All Board."

Metro Contributes Heavily To War

Gives Many of Its Men to the Nation—Hartley McVey, Mrs. Sidney Drew's Brother, Is Aviator

HARTLEY McVEY, brother of Mrs. Sidney Drew, and formerly associated with Mr. and Mrs. Drew in the production of Metro-Drew comedies, has received his commission as lieutenant in the aviation section of the United States Army. Lieutenant McVey is now awaiting orders to proceed to France, where he hopes to see S. Rankin Drew, Sidney Drew's son, formerly a Metro director, who is already in the aviation work abroad.

Another employe to leave to enter the service is Charles A. Jacobsen, who enters the quartermaster's division as a first-class corporal. Mr. Jacobsen's immediate destination is Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Jacksonville, Fla. He has been with Metro for two years in the capacity of purchasing agent. In Jacksonville he hopes to find his friend and former fellow Metro employe, Benjamin A. Boyer, who is also with the quartermaster's department. Mr. Boyer was assistant manager of the Popular Plays and Players studio.

Metro has contributed men to all branches of the service.

Lieut. James M. Loughborough of the U. S. R. received his final training at Plattsburg. He was formerly manager of publicity for Metro, and Arthur James's right-hand man. Bennett Molter, formerly assistant director to William Christy Cabanne, joined the French aviation service before the United States entered into the war, but will now be transferred to the aviation section of this country. As a member of No. 101 Escadrille of the French Army, Mr. Molter distinguished himself by skill and bravery on several occasions, and he wears a decoration. Two other Metro men who have enlisted in the flying corps are Fred Sittenham, formerly assistant director, and Frank Cummings, assistant cameraman.

One day in the spring twenty boys from the Metro studio went in a body to offer themselves to the Naval Reserves. Among those who were accepted, and who have either joined the colors already or are awaiting orders to leave, are the Sweeney boys, "Jimmy." "Jack" and "Bill," "Sherrie" Harris, Arthur Herman, Harold Wenstrom and Alfred Dagostino. These were employed in different capacities at the studio.

James Kertyn, accountant, Wm. Laird, bookkeeper, and Alexander Duane, clerk, were among those who enlisted early. Louis Klopsch, of the publicity department, is in France with the 165th Regiment and is the editor of a newspaper published in the American camp.

Jack Lamond, formerly assistant cameraman, enlisted in the marine corps, and is now engaged in taking motion pictures of naval maneuvers for the government. Louis Hooper, formerly casting director at the Metro studio, returned to his home in Canada and joined the ambulance service. Few of Metro's men were drafted, but among these were William Canter, operator at the Quality studio, Lester Cuneo, Harold Lockwood's leading "villian," and John Waters, assistant director to Fred J. Balshofer, and Samuel Herbert, shipping clerk at Metro's executive offices in the Longacre Building, New York. All these men are in the infantry.

Seven men from Metro's West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal., rallied to the colors. These were Andrew McDonald, electrician, Benny Pierpoali, assistant cameraman, Carl W. Himm, film cutter, Wells Pettibone, carpenter, Jack Christianson, property man, William Brown, scenic artist, and Earl Morris, chauffeur.

Fair Weather Delays Production

Constance Talmadge's projected departure for the west has been held up by the stretch of unusually fine weather which New York and its environs have been enjoying for the past ten days. Miss Talmadge's next Select production, "The Studio Girl," which is to be completed before her departure, calls for a great number of rain scenes and she and her director, Charles Giblyn, have been distractedly marking time while the sun shines.

Fate seemed to smile on them one day last week when a drizzling rainstorm broke the spell of perfect weather. No time was lost and a strenuous morning was spent in the wilds of New Jersey. At noon a halt was called, and the tired, draggled party motored into Englewood for luncheon. On their return to the street they found that their automobile and chauffeur had vanished.

A bystander informed them that the man had been arrested, and Giblyn sent his assistant to the police station to ascertain the cause. The latter, as soon as he set foot within the jail, was added to the chauffeur and the automobile, and his "S. O. S." brought Giblyn on the scene. Here it was explained to the director that his automobile carried a 1915 license plate in the year 1917, which was not in accordance with New Jersey standards. It took Giblyn all afternoon to convince the minions of the law that the car was being used in a scene which required a 1915 license, and that art and not crime was being served. Meantime, old Sol was back on the job and there was nothing to do but go home.

"The Studio Girl" is an adaptation for the screen, by Paul West, of "The Runaway," a comedy by Pierre Veber and Henri de Gorsse. It is filled with sparkling bits, humorous situations and a strong love interest.

Like its predecessor, "The Honeymoon," it affords Miss Talmadge opportunity for the exercise of her rare comedy gifts and bids fair to outshine any one of her previous releases. When finished, the picture will be distributed through Select exchanges.

Tabulates Film Rentals by Machine

The General Film Company has adopted an advanced method of tabulation for its accounting details with bookkeeping machinery. Several sets of machines similar to those used in the United States Census Bureau make weekly a minute and separate accounting of its every film rental—by serial number, manufacturer, subject, date, branch, exhibitor and price throughout the United States. Auditor W. M. Gulick estimates that the machines dispose of from 14,000 to 16,000 ordinary bookkeeping entries per week, and that it would need about forty clerks to do the same work that the machines are doing.

Actor Thrice Wounded

Amedee Rastrelli, French comedian appearing in the new series of Essanay one-reel comedies released by General Film Company, wears a medal for valor in connection with the war. He is appearing in American comedies while resting from the effects of the third serious wound received in active service at the front.

President Praises Four-Minute Men

President Wilson has written the following letter to the speakers of the Division of Four-Minute Men of the Committee on Public Information:

"To the Fifteen Thousand Four-Minute Men of the United States:

"May I not express my very real interest in the vigorous and intelligent work your organization is doing in connection with the Committee on Public Information? It is surely a matter worthy of sincere appreciation that a body of thoughtful citizens, with the hearty co-operation of the managers of moving picture theaters, are engaged in the presentation and discussion of the purposes and measures of these critical days.

"Men and nations are at their worst or at their best in any great struggle. The spoken word may light the fires of passion and unreason or it may inspire to highest action and noblest sacrifice a nation of freemen. Upon you Four-Minute Men, who are charged with a special duty and enjoy a special privilege in the command of your audiences, will rest in a considerable degree the task of arousing and informing the great body of our people, so that when the record of these days is complete we shall read page for page with the deeds of Army and Navy the story of the unity, the spirit of sacrifice, the unceasing labors, the high courage of the men and women at home who held unbroken the inner lines. My best wishes and continuing interest are with you in your work as part of the Reserve Officer Corps in a nation thrice armed because through your efforts it knows better the justice of its cause and the value of what it defends.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,

(Signed) "Woodrow Wilson."

Veteran Directs "The Planter"

Thomas N. Heffron, who directed "The Planter," a Mutual special feature in which Tyrone Power is starred, had a distinguished career in stage direction before he became associated with Thanhouser in 1911 and began to make himself famous as a director of motion picture drama.

Mr. Heffron was stage director for Cohan and Harris, William A. Brady, Mrs. Fiske, John Mason, A. H. Woods and Augustus Thomas before he was picked by the late Charles Frohman to superintend stage direction of some of the distinguished manager's important successes.

Since he joined the motion picture forces, Mr. Heffron has been associated with Thanhouser, Biograph, Famous Players, Selig and the American Film Company, Inc., of Santa Barbara, California.

Pay One Dollar to See Patriotic Film

"Heroic France, Our Allies in Action," the eight-reel Mutual war spectacle, was shown to capacity audiences, afternoon and evening at the State Normal School at Moorhead, Minn., recently. The auditorium of the Moorhead Normal seats 1,000 people. The Moorhead chapter of the American Red Cross received a percentage of the ticket receipts and Mutual donated a share of the film rental to the local Red Cross organization. Tickets for the show sold at $1 each.

January Bluebirds Are Announced

Carmel Myers, Mae Murray, Ruth Clifford and Franklin Farnum Are Featured in Early Productions

CARMEL MYERS in "My Unmarried Wife"; Mae Murray in "The Eternal Columbine"; Ruth Clifford in "The Highest Card" and Franklyn Farnum in "The Catamount" will provide attractions for January that promise to sustain Bluebird's reputation for good entertainment.

Violet Mersereau, in "The Wild Cat" and Dorothy Phillips, in "Broadway Love," have also completed plays to add to the good start Bluebird has planned for the new year. All of the stars mentioned are now busy on location with material worthy of their effort, preparing releases far in advance of present requirements.

Mae Murray, in "The Eternal Columbine," will offer the art that first gave her public prominence—dancing and pantomime—in artistic combination. Pierette and Harlequin, stand-bys of the European stage in weaving pantomime of traditional interest, furnish a prelude to Sheridan Bickers' story which Robert Leonard has produced. Miss Murray dances in the prologue and dances through the story lending a combination of three arts to the screen in dramatic emotion, pantomime and dance.

Carmel Myers, presenting "My Unmarried Wife," makes her second appearance as a Bluebird star, January 7, in a play that promises to fix her in assured favor with the exhibitor and his public. Out of a multiplicity of themes and schemes for photoplay entertainment there has come from Frank R. Adams' story, originally titled "Molly and I," a screen novelty that finds its principal charm in a reflection of every day life. Kenneth Harlan, who is leading man for Miss Myers, is excellently fitted in a role that matches the star's part in interest and sympathy; Beatrice Van, Patrick Calhoun, Mark Fenton and Jack Hutchinson backing the leads with evenly balanced and essential supporting roles.

Ruth Clifford, star of "The Highest Card," will have Monroe Salisbury as her leading man in another Rupert Julian Bluebird. In this new offering Mr. Julian acts as well as directs, essential roles involving Al W. Filson, W. H. Bainbridge and Reta Pickering in the portrayal of Elliott J. Clawson's screen-plot. The players went back to nature in producing "The Highest Card" going to Seven Oaks, Cal., for locations that fulfill the requirements of a story that reaches out-of-doors for most of its scenes.

Franklyn Farnum's Bluebird, late in January, will be "The Catamount" based on a story by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, prepared for the screen by Charles Kenyon and produced by Joseph De Grasse. The plot deals with ranch life and Mr. Farnum is provided with just the type of a "speedy" role that best suits his screen-style. Edith Johnson will be his leading lady and Fred Montague, Charles Hill Mailes and J. Morris Foster will have prominent supporting roles.

Blackwell in 400th Picture

"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," a forthcoming World-Picture Brady-Made, is the four hundredth photoplay in which Carlyle Blackwell has acted the leading male role. Associated with him as co-stars in this screen drama are June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Arthur Ashley.

Makes Use Of Advertising Opportunity

Another Manager Makes Lobby Attractively Like Circus Tent Entrance for Showing of "Polly of the Circus"

C. EVERETT WAGNER, manager of the Dreamland Theater of Chester, S. C., is another exhibitor who has taken advantage of the exploitation opportunities afforded by the Goldwyn feature production, "Polly of the Circus," in which Mae Marsh is starred.

When the picture was on at his theater, Manager Wagner spread sawdust over the lobby floor and erected an imitation circus tent entrance. He also constructed an imitation circus ring for the theater lobby and installed some live animals. A tub of red lemonade of real circus flavor was dispensed to the patrons as they filed through the entrance, and a lusty lunged boy peddled peanuts while the crowd waited in the ticket line.

Last Sub-Branch Passes

The last sub-branch in the motion picture world passed into history when Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Foley left Johnstown, Pa., for St. Petersburg, Fla., last week. When the consolidation of producing companies was effected several years ago there were few small film distributors who survived the merger. In a short time all of them were out of business except the Johnstown sub-branch operated by Mr. and Mrs. Foley.

Mr. Foley opened the first moving picture show in Johnstown. It was the Bijou Dream Theater at Locust and Clinton streets. Those were the days when the nickelodeon blazed the trail for the more pretentious screen houses. The movies were dubbed "canned" pictures and were laughed at by the self-styled legitimate stage. But the industry persevered with men like Mr. Foley directing its energies and soon developed into its present-day magnitude.

When Mr. Foley started the Bijou one-reel programs were the vogue. Later he opened the Globe Theater, which he conducted until a year ago, in addition to a film exchange.

On account of ill health, Mr. Foley is going south. He will locate temporarily in Florida, but if the climate is not found satisfactory he and Mrs. Foley will remove to Arizona.

Leo Is Manager of Fox Theaters

Joseph Leo, many years in the amusement business, has been appointed assistant to the general manager of the William Fox circuit of theaters now consisting of twenty playhouses, most of which are in Greater New York.

Mr. Leo was closely associated with Mr. Fox in the latter's pioneer days as a showman, and as a motion picture producer. He opened the first theater Mr. Fox ever had, and, as the circuit grew, his duties were enlarged correspondingly.

For several years Mr. Leo had a booking office, upon which many vaudeville houses relied for their acts. About three years ago he returned to the Fox forces and served at first as business manager for various companies of Fox players making feature photoplays. In this way he obtained an intimate knowledge of actual film making. Following this work Mr. Leo did special duty in connection with most of the William Fox theaters.

Sunday Case Reaches High Court

The People against Vincent Bergstrom, proprietor of a Schenectady motion picture theater, is the title of a case that was appealed to the New York state court of appeals last week. Bergstrom was convicted in the police court last March for operating the Majestic Theater in violation of the Sunday law. He was fined $5. On the appeal to the county court the judgment was affirmed and recently the appelate division of the supreme court also affirmed the conviction of Bergstrom. In the latter court Justice Woodward dissented from the majority ruling, which permits the case to be carried to the highest court in the state.

This is a test case to determine the rights of the motion picture theater proprietors in New York state regarding the opening of their theaters and giving motion picture exhibitions on Sunday.

New Mission Theater Is Reopened

The New Mission Theater, at Mission and Twenty-second streets, in San Francisco, altered and enlarged to accommodate 2,800 persons, provides for the Mission district of San Francisco's largest uptown theater.

Built for Louis R. Greenfield and Leon Kahn by Reid Brothers, architects, the New Mission represents an expenditure of $300,000. Kahn and Greenfield are the owners also of the New Filmore Theater, constructed very nearly according to the same plan as the New Mission. Robert F. Abraham is the manager.

The big amusement enterprise was sponsored by the Mission Street Merchants' Association, to whose members Kahn and Greenfield have given full credit for the co-operation, which made the undertaking possible. A board room, completely furnished, has been provided in the new addition by the management for the meetings of the association directors.

A spacious foyer, from which inclines of easy gradation lead to the balcony and loge sections, is located at the rear of the main auditorium. The mezzanine, entirely devoted to rest rooms, is reached also through the foyer. Centered at the rear of the lower floor the operating room, thoroughly equipped, is provided with glass panels through which the projection of the pictures may be viewed.

Elaborately grilled, the vaulted dome over the balcony, with its intricate design, is an architectural feature that adds grace and beauty to the huge auditorium.

New Little Theater Opens in Seattle

John Hamrick, manager of the Rex theater, Seattle, opened a new house this month in the heart of Seattle's shopping district. The Little Theater is the name of this house, located at 416 Pike street, just a half block from the Coliseum, one of the Greater Theaters Company's motion picture palaces.

The name is suited for Mr. Hamrick's new house, because it seats only 350, but it is furnished as handsomely and equipped even better than most motion picture theaters of three times the size. There is a little ladies' rest room in the basement. Mr. Hamrick is particularly proud of his gold fiber screen, the only one in Seattle. He has advertised the fact.

First run Triangle films are shown at the Little Theater, and the regular admission price is twenty cents, the same as all other first class downtown houses in Seattle.

Perry Becomes Manager in Milwaukee

Takes Charge of Strand Theater and Plans to Spend $10,000 in Making This Picture House More Beautiful

CHARLES C. PERRY, who acted as assistant to Theo. L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick, St. Paul, since that playhouse passed under the control of Finkelstein & Ruben in August last, resigned his berth recently to accept a position of greater responsibility as the active manager of the Strand Theater, Milwaukee.

Mr. Perry, a direct descendant of Commodore Perry, was born at Lafayette, Ind., thirty years ago. He resided for a time at York, Nebraska, and attended the state college in that city. He was assistant treasurer at the Orpheum Theater, St. Paul, for several seasons and was also connected with the former Grand Opera House in that city. In 1913 Mr. Perry entered into a managerial speculation on his own account at Sioux City, Ia. He leased the opera house and gave that city its first introduction to the artistic exposition of feature photo plays. When Fred Hartman, the hero of the Red River Dog Derby race, made a tour last winter, following the dog derby, Mr. Perry was engaged to manage the successful tour the plucky Hartman made throughout the west.

As assistant to Theo. L. Hays, Mr. Perry co-operated in the introduction of the many innovations in service and photoplay presentment that have distinguished the policy of that playhouse, particularly the artistic preludes that are given the screen productions at the New Garrick.

The Strand Theater in Milwaukee over which Mr. Perry now presides, is a beautiful house of large capacity, playing high class features and one of the most successful playhouses in that city. Under Mr. Perry's direction $10,000 will be spent in beautifying the interior as to decorations and furnishings. The stage will be enlarged and thoroughly equipped as to scenic and lighting facilities to afford an opportunity to invest the various presentments with artistic preludes and appropriate settings. A large orchestra will be engaged and the musical interpretation of the features will be made distinctive.

This new connection will offer Mr. Perry a splendid opportunity for the development of the special talent and ability he has evidenced in exposition of the silent drama.

Complete "Thais" on Schedule Time

Goldwyn Forces Finish Filming Mary Garden Picture and Work of Assembling and Titling Is Progressing

WORKING almost to the hour on the schedule prepared for her months ago, Mary Garden has completed the final scenes of Goldwyn's master-production of Anatole France's "Thais." The work of assembling and titling the thousands of feet of film is now well under way at the Fort Lee studios of the company, and trade prints of the production soon will be in the hands of exhibitors throughout North America.

Goldwyn regards the prompt completion of this big production as a testimonial to the willing good nature of its star and to the efficiency of its technical staff. Frank H. Crane, the director, and Hugo Ballin, art director, mapped out a time schedule that was carefully adhered to from the filming of the first scene to the last. When it is recalled that this schedule provided for a trip to Florida and took into account all possible delays because of bad weather, it can be perceived that it was carefully arranged.

The filming of the spectacular love story was not without the little misfortunes invariably met with in such undertakings. Miss Garden and her company encountered cloudy weather in Florida for a brief twenty-four hours and a zipping nor'wester almost wrecked the Alexandria street scene erected in the studio compound; but save for those two instances there were no material delays.

While Miss Garden is enjoying a brief rest preparatory to beginning work in her next Goldwyn production, the title of which will be announced shortly, Director Crane is busy cutting, titling and assembling "Thais." In the work of titling he has an expert assistant in the person of Henri C. Olinger, professor of literature at Columbia University. Prof. Olinger, besides being an authority on the literature, art and customs of the period with which M. France's story deals, is a friend of the author.

Alaska Managers Solve Tax Problem

C. H. Code, owner of the only two theaters in Nome, Alaska, has just returned to Seattle to spend the winter. Mr. Code reports that the motion picture business had the biggest season last summer of any in the history of Nome.

The exhibitors of Alaska met the tax problem in a different way than any exhibitors of the country. Their regular price was 25 cents. The 25-cent piece is the smallest coin used in Alaska, and they did not want to necessitate the bringing in of either nickels or pennies, so they agreed among themselves to raise to 50 cents on Sundays and leave the daily admission the same. If the Sunday business is large enough to cover the tax for the week and leave any balance this balance is given to the Red Cross.

"Empty Pockets" Is Ready for Release

Brenon Picture Is Cut and Titled While Work Goes Forward on Forbes-Robertson Production

WHAT with taking scenes with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson by day and cutting and titling "Empty Pockets" by night, Herbert Brenon has had little time to call his soul his own during the past week or so.

But the result is an encouraging one, for it is now announced that still another Brenon is to see the light of day. "Empty Pockets," upon which Mr. Brenon has been working since the conclusion of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is now practically finished, and ready for release. It is his fourth big production within the year, and it is his second picture of this type, his first melodrama "The Lone Wolf" having met with success.

A scene from Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets."

Taken from Rupert Hughes' popular novel, depicting the various phases of New York life from the tenements in the slums to the mansions on Fifth avenue, "Empty Pockets" is a swift and timely melodrama. It contains that human appeal which moving picture audiences never fail to appreciate.

A Brenon picture invariably contains something that is original. Each production marks a stride forward in the right direction, and "Empty Pockets" contains several twists and turns and innovations that have never been introduced in moving picture scenarios before. It also contains some entirely novel situations.

Mr. Brenon is not a bromide of the celluloid drama. He is not content to rehash old situations and dish them up as new. He never attempts the same thing twice. That is why the announcement of a new Brenon production kindles interest among devotees of the screen.

The cast of this picture includes Barbara Castleton, Bert Lytell, Malcolm Williams, Ketty Galanta, Peggy Betts, Susanne Willa, Ben Graham and Thornton Bastion.

George Le Guere, now appearing in "Business Before Pleasure" at the Eltinge theater in New York, has been engaged to play the role of Christopher Penny, in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

Le Guere made his first hit on the stage as "Jan" the dreaming Boer boy with Lena Ashwell, the celebrated English actress in "The Shulamite." From that time on, his career has been a series of successes in New York and elsewhere. He was leading man with David Warfield, and was featured with Jane Cowl in "The Song Bird." He also appeared in "Under Southern Skies" with Henry B. Walthall, with William Hodge in "The Man from Home," playing the part of the American boy 830 times. He was also in "Rebellion" with Gertrude Elliott, in "Mr. Woo" with Walker Whiteside, "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" with Eleanor Robson, and other equally popular plays, more recently appearing with Margaret Anglin, in Mrs. Henry B. Harris' production of "A Woman of No Importance." He was most successful in his interpretation of Gerald in the famous Wilde play.

In addition to his stage activities, Le Guere has devoted much of his time to screen work, in which field he has been extremely successful.

Spectacle Booked for Extended Run

As a result of the successful sales campaign which Sawyer and Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., have recently carried out in the interest of "The Warrior," a statement was issued by them this week announcing that more than three-quarters of the available territory had been disposed of. With the completion of several contracts during the past week, the following prominent territorial purchasers are now exploiting the film spectacle starring Maciste in their respective districts: Globe Films Limited of Toronto, Canada, for the Dominion of Canada; The Allen Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota; The Clark and Rowland Theaters Company for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; The Jordan Brewster Company of Seattle, Washington, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; The Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tennessee, for Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and Alabama; The American Film Company of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and Delaware; and the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, Massachusetts, for the entire district embraced by the New England States. The picture has been booked for a week's run in a number of theaters.

Key's First Picture Has Initial Showing

Wednesday, December 12, "The Fringe of Society," a Hoffman-Foursquare feature, will have its first New York showing at Marcus Loew's New York Theater. "The Fringe of Society" is the first picture drama written by Pierre V. R. Key, a lineal descendant of Francis Scott Key, author of the Star Spangled Banner, and who has been for years the music critic of the New York World. The theme of "The Fringe of Society" is timely, its situations unique, gripping, its characters well balanced. Co-starring are Ruth Roland, Milton Sills, Leah Baird, and J. Herbert Frank.

Washington Welcomes "Fall of Romanoffs"

Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs" has just been launched under sensational auspices in Washington, following its sweeping hit in the Dominion of Canada.

The big historical production opened at Tom Moore's Strand theater in Washington on Sunday evening, December 2. Herbert Brenon was present, as was his brother, Chandos St. John Brenon, Canadian representative of the Brenon Corporation. Sergius Trufanoff, otherwise the Monk Iliodor, who enacts in "The Fall of the Romanoffs" the role he actually played in the downfall of the Czar Nicholas, appeared in person. He made an address through an interpreter.

Previous to the Washington Strand opening, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" was shown at the palatial residence of Edward B. McClean, owner of the Washington

Post. More than seventy-five guests were present, including the representative legislators, executives, diplomats and society leaders of the capital. This special showing was given on Friday evening, November 30. On the night following, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" was shown to the Washington Press Club.

The Washington Strand Theater engagement was arranged through J. D. Williams, manager of the First Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Mr. Moore is a prominent member.

Show "The Belgian" at Bazaar

The executive committee of Hero Land, in progress at the Grand Central Palace, New York, has selected Sidney Olcott's production "The Belgian" starring Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant, as the moving picture feature at the bazaar on December 5 on which date Belgium Day will be observed.

"Mother" Rights Are Going Fast

Sawyer and Lubin Dispose of Territory on McClure Feature for Nine States in Few Days

ARTHUR H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, prominent in the affairs of General Enterprises Inc., and recently appointed selling agents for the McClure feature "Mother" have created a remarkable record in the matter of territorial allotment for the latest McClure offering. Commissioned on Saturday last to promote the sales of the George Loane Tucker feature, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin on Monday had consummated contracts whereby the picture was acquired for the entire state of New Jersey by Martin Wohlfarth. The purchaser is a prominent exhibitor of New Jersey, owning several theaters in Lakewood, Springlake and Laurel, New Jersey.

This is Mr. Wohlfarth's first venture into the field of state rights and he has chosen the George Loane Tucker feature "Mother" with which to begin his exchange operations. He was influenced in this selection by the popularity of the director, George Loane Tucker, and the fame of the novel "Mother."

On Tuesday J. E. Kemp, General Manager of Wescott Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minnesota, purchased "Mother" for the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota. This organization recently acquired the rights to "The Warrior" for their particular territory and Mr. Kemp made a special flying trip to New York to witness the screening of "Mother." After an inspection of the feature he immediately closed the contract.

Wednesday afternoon Sawyer and Lubin disposed of the territory embraced by the states of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa and Nebraska to James R. Grainger, of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Grainger, who negotiated the contract for his company, purchased the rights for "The Warrior" a few weeks ago.

Mr. Sawyer attributes the remarkably quick disposition which has been made thus far to "Mother" to the state right buyers of the country to the extensive and carefully planned exploitation campaign carried out by McClure Pictures several weeks prior to the first trade showing.

Hoffman Starts Two Weeks' Trip

Head of Foursquare Making Extended Tour of the Country Visiting Exchange Managers

HOFFMAN-FOURSQUARE exchange managers are preparing for visits from their chief, M. H. Hoffman, during the coming two weeks, for he has just started on his first extended tour that will take him to all parts of the United States in the interest of his organization. Mr. Hoffman's trip is being made largely to meet personally the many leading exhibitors who want to discuss with him important matters connected with Hoffman-Foursquare plans, particularly the marketing of the big William J. Flynn serial supreme, "The Eagle's Eye."

"We have been working hard for six months now," said Mr. Hoffman, "and our exchanges are assuming their rightful degree of efficiency and importance in their respective territories. Naturally, some of those most recently established have not yet had time sufficient to get into 'full stride' but these newest offices have started in a manner that is most gratifying.

"I am anticipating, with liveliest interest, the many meetings with big exhibitors (and the smaller ones, as well,) arranged for me by my exchange managers. They all appear pleased with Foursquare product and plans, and to that end they feel that interviews can help in certain plans we are formulating.

"But especially is there a tremendously keen interest in the distribution of the forthcoming William J. Flynn serial supreme, 'The Eagle's Eye,' which the Whartons are now making. There is every indication that nothing of a serial nature ever created even a fraction of the interest now being aroused by 'The Eagle's Eye.' In the light of all this it is only natural that exhibitors from everywhere are eager to learn, by word of mouth, of the many important matters relating to this serial.

"The part of the country in which I have a deal of interest is the south, and my visits to our exchanges in Atlanta, and the Hoffman-Foursquare just opened in Dallas, as the stop I shall make at New Orleans, should prove illuminating.

"Contrary to belief which prevails in some quarters, the south is experiencing a period of prosperity that can be turned to account by motion picture organizations—if they offer what is wanted. It is a mistake to continue assuming that the south cannot give much business to the motion picture distributor.

"It is true that a year or more ago, when selling the cotton crop was so difficult, that the south felt the necessity for economy. But more than anything else that put a damper on motion picture business in that section was the quality of pictures that some concerns tried to sell.

"No one can, or should, blame the southern exhibitor for turning his back on program material of the 'ordinary garden' variety. He merely got tired of this class of picture and refused to inflict it upon his patrons. An inferior picture, cheaply made, the southern exhibitor didn't want—at any price. But some distributors incorrectly assumed that he wasn't in the market for fine product.

"My long personal contact with southern exhibitors was of great benefit. I came to understand their business sagacity, as well as their fine personal qualities. What these gentlemen want is the feature of quality—for the quality people of the south. That means pictures of six and seven reels to form the bulwark of their programs, that are strong in every particular and reflect atmosphere."

"Zep" Spectacle Booked on Big Circuits

Frank G. Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has closed contracts with the heads of a number of eastern vaudeville and picture theater circuits for week runs for his company's first special release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the Thomas H. Ince spectacle now booking in all parts of the country.

Nine big circuits will show the "Zep" production, the Loew, Fox, Moss, Poli, Gordon, Proctor, Keith, Nixon-Nirdlinger and the Hulsey chain of theaters in the south. The aggregate bookings involve upwards of 300 days.

Both Mr. Loew and Mr. Moss, who will show the "Zep" spectacle simultaneously in their theaters in the New York Metropolitan district, during what is generally considered to be the worst "show" week of the year, the week prior to Christmas.

Devises New Method for Foreign Field

Frank Hall Puts U. S. Exhibitors in Touch With Outside Market Through Robertson, Cole Company

A NEW and revolutionary method of distributing motion picture productions in the foreign market has been put into operation as a result of the consummation by Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, of one of the biggest deals on record, involving the disposal of foreign distributing privileges to productions released by his concern.

The arrangement, which involves an outlay of upwards of half a million dollars, gives to the Robertson, Cole Company of New York and London the exclusive marketing privileges to the U. S. productions, of which the new Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" is the first, the Ince drama, "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, the second, and Sydney Olcott's great drama, "The Belgian," the third.

The new system of foreign distribution, devised by Mr. Hall, employs a number of original ideas by means of which the foreign marketing of pictures will be greatly simplified. It will eliminate the expensive method of selling film productions by cable and as the Robertson, Cole Company has already established a chain of offices in all the large cities of the world, the new arrangement will enable the booking corporation to release its subjects simultaneously in all parts of the globe. It will bring the U. S. in direct communication with exhibitors in cities as far remote as Calcutta, India; Singapore, and Sydney.

In consummating the arrangement with the Robertson, Cole Company, Mr. Hall is applying to the foreign market the same ideas he put into effect in the domestic distribution of U. S. subjects. In America he selected the Hoffman-Foursquare system, the Globe Feature Film Corporation for the New England district, the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. for the territory south of the Mason-Dixon line, and the Gorsten Exchange for New Jersey. The success with which this plan operated impelled Mr. Hall to apply it to the foreign field and the deal with Robertson, Cole Company resulted.

Robertson, Cole after giving the present method of distributing films in foreign countries exhaustive study, were convinced of the efficacy of Mr. Hall's plan and decided to enlarge their system of branch offices for the express purpose of handling the output of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

It is their intention to give trade showings of U. S. subjects for exhibitors in all of the large cities of the world, to enable the various film buyers in the foreign marts to see the pictures before purchasing them.

Following its alliance with the Robertson, Cole Company, the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation will begin immediately to develop their foreign business on a large scale. A special foreign department has been established in the executive headquarters of the company in the Times Building and the foreign distribution will be under the supervision of Miss Edna Williams, through whose efforts it is understood the new alliance was consummated. Miss Williams will act as a representative of the Robertson, Cole Company and henceforth will devote her entire time to the foreign marketing of U. S. subjects.

U. S. Exhibitors' Buy "The Belgian"

Offers Sidney Olcott Production to Theaters on Open Market Plan—Walter Whiteside Stars

FRANK HALL, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has purchased outright from Sidney Olcott his production, "The Belgian," starring Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant.

"The Belgian," the story of which was written by Frederick Arnold Kummer and is founded upon the life of a Belgian artist and his adventures in the world war, will follow the big Ince productions, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay" as the third U. S. release. It will be given to exhibitors in all parts of the world on a wide open booking policy not later than January 1, 1918.

Special interest attaches to "The Belgian" inasmuch as it was written by Mr. Kummer from actual events that have transpired in Belgium, weaving into its historic atmosphere a theme that runs the gamut of human emotions, exposes the workings of the German secret service prior to the war in Belgium and with it all an engrossing love story. Mr. Kummer has agreed to allow the film to take precedence to the book which will be announced for publication shortly.

The love affair of two simple Belgians is made the sentimental backbone of a very interesting plot. The scenes showing the methods employed by German spies before the war to obtain information make many striking situations.

The production depicts the life of the Belgians before the German horde swept over the peaceful nation, portrays the heroism of the natives who rose in defence of their harassed country and shows the workings of the secret service for the Allies.

Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant head an all-star cast which is noteworthy for the excellent types it presents.

The sale of "The Belgian" was negotiated by the firm of Hiller & Wilk, of the Longacre Building, through whose offices many important state rights subjects are being distributed.

The transaction was consummated in record time. Mr. Hall viewed the production on Friday night at a special showing and the deal was closed in ten minutes on Saturday morning at the executive offices of the booking corporation in the Times Building.

Predicts Weekly Children's Day

M. J. Weisfeldt Declares Exhibitors Must Meet Popular Demand for Pictures That Interest Little Folk

THAT one day each week, evening shows included, will in the future be arranged as a children's program, is the prediction of M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager of the Wholesome Films Corporation.

Mr. Weisfeldt has just completed a painstaking investigation among exhibitors throughout the country, and upon that he bases his opinion.

"We found a very strong demand for children's programs, but an alarming shortage of pictures adaptable to them," said Mr. Weisfeldt. "I do not mean by children's programs just the so-called 'kiddie' pictures. The young of our nation have a broader appreciation of motion picture essentials than their elders permit them to have of any other sort of paid amusement.

"The result is that children demand a little bit more than the 'kiddie' picture, so called.

"The picture to suit this demand must be clean in story, action and production, yet not so adult as to be 'over the heads' of children, nor too youthful in plot to interest their elders.

"One exhibitor whom I interviewed gave me an excellent illustration. He said, 'The whole children's program demand is the old story of the circus over again. I recall how it was with my father and mother, and I know how it is since I have children. The circus, primarily for children, is an adult amusement as well, and it always will be. My father always took me to every circus that came to our town. Why did he do it? I'll tell you. There were two reasons: He wanted me to see the circus and, just as important, he wanted to see it himself. Often he would talk about it long after the activities of youth has chased the circus from off my reflective horizon. That's the answer to children's programs. Get good, clean pictures that will entertain them and also their elders, and you solve a big problem for the producer, as well as for us exhibitors, and the public.'

"Acting upon what this investigation has disclosed, Wholesome Films Corporation will offer exhibitors a complete children's program, including a novelty reel, comedy, scenic and dramatic feature.

"We have been working upon this plan for some time and can book to exhibitors, immediately, an entire children's program which will afford diversified entertainment with plenty of drama in the feature, good, clean humor in the comedy and something decidedly unique in the novelty reel."

Censors Pass "Those Who Pay"

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

Fire Cancels Shows

A fire in a building in Detroit that houses several film exchanges caused several up-Michigan theaters to go without service one Saturday night last month. The blaze started in the store room of the General Film Company's exchange in the Joseph Mack building, Detroit, and spread to other film offices in the building. The Detroit houses did not suffer, as most of the shows for the city had been delivered just previous to the fire. The blaze caused an estimated loss to the building and contents of nearly half a million dollars.

Dickson Bros. Expand

W. M. and P. H. Dickson, who form the theatrical firm of Dickson Brothers, in Wabash, Ind., are making rapid strides in the development of their enterprises. The firm owns four theaters in Wabash and recently added a fifth theater to their holdings when they purchased the Eagles' building and theater. This house is one of the best appointed playhouses in Indiana. The other theaters with which the brothers have been identified in Wabash are the Colonial, Orpheum, Family and Dreamland.

Buys Another Theater

Walter C. Kantner, manager of the Grand Theater in Reading, Pa., has purchased the Queen Theater in that city. Mr. Kantner has achieved notable success in the management of the Grand and has made that playhouse pay a larger return than any of its previous managers. The initial step in the improvement of the house after Mr. Kantner took hold was the installation of a new Wurlitzer organ. The Queen will show the most recent releases of film productions.

Cuts Out Free Shows

Ringling, Okla., exhibitors have been forced to discontinue their custom of giving free Saturday shows for the entertainment of farmers who come into Ringling to do their weekly shopping. These shows were fostered by the business men of the city who reimbursed the theater owners. Because of the war tax, which makes it necessary for everyone entering a theater to pay something, it was decided that the farmers would be permitted to pay the entire amount.

Aids Charity Campaign

The Circle Theater in Indianapolis was instrumental in making the recent campaign in that city for a $50,000 fund for destitute widowed mothers and orphan children a success. The theater's program included a special reel for half of the campaign week that brought the purpose of the fund to the attention of the public in a manner that could not be obtained in the newspapers.

New Manager Takes Charge

Cleve Chipley has taken over the management of the Gem moving picture theater in Troy, Ohio. Mr. Chipley started in the game as a projection machine operator several years ago. He has advanced steadily in the amusement profession. His first announcement on taking charge of the Gem was that there would be no increase in admission prices because of the war taxes.

Theater to Cost $10,000

A permit has been granted for the erection of a moving picture theater in North Yakima, Wash. Frederick Mercy will be the owner of the new enterprise. Mr. Mercy also is planning the erection of a $75,000 legitimate theater in North Yakima.

Shubert House Quits Stock

The Shubert Theater in Minneapolis on December 2 ceased offering stock company attractions and became exclusively a moving picture theater. Manager Charles A. Niggemeyer announced that the change had been determined upon because he was convinced that the public desired shorter entertainment, such as the screen offers, and that interest in a three-hour spoken drama was decreasing. Manager Niggemeyer will introduce the custom of showing only big features.

Potato with Admission

"Bring a potato for the Old People's Home," advertised the Sun Theater of Omaha, Neb., recently. The invitation was accepted by the patrons of the house and many bushels of "spuds" were collected in this manner. For every bushel of potatoes contributed, the management of the Sun contributed a like amount for the home.

Show Opens for Soldiers

The new moving picture theater at Herrold Station, Iowa, near Camp Dodge, was opened on Thanksgiving Day. The playhouse was erected by the Cantonment Amusement Association and is being managed by Walter F. Davis, a prominent picture theater man of Des Moines. The new theater will seat 1,500 persons. Its patrons are practically all soldiers from Camp Dodge.

Movies Help Insane

Moving picture theater owners of Pottsville, Pa., may be asked by County Judge Berger to help relieve the mental illness of persons confined in the Scuylkill county insane asylum. The grand jury of the county has recommended that moving pictures be shown regularly at the institution to afford diversion to the inmates.

Saloon Succeeded by Theater

The old Cycle Alley saloon in Fostoria, O., has given way to make room for the enlargement of the Colonial Theater. The wall that separated the saloon from the theater will be torn down and additional seats will be installed in the space. The stage of the house also will be enlarged.

Theater Costs $100,000

A new moving picture theater in Milwaukee, Wis., will soon be erected at a cost of $100,000. Contracts for the construction work have been awarded by Dr. W. G. Beecroft. The building will be located on east Mifflin street, near the postoffice and federal building.

Invents Fire Preventative

Dreams of disastrous fires in moving picture theaters caused by hot carbons coming in contact with films, caused Harry E. Smith, operator at the Iris Theater, to invent what is known as a "carbon stick holder." The holder is an iron box nine inches square, which rests upon a heavy iron stand. There is a small chute in the top of the box, closed by a trap door. When the operator wishes to discard a burned-out carbon, instead of throwing it on the floor he tosses it in the box. The weight of the carbon causes the trap to open, allowing it to slide down to the bottom of the box. The trap door then closes automatically.

Smith began working on his invention in December, 1914, and after it was completed he sent photographs of the box to the Kansas fire marshal, Topeka fire marshal and state officials, who approved his plan for minimizing the danger of fire in moving picture houses. The inventor then applied to the United States patent office at Washington for sole rights to manufacture the box and has received his patent papers.

About Worn Sprocket Holes

After reading your many articles in MOTOGRAPHY, I personally agree with you on practically all of them. I desire, however, to draw your attention to some of the viewpoints which I think that you admit in regard to the condition of film damage as explained by you in your department under date of December 1.

As a rule in the last year in all projection departments there have been many questions asked concerning moving picture films, especially sprocket holes, and in all cases from the exchange manager down, the projection machine and the operator are jointly blamed for said damage to the film.

The writer believes that the projection machine today is about as near perfect as ever a machine will be built, and only a fool will question the accuracy of the mechanism. True, some machines will become out of line, but very seldom. Three-fourths of the operators of today operating machines are far better than they have been heretofore. There is a reason for this.

Trade Papers Help

The operators of today have the aid of the projection departments of the various trade papers and many points are gained by the operators, where the access of these various departments were not to be had ten years ago.

As long as the moving picture industry exists there will always be some projection machines that will need repairing which will be neglected, and there will also be poor operators, as it will be impossible to secure twenty thousand perfect operators in the United States and Canada. In no industry are there one hundred per cent efficient mechanics.

Not Operator's Fault

Just because there are at the present time many complaints from the exchanges and amongst the operators of poor condition of film, it is not always the poor operators, or projection machine in poor condition. Why not investigate the moving picture film itself?

Sometimes when moving picture films are released by the manufacturers they are in an unfinished condition. A new moving picture film should not have an accumulation of emulsion gathering on the tension. This is the greatest damage done to a film on account of the hardening of the emulsion, which will cut the sprocket holes and weaken the film.

Emulsion Gathers On Machine

Often the emulsion does not gather on the tention springs, but other parts of the mechanism and when this hardens it will scratch the film. To eliminate this trouble, for the sake of the strength of the film, manufacturers, or the exchanges, should repair it so that the emulsion does not accumulate on any part of the mechanism of the projection machine.

Poor projection is also caused by film being very oily. It is only a few years ago that a great many complaints were made among the patrons of theaters on the flickering of pictures that hurt the eyes. The projection machine of today is made so nearly perfect that all flickering is eliminated. Oily film is bound to flicker on the screen, however.

The above conditions can easily be eliminated by the exchanges if they desire to invest a little money. Exchanges only patch the film, but they never endeavor to place in force any method to enliven the moving picture film from time to time so it does not decay and deteriorate and become weak, not only at the sprocket holes, but the condition of film in general.

Ill Used Film Is Short Lived

If there is no attempt made to hold the strength of the film the body of it is lost in a very short time. Corrosion on film will do more to weaken the life of a moving picture film than any thing else, even though it is not being projected but is left idle in the vault.

The various exchanges throughout the country are blaming the condition of the film to poor stock. Let me assert that the stock of today is just as good as ever, if not better. If the manufacturer would only take the pains when developing to give a film natural drying we would have stock as good as in former days.

Drying Is Hurried

The secret of a concern that turns out good stock, I believe, is that attention is paid to drying. If a film is dried very fast as at the present time the majority of manufacturers are doing, its life is shortened materially.

It is not the celluloid itself that causes all the trouble but it is the coating on the film known as the emulsion. When this is dried out fast the water practically is drawn out and causes a hard layer of film, which becomes very brittle and is practically bone dry. There is nothing that can prevent a film of this kind cracking at the sprockets owing to the film becoming buckled.

Remedy Is In Making

I think in the future if the film itself will be taken more in consideration when being turned out instead of blaming the projection machine and operator, when it wears out quickly more success of good condition of film will be had.

Emulsion troubles when new can be prevented. Oil and corrosion can be easily removed and the life of a film can be continued much longer than at the present time. If a film is dried very fast it has an uneven shrinkage and if the film of this kind comes in contact with a projection machine with a hinge on the side, holding the gate, the tension on the hinge side is much firmer against the film than the opposite side. If the sprocket is a little bit off something must go and naturally it is the film. Practically seventy-five per cent of film troubles are due to the film itself and not the projection machine or the operator.

Trusting that this will be of some information to enlighten you in your Projection Department of MOTOGRAPHY, and with best wishes, beg to remain.

Yours very truly,

THE REX FILM RENOVATOR MANUFACTURING COMPANY

R. D. HANISH, General Manager.

Regarding Operators' Union

Can you give me a little light on this matter, what is gained by joining the Moving Picture Operators' Union, how much does it cost, and to whom do we apply for admittance, what experience is necessary, and any other information you can give me on this will certainly be very acceptable. Yours truly, O. J. D., South Dakota.

I could best answer your first question, "What is gained by joining the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O." by giving you the Preamble of the Constitution of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. which is as follows: "We, the theatrical stage employees and moving picture machine operators of the theaters, moving picture studios and amusement places throughout the United States and Canada, in order to develop and improve our condition, to insure the maintenance of fair rate of wages, to better the working conditions of our members, to insure the employment in the various theaters, moving picture studios and amusements resorts throughout the United States and Canada of competent persons, members of this Alliance, as stage employees, clearers, carpenters, property men, fly men, electricians, electrical calcium lamp operators, picture and projecting machine operators, and that equity may be maintained, do signify willingness in all difficulties to accept any wise, honorable and conservative meditation and to secure the benefits of such unity to ourselves and posterity, do adopt and establish this Constitution."—The initiation fee of the several Locals vary so that it would be impossible for me to tell you just what it would cost you. If there is no Local in your city, then you would have to join the Local that is nearest to your city or seven operators or more can make application to the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. and a charter will be granted. Write to Mr. F. G. Lemaster, General Secretary-treasurer, 107 West Forty-sixth street, New York, N. Y., and he can give you what information you need as to where to join.

Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" Filmed

Maurice Tourneur Directs Pretentious Screening of Dramatic Classic From Pen of Noted Belgian

A STATEMENT from Walter E. Greene, President of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announces the production of a pretentious sceen version of Maurice Maeterlinck's famous stage success, "The Blue Bird." Work on this new cinema spectacle has been going on at the Fort Lee studio for the past three weeks under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who upon completing Elsie Ferguson's last picture "The Rose of the World," was selected to stage Maeterlinck's play of international fame.

"Considered the world over as a literary and dramatic masterpiece," says Mr. Greene, "this famous subject proved one of the greatest achievements of the celebrated Belgian poet and dramatic author. The fantastic play pleased young and old alike in this country as well as abroad. In London, it originally opened at the Budoir Theater in December, 1909, where it created a sensation and attracted devotees of the true dramatic art and further enhanced the fame of Maeterlinck's. Proclaimed a wondrous production of great scenic magnitude, this play was presented in ten scenes and took four hours to portray. With its American appearance in New York at the New Theater, a play house erected to present the world's most renowned dramatic offerings, the production was revived with two additional scenes, in February, 1911. Its success is now a matter of theatrical history and will be well remembered by the many thousands that crowded the theater nightly. Among the players who appeared in this presentation were Ethel Landon, Gladys Hulette, Pedre de Cordeba, Olive Wyndham, Ethel Brandon, Edith Wynne Matthison and other similarly talented artists.

"To stage the elaborate screen adaptation, which closely follows the play, Artcraft selected Maurice Tourneur. Mr. Tourneur's record as a producer of exceptionally artistic photoplays has won him an enviable standing not alone in film trade circles but among the photoplay public as well. A master of screen craft, the talented French director has always displayed in his productions a certain touch of the artist which has made them exceptionally distinctive."

Sidney Algier, former assistant to Edward Sloman, has been made acting lieutenant and is in charge of a rookie squad.

Cabanne Makes New Connection

Director of "The Slacker" and "Draft 258" Signs Contract with Herbert Lubin for "Superpictures"

HERBERT LUBIN, one of the prime movers in the affairs of General Enterprises, Inc., and the man who negotiated the contract between Madame Petrova and Superpictures, Inc., announced this week the signing of a contract by which William Christy Cabanne and Mr. Lubin have become associated in a film enterprise of considerable magnitude.

Mr. Cabanne was formerly one of the leading Metro directors and was responsible for two of the great film successes of the current year, namely "The Slacker" and "Draft 258." He is the author of both these pictures, which have recently been presented to the public through the Metro exchanges. Through the contracteral arrangement completed between Messrs. Cabanne and Lubin a series of pictures bearing the title of Cabanne Super Productions will be released during the forthcoming year.

The General Enterprises, Inc., executive has not yet decided upon the channel of distribution through which the new Cabanne productions will be presented but stated when questioned upon this point, that "he had another pleasant surprise in store for the exhibitors throughout the country."

Mr. Lubin has been an active factor in the recent sales campaign covering "The Warrior" and prior to his advent in New York film circles was the holder of the Metro franchise for the Dominion of Canada.

Minter Cast Named

Mary Miles Minter, the youngest screen star of note and important leader in studio activities of the American Film Company work at Santa Barbara, has an entirely new role in her coming picture, "Madamoiselle Tiptoe."

As "Bobbie Lee" Miss Minter is the leading spirit in an Uplift Society. Alan Forrest will play opposite and George Periolat will have a chance to wear some nifty clothes for a change from his impersonations.

Bobbie tries to reform a burglar and gets all mixed up in identities between the burglar and a young man who is anything but a burglar. But both the exemplary young man and the burglar are fond of Bobbie and they toss the ball of the story's plot so rapidly from one pair of hands to the other that interest does not flag.

Fox "Sunshine Comedies" Are Released

"His Smashing Career," the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy to be released December 9, is a story depicting the exciting and thrilling adventures of Hundred Horsepower Harry—a valiant automobile racing driver, in his efforts to win the girl, whose father does not fancy Harry in the light of a prospective son-in-law.

Various and sundry villains, and others, do everything they can to prevent Harry from winning. There are declared to be some remarkable automobile stunts in this Sunshiner, which shows the lowly flivver doing things that would tax the versatility of an aeroplane.

The cast includes Billie Richtie, who is "Little Peter"; Gertrude Selby, whose role is that of the Girl; Billy Bevan, who makes a lively Father, and Victor Slim Potel whose part is that of the judge of the races.

"His Smashing Career" was produced under the direction of Henry Lehrman.

Wins Girl Who Fainted at Movie Fight

Glenn MacWilliams, of the Douglas Fairbanks photographic staff, has won a bride through a romantic incident. In "Reaching for the Moon," the latest photoplay Fairbanks has made for Artcraft, one of the scenes called for a spirited fight between the strenuous Doug and a band of assassins. The scene was taken in a Los Angeles street, and "Bull" Montana and "Strangler" Lewis, the well known wrestlers, and "Spike" Robinson, "Kid" Fleming and "Leach" Cross, prominent knights of the padded mitts, formed the attacking party.

The melee that ensued was tremendously realistic and real blood was being spilled, when a pretty girl rounded the corner. After one horrified look she fainted away. MacWilliams stopped grinding his camera, and went to the aid of the girl. The belligerents, not noticing in the excitement that the cameraman had forsaken his job for the more pleasant occupation of reviving a pretty girl, kept on with their fight. "Spike" Robinson was the first to discover MacWilliams, down on one knee supporting the girl, who had just revived, and gazing rapturously into her eyes. "Spike" let out a yell which stopped the struggling men. Panting and bleeding, they angrily gazed at MacWilliams. Fairbanks smiled, work was stopped and the fight was re-enacted the following day.

The girl was Miss Marie Campbell of Minneapolis. MacWilliams made a whirlwind courtship during the short time she was in Los Angeles, and now their engagement is announced.

Russell, Socialist Leader, Becomes Film Actor

Charles Edward Russell, the famous Socialist leader, has just made his first appearance before a motion picture camera at the Herbert Brenon Studios. Mr. Russell was one of the principal members of the Root Commission to Russia and, since his return to this country, has lectured and written extensively on the birth of democracy in Russia.

At the Brenon Studios scenes were staged depicting the arrival of the commission in Petrograd, the reception of Mr. Russell by the Duma, his welcome by the committees of workingmen as the representative of American Labor, and glimpses of the commission touring the new republic in the former Czar's royal train, which was placed at the disposal of Elihu Root and his associates.

The new scenes are to be incorporated in Mr. Brenon's production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," which already has achieved a Broadway success and is selling on the state rights plan.

Mr. Brenon felt that the historical production, which depicts the great Russian giant in the moment of smashing the bonds of autocracy, needed a glimpse of the American commission to bring it to a fitting conclusion, and he arranged for this climax with a hand-across-the-sea welcome from one republic to another.

Billie Rhodes Appears with Bare Knees

Billie Rhodes, the dainty little comedienne who is appearing in Mutual-Strand comedies, wears a cute little Buster Brown outfit—bare knees and all—in "That Dog Gone Dog," the one reel comedy which was released last month.

The plot revolves around a masquerade party to which Jay Belasco, as the hero, goes as a dog, gets mixed up with a regular dog and commits many serious social errors.

Huchinson Sees Good Year Ahead

President of American Film Company Just Back From Pacific Coast Is Optimistic Regarding 1918

"'THE STORY OR THE STAR' is about as full of discussion possibilities as the 'Lady or the Tiger,'" said Samuel S. Hutchinson, just back in his Chicago office from an inspection trip to Santa Barbara. "The American Film Company expects to have both. We have about as finely equipped studios out on the west coast as can be found anywhere and on my last trip I spent considerable time going over the improvements in the technical department there.

"What we want to accomplish is a balanced development. Our technical department is second to none in this country and we are planning to make it even better and wider in scope and possibilities. As to the stories in view for next year, I am very well pleased with those for which we have just completed arrangements. We have in prospect some of the best writers in the country who are now preparing special vehicles for our stars. I believe in emphasizing talents and we are having all vehicles written especially for our stars for next season. Our success with the special features written for Miss Minter, William Russell, Miss Juliette Day and Miss Margarita Fischer has convinced us that this is the thing to do.

"High cost is not going to deter us from putting out the very best productions possible. We have such writers now on our staff as Charles T. Dazey, James Edward Hungerford, Beatrice Van, Henry Albert Phillips and Daniel Frederick Whitcomb and we expect to add more as the occasion requires. I believe that a good story is next in importance to a good star. In fact, they are co-equal.

"We are very optimistic over the outlook for the coming year. In spite of—or perhaps I might say, because of—the film disturbances of the past year, I look for a most successful film business in 1918.

Exchange Men Work Night and Day

IN the interest of better service for the exhibitor, Greater Vitagraph has recently added to its force of inspectors, in all of its exchanges, and is working on a night and day basis in many cities to keep film in the highest state of perfection at all times.

In the New York Exchange, the company has taken additional space in the Mecca building, 1600 Broadway, New York, three thousand square feet of floor space having been leased to accommodate the reel department. Two huge vaults and two additional inspection rooms have been constructed on the tenth floor of the building and the work of moving part of the thousands of reels into the new quarters is almost completed.

During the recent trip of the company's sales executives to the various branches, a thorough check was made on film handling in each office and, without exception it was found that the system in force is wellnigh mistake-proof. Every reel of film that goes out is doubly inspected, first when it is handed to an exhibitor and second, when it is returned by him. In order to do this it was necessary to increase the inspection force and every exchange has had added to it one or more inspectors.

The handling of green film has been another important part of this service. With the view of prolonging the life of film, Vitagraph installed in each of its branches a waxing machine, and just as soon as a new print arrives from the laboratory, it is run through this machine. This is done for the purpose of hardening the emulsion on the film, reducing the possibility of scratching and ripping of sprocket holes.

Next Year's Pictures In the Making

Edna Goodrich, Broadway favorite, has been furnished with the best medium of her quintette of dramas bearing the Mutual stamp in "Her Second Husband," a clever satire on modern social conditions in Gotham, written for her by Hamilton Smith. It is set for release December 31.

The new play has to do with the disturbing influence of "war brides" on Wall Street's social centers, and it gives Miss Goodrich opportunity to display her genius in characterization.

Ann Murdock has been devoting herself to the completion of "My Wife," a Broadway success, which has been produced at the Glendale, L. I., studios of the Empire All Star Corporation under direction of Dell Henderson. This play gives Miss Murdock her chance to show why the late Charles Frohman called her his "baby star."

Included with Miss Murdock in the original cast of "My Wife" are Herbert Druce, formerly with Sir Henry Irving; Amy Veness, a widely known on the speaking stage; Rex McDougal and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

Another production just finished at the Glendale studios is "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell who is supported by David Powell as leading man. "The Girl and the Judge" was written by Clyde Fitch. It was one of the best paying speaking stage productions of the last decade.

All producing companies of the Mutual have interesting releases pending. At the Santa Barbara studios Mary Miles Minter is putting the finishing touches on "Mlle. Tiptoe," which has been directed by Henry King.

William Russell, athletic idol of the screen, is splendidly suited in his latest play, "In Bad," which is scheduled for early release on Mutual calendar.

Margarita Fischer is engaged under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham in the production of "Molly Go Get 'Em."

Three Win Promotions on Merit

The Greater Vitagraph Company announces three new branch manager appointments, each in the nature of a promotion. A. G. Edwards now has charge of the Denver office, J. M. Tally, in Seattle, and G. A. Faris, in Los Angeles.

Mr. Edwards came to the Denver exchange in April, 1916, as a stenographer and close application to work made him a booker in two months. Ten months later he had been advanced to the selling force, where he has maintained a consistently high average week after week. Now, with his seven months' sales experience and previous office work, he has been made head of the Denver organization, filling the position made vacant by the transfer of Mr. Tally to Seattle.

Mr. Tally's appointment to Seattle marks his fifth promotion in less than two years. He entered the service of Vitagraph in January, 1916, as shipping clerk in the Los Angeles office. He served in that capacity for eight months before becoming a booker and after another three months he was transferred to Salt Lake City as salesman. He made such a success in the new territory he was made a branch manager in three months and on March 26 was given charge of the Denver office. Now comes his fifth promotion to the larger office in Seattle.

Mr. Faris was originally a salesman in the Los Angeles office for almost a year, earning his branch manager's spurs in September, 1916, when he was sent to Seattle. His promotion is doubly gratifying since he now returns as chief executive to his former office and his many friends in Los Angeles will warmly welcome him back.

Rain Causes No Delay

The filming of exterior scenes for the motion picture version of George Weston's novel, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" with Madge Kennedy as the star, is progressing satisfactorily in Georgia, according to telegraphic reports from the company, which is working on location with Savannah as headquarters.

Several successive days of cloudy, half rainy weather delayed the camera work for just that length of time, but Miss Kennedy and the eighteen members of her company were not idle. Director Arthur Ashley, making the most of the situation, caused a dozen scenes to be rehearsed in the ballroom of the hotel. This saved several hours in the aggregate when the time came to "shoot" the scenes.

"Miss Jackie of the Army"

Margarita Fischer in an American-Mutual Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS comedy drama starring Margarita Fischer has a patriotic flavor which gives it timeliness without making it a "war picture." It is similiar in type to the previous comedy dramas Miss Fischer has made for Mutual release. Her role is that of the daughter of a commander at an army post. She is continually getting into mischief but at last proves her worth by leading in the exciting capture of a spy.

Lloyd Ingraham directed the story, which was written by Beatrice Van and William Parker. It is well photographed and well acted. The plot is not very strong but comedy situations have been brought in to hold the interest. While it is not the funniest picture Miss Fischer has had, it will be liked by audiences which have appreciated her other comedy drama appearances.

Jack Mower plays opposite Miss Fischer. L. C. Shumway is the spy. Hal Clements plays the father. California troops appear in the picture, which will add to its local interest.

December 10 is the release date.

The story: Jackie Kerwood is the daughter of a commander of an army post. She wishes she were a boy so that she could enlist in the army. Knitting and Red Cross work do not appeal to her. Wishing to be a modern Joan of Arc, she begins to train the girls of her acquaintance in military tactics. When her father finds them playing with his prize collection of firearms, he disbands the army and reproves Jackie.

Then she decides to run away and be a Red Cross nurse. As she is stealing away at night, she sees one of the lieutenants enter an unused house, and she becomes suspicious. She returns home, determined to investigate further.

Lieutenant Adair also becomes suspicious of the supposedly deserted house and goes the next night to find out who is there. He is trapped, for the place is the headquarters of German spies who are preparing to blow up a troop train that day. Jackie reports her observations to her father and other officers rush to the house, rescue Adair and destroy the electricial contrivance which was to wreck the train. Jackie's father forgives her the pranks she has committed and realizes, when she and Adair declare their love, that she is really grown-up.

"The Fighting Trail"

Episode 13. "The Water Trap." Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

SELDOM have more exciting scenes been depicted in moving pictures than the ones shown in "The Fighting Trail." This episode is as thrilling as its predecessors and the action as smooth and brisk. There are some scenes taken under water which are very effective.

Carol Halloway and William Duncan, who are the stars in this serial, continue to amaze spectators by their feats of daring. William Duncan has splendidly directed the picture.

Nan and Gwyn, locked in a steal vault which the bandits have flooded, manage to escape, by attaching a fuse to the steal door and blowing it open.

The outlaws stop activities for a while and then send a confederate from Mexico in an aeroplane to drop bombs down upon the mine.

"Raffles"

"RAFFLES" as a picture does not disappoint. It is presented by L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, and Hiller and Wilk have the exclusive selling rights.

It contains all of the essentials necessary to a production of importance, a magnetic and popular star, the evidence of excellent direction and camera effects and last, but by no means least, a story which has a far-famed reputation. The return of John Barrymore to the screen is, in itself, a treat and, if for no other reason than this, "Raffles" should be warmly received.

The picture contains a prologue which has been artistically arranged and excellently photographed. This prologue is quite the best bit in the picture. The screen version, as it now stands, is a little too long to maintain the dash and spirit throughout the entire transmission which this sort of offering demands. It is seven reels in length, and the story might easily have been told in five without materially hurting the main theme.

"Raffles" is altogether a production of merit and should prove a lucrative asset to any exhibitor. John Barrymore acts with an ease and nonchalance which is very refreshing. Decidedly his best work is along comedy lines. Frederick Perry, H. Cooper Cliffe, Frank Morgan, Christine Mayo and Evelyn Brent are others who do pleasing work. Anthony Kelly prepared the scenario from the original story by E. W. Hornung and George Irving directed the picture which was photographed by Harry B. Harris.

The story of "Raffles," the Amateur Cracksman, is almost too well known to invite description. The action starts on a steamship where Raffles, posing as a count, gains the information through Mrs. Vidal that a priceless pearl is in the possession of a certain man on the boat. Raffles cleverly steals it, jumps overboard and swims ashore, but is seen by Mrs. Vidal.

He next appears in England with entry into the most exclusive circles. He steals for the love of stealing and the excitement of the chase but never robs the poor.

At a house-party at the home of Lord Amersteth where Raffles is a guest, the chief topic of conversation is the "Cracksman" and his numerous exploits. As Lady Amersteth owns a valuable diamond necklace the services of Captain Bedford, an amateur detective, are obtained, for fear it might prove a lure to the "Cracksman."

Mrs. Vidal arrives at the house-party and recognizes Raffles, but keeps her silence as she is in love with him. The famous diamond necklace is stolen in due course, and everyone is at a loss as to who is the thief. Captain Bedford believes Raffles to be guilty but cannot prove it.

The rest of the story revolves around Raffles' clever elusion of the detective and of his subsequent get-away after returning the stolen jewels.

The Co-respondent

Five-Reel Jewel Production Directed by Ralph Ince. Reviewed by Lapearl Waggoner.

THIS is an interesting, probable story well pictured. There is good action, just enough of it, and some very skillful acting on the part of one or two of the players. All of them are well cast. The title suggests a somewhat different story, but after viewing it most people will agree that it couldn't have been called anything else. One or two little illogical situations won't escape the eagle eye of some patrons. The dramatic element is a strong one.

As Jeoffrey Manning, the editor of a metropolitan daily, Wilfred Lucas contributes no small part of the entertainment. A fight between Manning and Langdon Van Kreil (George Anderson) will have young and old sitting on the edge of their seats. Elaine Hammerstein is Ann Gray, the perfectly innocent co-respondent, and she adds, in this production, to the record she has made for the handling of difficult roles with delicacy and charm.

The story: In a little, narrow village of New England lives Ann Gray, an orphan, with her Becky Sharpe kind of an aunt. She is a child of temperament and imagination, little understood by her aunt and neighbors. On the typewriter left her by her father she pounds out some stories which are accepted by the Ledger, a daily of New York.

Chance brings into her life Langdon Van Kreil, a millionaire, who amuses himself at flirting. Under an assumed name he persuades her to meet him at the Junction hotel where they will be married. Before the ceremony can be performed they are surprised by two detectives in the employ of Van Kreil's wife, who is looking for grounds for a divorce. Ann is astonished to learn that he is already married, and escapes.

She takes a train to New York, secures work on the Ledger, and with her very unusual ability becomes one of their best reporters in a few months. Working with Jeoffrey Manning, the editor, their mutual interest and admiration grows from friendship into love.

Into the office of Manning there comes one of those society parasites who love to prattle, with the choice news that Mrs. Langdon is suing for a divorce. The name of the co-respondent cannot be learned. Facing a suit for libel, Lanning sends Ann Gray to learn the name of the co-respondent, and to her horror she finds that it is her own. Entirely innocent, her presence in the Junction hotel has been the evidence upon which the suit has been brought.

Whether she must tell Jeoffrey and shatter her romance, or see his career ruined, Ann must now decide. When she returns to the office Van Kreil is there and before him she tells Jeoffrey the truth. Then she goes out to her typewriter and writes the biggest scoop that has ever appeared in the Ledger, while in his office Jeoffrey gives Van Kreil the thrashing of his life in the good old American way.

After the story is out Jeoffrey takes Ann by the hand and with her appears before his assistant's desk, asking him to announce in the Ledger their engagement and marriage.

"The Learnin' of Jim Benton"

Triangle Picture with Roy Stewart. Released December 9. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

THE old feud between the sheep and cattle men is the point of interest around which this story revolves. It provides clean, lively entertainment of the western sort and has an appeal in spite of the fact that some of the situations are rather hackneyed. The climax, for instance, depends upon the time-worn episode of the Governor's pardon arriving at the propitious moment to save the hero from the hangman's noose.

Roy Stewart takes the lead in this picture which was written by Al Neitz, directed by Cliff Smith and pleasingly photographed by C. G. Crane.

The first half of the picture is given over to comedy and shows a group of uneducated cowpunchers attending school in Jim Benton's barn, with a pretty little school mistress presiding. Fritzi Ridgeway takes the part of the school teacher and she is delightful. Roy Stewart makes a manly and convincing hero and the minor parts are all capably handled.

The story: Jim Benton never took any interest in book-learnin' until the little school teacher, Evelyn Hastings, turned his barn into a school-room and proceeded to educate all the cowpunchers on his ranch. One of the first things Jim learned was that he was in love with Evelyn.

Roy Stewart and Fritzi Ridgeway

The sheep men planned to shut off the water supply from Jim's Flying B ranch. School stopped, and the cowpunchers, headed by Jim, journeyed to the dam which had been closed and which was now guarded by the sheep men. Jim had promised Evelyn that he would only draw a gun in self-defense and he kept his promise. One of the sheep men, however, was killed in the skirmish and they fixed the killing on Jim for revenge.

Jim was arrested and sentenced to be hanged. His friends did all they could to save him but the judge had been bribed and it was a jury of sheep men which returned the verdict of death.

The cowpunchers all gathered together and planned to rescue Jim by force if all else failed. Fearing a riot, the governor arrived in town and Evelyn appealed to him for a more thorough investigation of Jim's case.

It was proved that a false story had been invented by the sheep men and the governor's pardon arrived just as Jim was being led to the gallows.

"The Good for Nothing"

World Picture Featuring Carlyle Blackwell. Released December 10. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

THE situations in this play, while not out of the ordinary, are of the type which have proved popular in the past with picture fans. They are arranged in this story in a fashion which allows Carlyle Blackwell to play a pleasing role, and are effective if a little forced.

The characters are conventional ones, well known to picture enthusiasts. There is the disinherited son who finally makes good, the worthless step-brother who goes the pace, the wronged girl, the vaudeville actress with a passion for jewels, and the cold mother who finally realizes the worth of the son she cast off. Some humor has been interpolated into the play.

Carlyle Blackwell does as well with his role as he could be expected to do but while his many admirers will doubtless enjoy his performance, the part will add no new laurels to his name. Muriel Ostriche and Evelyn Greeley, whose names are featured with Blackwell's, have little to do in the picture but do that little well.

The story: Jack Burkshaw arrives home after an absence of ten years to find that his mother has married again and that he is not particularly welcome in the new family which includes a step-brother and sister. The step-brother, Jerry Alston, is a worthless young fellow who is infatuated with a vaudeville actress.

Barbara Manning, Jerry's stenographer, begs him to do the honorable act, under the circumstances, and marry her, but Jerry refuses to listen to her pleading. Instead he engages himself to an heiress from whom a short time before he had stolen a necklace. Jack is accused of the theft, and distrusted by his mother.

Despairing that his mother hasn't more faith in him, Jack decides at least to make a man of his step-brother. He kidnaps Jerry on the day of his wedding to the heiress, compells him to marry Barbara, returns the necklace to its rightful owner and wins the confidence of his mother as well as the love of his step-sister.

"The Dream Doll"

Animated Toys Enact a Five-Reel Essanay-Perfection Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

EXCEPT for a brief introduction and conclusion in which real players appear, this five reel feature is worked out by dolls, under the direction of Howard S. Moss. Technically, the picture is remarkably clever. The animation is very smooth and the photography does not produce eyestrain. The film is a novelty and very amusing. Clever little comedy touches are present throughout the story.

Much of the success of this play will depend on its presentation. It is ideal, of course for children's matinee performances, especially for the very little children. An exhibitor looking for a special picture for them during the Christmas holidays should make a note of this one. He can scarcely find a better. But the picture represents so much work and such technical skill that with the proper advertising it should attract adults as well. Presented as an ordinary feature, it may not be appreciated.

Marguerite Clayton, Rodney LaRoque, Bobby Bolder and Ernest Maupain are the real players who appear in support of the dolls.

The story: A. Knutt, an eccentric toy-maker, makes a boy doll whose features resemble the young man with whom the girl of the story is in love. This girl (Marguerite Clayton) is still very fond of dolls and is charmed with this toy. She expresses a wish that the dolls might come to life. While waiting in the toy-shop for her fiance, she falls asleep and dreams that a magic elixir of life has not only brought the doll to life but has changed her into a doll. Thereupon the two dolls begin a series of adventures which includes their marriage and the shopping for their home and a long journey during which they are separated and then rescued and brought together by a friendly dog. Finally the girl awakens, astonished to find it all a dream.

"Fanatics"

Triangle Picture. Released December 9. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"FANATICS" is extravagant melodrama with the scenario prepared by Joseph A. Roach from the story by John Lynch. It was directed by Raymond B. Wells. There are some scenes which would occasion a gasp from the most blasé, such as a man falling into a caldron of molten iron, and a girl being trampled under the feet of a furious mob. It is decidely and unapologetically of the ten, twenty, thirty variety and as such will prove popular with many. Whatever it lacks in edifying entertainment is reimbursed by thrills of a proportionate magnitude.

The players have a tendency to overact which might be due to the fact that the characters are not always quite convincing. This is so often true of melodramatic types. Adda Gleason, J. Barney Sherry, William V. Mong and Olga Grey take the leading parts.

The story rather outdoes itself for plot. Robert Lathrop is infatuated with Lola Monroe and borrows money from Nicholas Eyre, with which to buy her gifts. After receiving a check for a thousand dollars he hastens to her apartments to find her in the arms of her lover, Billie Haskell. Haskell kills Lathrop and carries his body to a park where the police find it the next morning and brand it as a suicide.

Mary Lathrop, believing her husband killed himself, puts the blame upon Nicholas Eyre who, she thinks, would not loan the money to help her husband out of his difficulties.

She joins a band of anarchists headed by Professor Groesbeck and accepts employment in the office of Eyre as private secretary. Eyre is owner of a large iron factory and Mary incites the workmen to revolt. A strike is planned of which Eyre is warned by Lola Monroe who has been trying to ensnare the financier.

Eyre reaches the factory in time to pacify the workmen. Mary swoons and is trampled under the feet of the mob and Eyre carries her to her home where he gives her every attention.

When Mary has recovered she goes to her office to gather together her belongings, and discovers on Eyre's desk the returned check which her husband had received from Eyre, endorsed by Lola Monroe. In a flash she realizes the duplicity of her husband and the kindness of the man she had tried to ruin. Eyre forgives her and claims her for his wife.

Bluebird Picture Version of "Anthony the Absolute." Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

SAMUEL MERWIN'S novel, of which this is a picture version, contained more charm than plot. The characters were out of the ordinary and were delicately sketched against the interesting background of Japanese life. Rupert Julian, who directed this picture, has caught very nicely the pervading spirit of Merwin's story and has made of it a dainty, pretty photoplay which, while not as strong dramatically as it might be, is interesting and appealing. The leading players, Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, enact difficult roles skillfully and with understanding. George A. McDaniels draws a vivid characterization of Archibald Crocker, and W. H. Bainbridge makes a small role stand out.

The entire story takes place in Japan. The sets are interesting and well photographed, The picture will, we believe, be liked by those who have read the story and also by patrons who enjoy pretty, charming plays. Audiences which crave stronger fare, excitement and tensely dramatic moments, will not be as well pleased. The success of the offering will depend largely upon the type of audience before which it is presented.

The story occurs in Japan

The story: Anthony is a quiet, almost bashful young man, who is devoting his life to the study of Oriental music. He is in Japan for this purpose but has trouble in making correct phonographic records of the geisha girls' songs. One day he meets Archibald Crocker, a young Englishman who is drinking heavily. Crocker tells Anthony that he has come to Japan to find his wife, a musician who had eloped with another man. Crocker intends to kill them both. Anthony, very much shocked, tries to dissuade Crocker.

In another city in Japan, Anthony is given a hotel room next to that of a young woman who has a wonderful voice. Anthony, overcoming his shyness, persuades her to help him in collecting the folk-songs he wishes. A companionship, pleasant in spite of the mystery and sadness which surrounds the woman, develops into love. Then Anthony learns that Heloise is the wife of Crocker and that the latter has arrived in the city. Anthony meets Crocker and begs for Heloise's life. He suggests that both give her up and allow her freedom to continue her musical career. Crocker, under the influence of drink, refuses to listen to this plea. But after a number of other complications, the man, considering his life a failure, frees his wife by committing suicide. Anthony offers to finance Heloise's musical training, but to his surprise she prefers to stay with him in Japan as his wife.

"Nearly Married"

Goldwyn Picture with Madge Kennedy. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE selection of Madge Kennedy's second screen venture was a happy one, as it provides its clever star with ample opportunities to display her buoyant personality and abilities as a comedienne. "Nearly Married" will, no doubt, in comparison with "Baby Mine," be weighed and found wanting, but it does nicely for light comedy entertainment and Madge Kennedy's popularity will make it successful.

The vehicle will be recognized as having been taken from one of Edgar Selwyn's popular plays of a few years ago, and as a picture it preserves its mirth-provoking qualities to a satisfying degree. It brought forth many chuckles of merriment at the Strand Theater, New York, the week of November 25, and patrons seemed to find in it excellent entertainment.

A girl who has been suing for divorce the husband whom she still loves meets with a ludicrous angle of the divorce problem when confronted with the knowledge that she may not, without a complete disregard for Mrs. Grundy, spend the night with him at an inn. Also, as she stipulated in the divorce that he was not to remarry, she ensounters the awkward fact that he may not even remarry her. The picture has been noticeably padded but cleverly so, and the action, which doesn't start at a full gallop until the fourth reel, then maintains a steady pace until the finish. It has been excellently directed by Chester Withey and the entire production comes up to the high Goldwyn standards.

Madge Kennedy gives an excellent and effervescing performance throughout the picture and the supporting company is highly efficient. Richard Barthelmess as Brother Dick gives an amusing portrayal of a meddlesome fellow, and Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell and Hedda Hopper leave nothing to be desired.

The story: Betty Linsey quarrels with her husband on their wedding night and leaves him. The bridegroom, Harry Linsey, thinking her happiness depends upon it, offers to give her grounds for an absolute divorce, and to do so is seen in the company of a professional home-wrecker, Hattie King.

Just before the divorce is granted Betty and Harry meet, and making up their quarrel they elope to a roadhouse where they expect to spend the night. Brother Dick, who caused all the trouble in the beginning, follows hot on their trail with Tom and Gertrude Robinson, Betty's best friends. The couple is informed that an absolute divorce has just been granted them, and they cannot with impunity carry out their intentions. They are also appraised of the fact that they may not marry each other again in New York State.

Hattie King's car becoming disabled, she is compelled to stop at this same inn, and an over-zealous inn-keeper gives her the room occupied by Harry. Complications arise when Betty finds her in Harry's room. A fire in the garage where Brother Dick was sleeping brings everyone into a high state of excitement and intimacy, and in the confusion, Betty and Harry are reconciled. The last seen of them is in Hattie's limouisine in which they elope to New Jersey for the proper license.

"The Tenderfoot"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature with William Duncan and Carol Halloway. Released December 3. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

THIS is an adaption of another "Wolfville" story made famous by Alfred Henry Lewis, and it is equal to, if not better than the previous one. It consists of any number of exciting incidents which make it one of the best of western pictures, and it will prove distracting entertainment for lovers of plenty of action on the screen and cleverly drawn types.

Indians give a colorful touch to some of the scenes and the locations have all been selected with an eye for beauty. It is all in all a splendid, red-blooded western picture which starts in at the beginning to entertain and continues to do so until the final reel has been unwound.

The mainstay of interest is a tenderfoot hero who proves his fearlessness and consequently his worth after journeying to the west to forget the sweetheart back home who had treated him heartlessly. Once started the "Tenderfoot" stops at nothing. After an attack upon a stage coach in which he is a passenger, he unaided holds back a band of Indians at a rocky mountain pass, and shoots them down to the last man before help arrives. He also, at a great risk, saves the Eastern girl from a number of embarrassing situations and is only rewarded by her insults until a wholesome western girl steps in to compensate him for all he has been made to suffer.

The acting throughout the picture impresses one as being very convincing. William Duncan as the "Tenderfoot" plays with force and ability and Carol Halloway as the western girl is ever delightful. Joe Ryan is splendid in a villanous role.

The story, when one comes to consider it, is merely a series of exciting events, well knit together, which show the worth of the hero before he finally wins for himself a bride.

Jim Benton journeys to the west to try and forget Ellen Rogers. In due time he is confronted by that young lady who has come on a tour west with her father.

While on an inspection of the surrounding country, Ellen, to arouse Jim's jealousy, invites the attentions of a young Indian brave of a neighboring camp. Soon after, the Indian sends her ponies which she accepts, only to learn from Jim that that is an Indian custom asking her in marriage, and that by accepting the gift she has thus pledged herself to marry the redman.

Ellen, distracted, begs Jim to help her and promises to marry him if he will save her. As Jim loves her more than life he compels the Indian to fight for her, only to discover when the Indian has been killed that Ellen is incapable of gratitude.

Ellen starts a flirtation with "Smiling" Jack Douglas, the bad man of the town, and in a fight which follows Jim's life is only saved by Cynthia, the western girl, who exchanges the cartridges in Douglas' revolver for harmless ones. When Cynthia explains to Jim that her act was prompted by love for him he deems himself well rid of his first fickle love who had hastily departed at the first sign of danger.

The filming of the funeral services of late Queen Liliuokalani, of Hawaii, rights for which were secured from the government of the islands by George Melford, for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, while he was in Honolulu to take scenes for a new Sessue Hayakawa picture for Paramount, will not be in the usual "news-weekly" style, but in great detail. Every episode of this ceremony was taken consecutively. It is the last time a funeral will be held with the ancient native rites and a copy of the positive will be sent to the territorial government for preservation in the archives. Director Melford will bring the film back with him when he returns to the Pacific coast studios.

Wheeler Oakman has been engaged to play opposite Edith Storey in her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "Revenge," from the scenario by H. P. Keeler. Mr. Oakman will be remembered for his portrayal of the leading role opposite Mae Murray in her recent feature, "Princess Virtue."

Work progresses rapidly on Tom Mix's first drama for William Fox. The picture, which tells a thrilling story of the Golden West, has been titled "Cupid's Round-Up." Edward J. LeSaint and Mix himself are staging the production.

Theda Bara reckons among her most precious possessions a collection of silhouettes of herself in all the various characters she has portrayed for her many William Fox pictures. These black and white portraits have been made by one of the best artists of New York.

Jane Lee is possessed of a full-grown appetite. In a photoplay Jane and Katharine are now making, there is a banquet scene, and a big supply of cakes, jellies and jams were requisitioned from a restaurant and placed on the table. Jane watched her chance. Ten minutes after most of the people in the scene had gone, the cakes had also gone—and with them, part of a peach pie and gooseberry jam. Jane Lee did not report at the studio next day.

Gladys Brockwell made her stage debut when she was only a few months old. Her first speaking part was that of the newsboy in "Charity Ball" at the age of three. At seven, she was a member of the Lyceum Stock Company in Brooklyn. Miss Brockwell then literally grew up with repertoire companies. In 1913, she entered the cinemas.

Two elements are essential to the proper method of making animals act before the motion picture camera: First, being kind to the animals; second, being sarcastic enough to the actors to overcome any qualms they may have. These statements are made on the authority of Henry Lehrman, who had charge of producing the Sunshine comedy, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," for William Fox.

Having reproduced the Sphinx and Pyramids of ancient Egypt for "Cleopatra"; the mosques and minarets of oriental Bagdad for "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"; the Nashville of 1830 for "The Conqueror," and the streets of Paris, with all their turbulence, for "Les Miserables," and "Du Barry"—and all in films this year, too, the William Fox technical department scores another triumph in the construction of trenches and tanks exactly like those "over there." The new products of building genius will be seen in "The Pride of New York," a forthcoming photoplay starring George Walsh.

Change Name of Alice Brady Picture

Alice Brady's second Select production, in which she plays the immortal role of "Jane Eyre," is now finished and cutting of the film is under way.

The screen version has been taken

Alice Brady, Select star

from an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, and owing to certain necessary departures from the plot of the original story, the book title, "Jane Eyre," is not being used. "Woman and Wife" was adopted in its stead.

"Woman and Wife" has been screened under the direction of Edward Jose, who directed Miss Brady's first Select production, "Her Silent Sacrifice."

Marjorie Daw, leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks in his new picture to be released by Artcraft, "The Modern Musketeer," fell from her horse in a scene of this picture last week and broke her leg. Shortly after the accident, Miss Daw received the news that her mother had passed away. The film will have to be held up until Miss Daw recovers.

Charles J. Brabin, Metro director, was a stage director before he entered motion picture direction. In his former line of endeavor, Brabin designed forty stage settings a week for several noted directors. He directed his first photoplay in 1910, and has made a reputation for himself as a producer of feature pictures.

Viola Dana, who is now working at the west coast studios of Metro, has had one of her dearest wishes gratified. She has met, talked and joked with the famous comedian, Charlie Chaplin.

Sidney Drew made his first professional appearance in "Our Boarding House" in Philadelphia. He was engaged by Charles Frohman to support Rose Eytinge and Ada Dyas. Later he organized his own company and toured the country in "The Rivals," "The Road to Ruin" and other plays.

Because she spends a part of each year in Mexico, Vivian Rich can speak Spanish like a native.

Nazimova, who will soon be seen in the Metro super-production, "The Revelation," which was directed by George D. Baker, was born in a small town in Russian Crimea on the shores of the Black sea. As a child she was taken to Switzerland, where she was educated until she was twelve, when she returned to her native town in Russia.

Dorothy Dalton is exceedingly versatile. Besides acting, she has written and produced sketches for the speaking stage; has been leading woman of some of the best known companies and is now a favorite with screen patrons.

William Parker, of the Metro scenario department, is busily engaged preparing for the screen Viola Dana's forthcoming play, "The House of Hearts," based upon Myrtle Reed's novel, "A Weaver of Dreams."

In Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture, "Stella Marie," now being staged by Marshall Neilan, the popular little queen of the screen co-stars with herself. In other words she appears in two chief characters in the same picture for the first time since she started "play-acting" before the camera. The two roles present a striking contrast. In one Mary appears with her curls and her usual pretty frocks and in the other she portrays the part of a poor, ragged slavey.

Elsie Ferguson, despite her tremendous success on the stage, always found it within human possibility to handle her personal correspondence herself. Soon after her debut as a screen star, however, in "Barbary Sheep," the beautiful actress found it necessary to hire a secretary to assist her in taking care of the hundreds of daily letters from admirers. With the release of her second Artcraft picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," Miss Ferguson's secretary, after spending many days and nights in an effort to catch up with the work, requested further assistance with the result that the popular stage and screen star now has two secretaries. "If my mail increases with each picture so that I'll have to hire another secretary every time one of my films is released I should have a good sized business organization in a year," smiled Miss Ferguson, recently, whereupon she dictated a reply to a farmer's daughter who had written in for a pattern of the dress she wears in a certain scene of "The Rise of Jennie Cushing."

And Mark Twain must have been some happy boy.

The Land of Promise—(FIVE REELS)—PARAMOUNT—DECEMBER 10. Starring Billie Burke. Miss Wickham was a crabbed old lady and it was no small joke to nurse and care for her. When her daddy has died and left her alone Esther makes the acquaintance of the Lawlors. Later she rescues their daughter from the attentions of a baseball player, burns up the entire edition of a "yellow sheet," which is about to publish the story, and finally marries the manager, who is not in sympathy with the ideas of the owner.

About this time his mother-in-law takes a hand in a most unusual way.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

MAJOR M. L. Funkhouser of Chicago, in his capacity of film censor, and George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information in Washington, have clashed and Mr. Creel says the Major is not altogether correct in certain statements attributed to him.

Major Funkhouser refused to pass the film play, "The Rose of Blood," produced by the Fox Film Corporation, and is said to have given as his controlling reason the fact that he had been requested by Mr. Creel to reject it.

At the offices of the Committee on Public Information the statement was made that no request had ever been sent to Major Funkhouser to reject "The Rose of Blood" or any other film play. An injunction proceeding is pending in this case before Federal Judge Carpenter.

Powers Endorses Get Together Move

DECLARES THERE SHOULD BE ONE UNITED EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATION

ADDITIONAL endorsements of MOTOGRAPHY's advocacy of a united exhibitor organization are being received daily. Representative men in all branches of the industry are alert to the necessity for concerted and harmonious activity on the part of the theater owners of the country.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and one of the leading figures in the motion picture industry, has endorsed wholeheartedly MOTOGRAPHY's editorials on the subject of a united national organization of exhibitors.

Ambitious Leaders Misguide

In a letter Mr. Powers says:

"It seems that the exhibitor, as far as I can observe, has been used more or less by ambitious leaders and has been guided or misguided to a certain extent by the statements of these so-called leaders.

"The proper kind of exhibitors' organization should be officered by the right kind of material of which there is plenty available in the business, but who at the present time are not seeking office and have no time to enter into the present kind of politics as conducted by the exhibitors' league.

Industry Must Consolidate

"Bend the effort of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to consolidate the entire industry and with that end in view. One-third of the exhibitors' representation is in that organization.

"A great deal of valuable work has been done by the Association, notwithstanding the fact that it has not had the support of the exhibitors, but every local throughout the country that is in the habit of going ahead operating as a unit, spells chaos, as there is no direct responsibility or representation of the industry when anything of a threatening nature arises.

"I think your suggestion a very good one, and I am sure that if the present officials of the various organizations have the interest of the business at heart, they will act on your suggestion and cooperate with you, in order to bring out of the many so-called organizations a thoroughly organized force."

Big Exhibitor Approves Plan

From a prominent exhibitor circuit—that of Turner and Dahnken, of San Francisco—comes a straight-from-the-shoulder communication on the subject of getting the exhibitors together. A letter signed by E. B. Johnson, of the Turner and Dahnken organization, says:

"In our minds there is no question at all about whether or not the motion picture industry should get together in an effort to have the war taxes that pertain to the industry amended, so as to be somewhat near an equitable basis.

"At the present time the motion picture industry is staggering under the load of the war taxes that have been imposed, and unless something is done, it is going to practically put the motion picture industry out of business.

"Now is the time to get together and to quit the petty bickering that is going on in the industry. United action is what is needed and unless the industry does get together and adopt a solid front and a united attitude, it is going to pay for it dearly.

"We shall be glad to do anything that we possibly can to assist the movement."

Washington Conference Opens

The "get together" conference which Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has called, is about to begin activity as we close this issue of MOTOGRAPHY. Although representatives of the American Exhibitors' Association will be in Washington at the same time, nothing has been said by the officials of either organization that indicates a change in their respective attitudes on the proposition of getting together, although the Ochs invitation, addressed to all the exhibitors in the country, beseeched them to attend this conference to discuss the war tax and to forget the differences that were keeping the two organizations of exhibitors apart.

Do You Always Get What You Want?

Many exhibitors have difficulty locating the pictures their patrons request them to book. Patrons do not always remember the name of the producer. Your exchange man may not be able to put you right unless the picture you seek happens to be one of his releases.

MOTOGRAPHY can always help you. Our Service Department is at your disposal. Make use of it. Ask us anything.

Exhibitors Move on Washington

GATHER AT NATIONAL CAPITOL TO SEEK RELIEF FROM TAX BURDENS

THE Washington conference to discuss remedial legislation in the matter of war tax assessments levied by the government upon the motion picture industry—particularly the exhibitor—is on in the national capitol.

Reports from Harry M. Crandall, the Washington exhibitor who had charge of the arrangements for housing those who attended the gathering, indicate that the exhibitors responded exceptionally well, to the invitation extended to all the exhibitors of the country by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Outcome Is in Doubt

What the outcome of the gathering will be in the matter of getting the members of the League and the American Exhibitors' Association to forget their differences and join in a big united exhibitors' organization, officered by men acceptable to all the theater owners of the nation, is problematical. A step in that direction was made when the cooperation of Mr. Crandall was obtained. He was one of the exhibitors who withdrew from the league's Chicago convention last summer.

One result of the meeting may be the appointment of a permanent committee, headed by Mr. Crandall, to look after the interests of motion picture exhibitors in Washington. How far the conference will be able to go in getting members of the American Exhibitors' Association to become a part of that legislative committee is not apparent on the surface.

Varner Esteems Ochs Lowly

H. C. Varner, the North Carolina exhibitor who is now in Washington as the legislative representative of the association, has declared in a letter to Samuel Bullock, chairman of the Exhibitors' Committee, of Cleveland, O., that the gathering called by Ochs will "only gum up the machinery so badly that it will be impossible for the rest of us to accomplish anything for the relief of the exhibitors." In Varner's opinion, Ochs desires, by calling the conference, "to stall the exhibitors and make a big noise."

"It is impossible," says Varner's letter, "to tell Lee Ochs anything; especially is this true when he is compelled to depend upon the manufacturers of films for advertising to support the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and when it comes to this point, naturally his human nature asserts itself, and he is not likely to cut his own throat—that is, not knowingly do it."

League Is Largely Represented

Representation at the meeting largely will be of the ranks of the Ochs organization, although in many cities representatives of the American Exhibitors' Association had signified their intention of being in Washington on December 11, 12 and 13, the dates on which the conference is to convene.

The war between the exhibitors and some of the producing companies over the payment of the fifteen-cent reel tax continues to wax warm. In Brooklyn a real fight has developed into which the boycott, the courts and the United States district attorney's office have been drawn.

Reel Tax War Goes On

A violation of the Sherman anti-trust law is claimed by the producing and distributing companies, who have caused a letter to be written to Melville J. France, federal district attorney, calling to the notice of the government the threatened boycott against the Fox and Vitagraph exchanges of Brooklyn. The letter in full appears elsewhere in this issue.

Practically all the propaganda being given circulation at this time is on the side of the film distributors who demand the payment of the reel tax. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has written to a western exhibitor in answer to the question: "How can the exchanges which are not charging the war tax stay in business?"

Laemmle Discusses Tax

Mr. Laemmle's letter follows:

"Dear Sir:

"This is in answer to your favor of recent date in which you ask the very natural question, 'How can the exchanges which are not charging the tax stay in business?'

"Frankly, we do not know how they can do it. In fact, we do not believe for one instant that they can pay this tax themselves and avoid raising their prices at a later date.

"It is more than probable, we believe, that they hope to pose as champions of the exhibitors and thus draw an amount of business away from us not only sufficient to cover the absorption of the taxes but to produce an additional profit for themselves.

All Would Be Forced Out

"If we were to pursue the course that they have adopted, all or most of the producing companies would have to go out of business and in all probability the companies you mention would not be any more likely to escape this result than any of the other companies.

"No doubt we would have made ourselves great temporary heroes, in the eyes of many exhibitors, if we had not said anything about passing the tax along to the public through the theaters; but in the end it would have ruined the exhibitors by reason of the fact that it would have ruined the producers and thus shut off all sources of film supply for theaters.

"All the producers combined cannot afford to pay a tax of $100,000 every week, whether the public believes it or not. But if such an amount is passed along to the public, the public will not even feel it.

All Tax Goes to the Public

"Unfortunately, there is not another industry in the world in which the tax has been levied in just the manner that it has been levied in the picture business. In all others, it is levied in such a manner that it goes on to the public very directly and very quickly. In our case we are practically placed in the position of having to beg the cooperation of exhibitors when as a matter of fact they should not only be willing but eager to give it in order to save themselves and the whole industry.

"This company will not ask the government to repeal the tax law, no matter how unfair its provisions may seem, because the United States needs the money and must have it.

"If the exhibitors feel that it should be repealed; if they can convince congress that it should be repealed, well and good. That is none of our business. The exhibitors have as much right to run their affairs as the producers and exchanges have to run their own. But as long as the law is a law, it is our plain duty to do the best we can to act as collectors for Uncle Sam. If we fail in this, we fail in all.

"Common sense compels every thinking man to know that those companies not charging the tax MUST MAKE IT UP IN SOME OTHER WAY. We don't pretend to know what that way will be, but we do know that the exhibitor cannot benefit by it in the end.

Producers Are Frank on Tax

"We could have handled the whole matter in quite a different way if we had chosen to say nothing about the tax at all but simply and quietly advance prices all along the lines. But we chose to be perfectly frank about it and make no profit on the war tax. We figured, as nearly as we could, what the war tax would cost us and then passed it along to our customers, knowing that they in turn would have to pass it along to the public. I might say, incidentally, that in figuring we gave ourselves by far the worst of it. As a result the amount we collect from the exhibitors cannot equal the amount we must pay to the government.

"We chose the frank and open method for the very simple reason that it seemed the honest thing to do. We could have employed camouflage or we could have indulged in mock heroics to fool our customers, but we took it for granted they would prefer open and above-board treatment.

Public Pays in the End

"We took it for granted that they knew that no tax on any producer in any line of business is actually absorbed by the producer (unless he is making an exorbitant profit) but that every single penny of it, and sometimes more, is passed on to the ultimate consumer, the public. Sometimes it is passed directly, at other times indirectly—but it always goes down the line in the end.

"Not a single objection was made to our method of collecting the tax until a few professional agitators stirred up a cloud of dust to blind the exhibitors and make them think we were abusing them. This is unfortunate but it does not influence us to change our attitude, because we made sure we were doing the right thing before we went ahead.

"Sincerely yours,
"Universal Film Manufacturing Company,
"Carl Laemmle, President."

The way the tax and the general high cost of living situation is affecting New England states is set forth in a statement by E. J. Farrell, general manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation of New England.

Urges Exhibitors to Raise

He advocates that exhibitors increase their admission charge at least 50 per cent. His statement follows:

"As the manager of the largest motion picture exchange in New England, to whom all of the great body of exhibitors in this territory come for the rental of photoplays for their individual theaters, I feel that I am qualified to make the statement that today nine out of ten exhibitors should increase their admissions at least 50 per cent, and must do this in the very near future or face financial loss, if not ruin.

"The recent war tax imposed upon admissions by the government is not alone responsible for this, for there are countless other burdens upon the theaters of which the public is entirely unaware.

Tremendous Jump in Costs

"Permit me to offer some facts and figures to prove to the public that the theater owner is not a grasping, money-mad person.

"Less than five years ago the average theater paid for its entire week's supply of photoplays from $40 to $60. Today the average theater pays from $200 to $350 for its weekly supply of film.

"These figures would apply to the theaters outside of the down-town section of Boston. Let us apply figures to the big Washington street theaters. Less than five years ago the biggest theaters on Washington street and the down-town district were paying in the neighborhood of $150 for a week's service. Today these same theaters pay from $1000 to $1500 per week.

"These figures will astonish the average patron of the photoplay theaters because it has never been appreciated how the cost of operation has so rapidly advanced, and this because the theater managements have refrained from adding the extra burdens to the patrons until actually forced to for the salvation of their investments.

Have Held Down Prices

"Yet the cost in rentals for photoplay productions is not all of the theater's added burdens over a few years ago. Employes' salaries have risen rapidly; supplies of all sorts have increased tremendously in cost; carbons, used for the projection of the film upon the screen, have increased in price over 1000 per cent. We have today theaters costing $1,000,000 to erect, a tremendous investment.

"The lone pianist, or pianist and drummer, have given way in a great many theaters to orchestras from six to 20 men. The small store show has gone, and in its place the public finds big handsome theaters that cost 10 and 20 times as much to operate.

"Yet how little has the increase in admissions been to the public. A five-cent raise in some instances; none at all in a great many of the theaters. The theater owners have accepted increase after increase, caused by the demands of their patrons for bigger and better productions, with famous and more famous stars, and have fought and struggled to keep the admissions down to the same low prices until forced to increase them for their own financial existence."

Edel Would Have Owners Pay

Contrary to the view of most exhibitors of the country, Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theater, New York's pioneer motion picture palace, states that it is up to the exhibitor to pay the reel tax, or rather, it is up to the exhibitor to collect it for Uncle Sam.

"The trouble is," said Mr. Edel, "that most exhibitors have been in the habit of trying to give too much for a very small admission price. Since the tax went into effect, the Strand Theater has not shown any decrease in returns at the box office. It is true that many theaters on Broadway, particularly the legitimate houses, are feeling the effect of the war, but the receipts of the Strand, despite its increase in admission prices and additional charge for tax tickets, have not fallen off.

"The mere announcement that admission prices will be raised commencing with a certain date on account of the war, will not be sufficient to many patrons who are accustomed to a certain show for a certain price. An improvement of the entertainment offered, however, will justify an advance in admission prices in the mind of the patron.

"Such an improvement does not mean the extra expenditure of money, but it means extra effort on the part of the manager in the presentation of his show. Such things as a re-arrangement of the orchestra, new ideas in lighting, little novelty bits and new ideas in the manner of presenting a show and many other things which do not appear on the weekly expense sheet but add materially to maintaining the weekly receipts.

"In other words, with the increase in prices, the exhibitor must show something for it and must more than ever depend upon his showmanship in order to make money. The business of eliminating all unnecessary expense and using his weekly appropriation in the channels which will do him the most good is now more important than ever. Now is the time to study his theater and its every feature.

Give Something New

Each week he must give his audiences something new, something different, and he must give it to them in a new and different way. The exhibitor who realizes that the success of a motion picture theater means more than merely throwing a film on the screen, no matter how good it is; the manager who appreciates the value of good advertising and exploitation, who knows his organization and his public and who has the proper amount of initiative, will find that his weekly receipts will not be less on account of an increase in admission prices.

"As in the case of every other article, it is up to the public to ultimately pay the tax on films. It is usually up to the retailer to collect the tax. The exhibitor in the film industry is the retailer, and therefore he is the agent that should collect the tax for the government. A proper explanation of the exhibitor's position in the matter, to the public, together with an improvement in the merit of his entertainment, without exceeding the usual monetary expenditures, as mentioned above, will solve the problem, as evidenced in the case of the Strand."

Films to Aid Food Production

Official motion pictures bringing home the vital importance of increased food production will be shown by the United States Department of Agriculture in hundreds of motion picture theaters throughout the United States. The first releases, which are to be handled under an agreement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company through its exchanges, are announced for December.

The first film will show activities in the national forests, which are important sources of timber and water supply and also afford grazing for a large number of cattle and sheep.

The second release, which will follow in about two weeks, will show what children through the pig clubs are doing to increase the supply of pork. Other selections from the department's 40,000 feet of official subjects will make clear various features of food production, the raising of meat animals and horses, and will deal with home activities, such as poultry raising and the canning and drying of perishable products.

The department laboratories are at work on a number of other popular films specially designed to make clear to city as well as rural populations, problems of food production and to show them ways in which they can cooperate effectively to feed this nation and our allies.

Caruso Film Suit Decided

In his suit in New York against Clarence W. Willets, whom he charged with breach of contract in connection with the first appearance of Enrico Caruso in the films, Dr. Pasquale Marafioti recovered judgment for $1,270, with $94.61 costs. Dr. Marafioti is official physician at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Mr. Caruso, it is alleged, agreed to let the doctor "take motion pictures of him for use upon the screen." Dr. Marafioti thereupon prepared a scenario and several thousand feet of film were made. Mr. Willets, it is alleged, agreed to supply the funds necessary for the successful completion and exhibition of the films, but failed to do so.

The plaintiff put the facts before City Court Justice Peter Schmuck and a jury. The defendant said that Mr. Caruso appeared in but 450 feet of the film and that the film had been made without the defendant's permission. This the plaintiff denied.

Film Producer Indicted By U. S.

Robert Goldstein, director and producer of the twelve-reel film, "The Spirit of '76," has been indicted by the federal grand jury in Los Angeles, Cal., on three counts. His bail was increased from $5,000 to $10,000.

The first count charges that Goldstein wilfully and unlawfully attempted to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny and refusal of duty on the part of the military and naval forces of the United States in that he presented at Clunes' Auditorium, in Los Angeles, a certain moving picture play entitled "The Spirit of '76," designed and intended to arouse antagonism, hatred and enmity between the American people and the people of Great Britain at a time when the defendant well knew the government of Great Britain, with its military and naval forces was an ally of the United States in the prosecution of a war against the Imperial Government of Germany.

The second and third counts refer explicitly to the influence of men called by the selective draft.

Program "Fillers" Are Lacking

SHORT SUBJECTS OFTEN RUIN AUDIENCE'S ENJOYMENT OF GOOD FEATURE

BY ORRIN G. COCKS,
Secretary, National Committee for Better Films

"Yes, the five-reel film was splendid, our whole family enjoyed it, but—," and the hands go up and the tongues speed on to describe the two-reel comedy. These complaints are justified; the "fillers" are not what they ought to be.

Do you know, however, that the producers and distributors of motion pictures recognize this and are working incessantly to remedy an unsatisfactory condition? They are not always at fault, because the exhibitor may take their excellent photoplays regularly and rent his shorter films from entirely different agencies.

Again, some motion picture theater managers reason that their patrons want nothing but "slapstick" comedy to follow a serious drama. They listen to the laughter and do not see or hear the frowns and murmurs of disapprobation.

Some of the best minds in the dramatic field are asking, "How can we make the comedy fine? How can we continually produce laughter-filled situations which are free from suggestion or, worse still, are bromidic?"

Very few writers or comedians have been able to answer these questions in a way to satisfy continuously the majority of theater-goers.

I write this to assure you that we have touched on one of the greatest problems of an amusement which changes as constantly as the motion pictures in the theaters. The problem should therefore be treated with patience.

Even the legitimate theater with its comparatively few plays a year has given us a trickle of clean laughter instead of a torrent. It presents us with vaudeville, extravaganza, musical comedy, revues and Bowery burlesque,—horrors.

Really, we may know what our own taste demands and we must help define the standard of 1,000 people picked indiscriminately in our town.

Perhaps fifty exhibitors in the United States have satisfactorily solved this problem month in, month out; but they are spending money, energy, and artistic ability on selected pictures, lighting and musical effects, and stage direction. They are also changing their programs weekly or semi-weekly instead of daily.

Greater Vitagraph Completes Active Year

During Twelve Months Just Ending Company Has Issued Enormous Amount of Screen Productions

THE year 1917 will go down in Vitagraph history as one of the most active twelvemonths, from a production standpoint, in the history of the company. During that period the company not only released a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature each week and made three big special productions, but also put out three serials of fifteen episodes each, made a comedy a week and introduced several new features to its program. These included the Bobby Connelly Series, in which the famous boy star was featured; the Paula Blackton Country Life Series; the Favorite Film Features, a unit made up of carefully selected short-reel subjects from the vast Vitagraph library, and the new Vitagraph Comedies, put forth the first week in December on a weekly release basis.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph Company, established and maintained a "best authors" policy by which he obtained for adaptation the works of the leading contemporary fiction writers, and he also vastly increased the company's list of stars.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, reports that the firmly established policies of the company, the added list of stars and the continuous flow of production have been reflected by the response of exhibitors to such an extent that the company has been forced to expand its sales organization several times during the year.

Consistency of program has been more than a slogan with Vitagraph during the past year, and its product, as recorded in the reviews of the trade press, has been fully up to the standards of this, the oldest producing company in America.

Beginning with "Blind Justice," a seven-reel feature released the second week in January, the company's offerings have been uniformly excellent, some of its most successful features being the following:

"The Glory of Yolanda" (Anita Stewart); "The Courage of Silence" (Alice Joyce and Harry Morey); "Kitty Mackay" (Lillian Walker); "Intrigue" (Peggy Hyland, Marc MacDermott and Bobby Connelly); "Arsene Lupin" (Earle Williams); "Aladdin from Broadway" (Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno); "The More Excellent Way" (Anita Stewart and Charles Richman); "Babette" (Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott); "The Message of the Mouse" (Anita Stewart); "Mary Jane's Pa" (Marc MacDermott and Mildred Manning); "Soldiers of Chance" (Evart Overton, Miriam Miles and Julia Swayne Gordon); "An Alabaster Box" (Alice Joyce with Marc MacDermott); "For France" (Edward Earle and Betty Howe); "The Love Doctor" (Earle Williams with Corinne Griffith); "Dead Shot Baker" (William Duncan and Carol Holloway); "The Bottom of the Well" (Evart Overton, Agnes Ayres, Adele de Garde and Alice Terry); "The Flaming Omen" (Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman); "The Fettered Woman" (Alice Joyce); "I Will Repay" (Corinne Griffith, with Mary Maurice and William Dunn); "The Grell Mystery" (Earle Williams); "Who Goes There!" (Harry Morey and Corinne Griffith); "The Tenderfoot" (William Duncan and Carol Holloway); "In the Balance" (Earle Williams); "His Own People" (Harry Morey with Gladys Leslie).

William Duncan, star and director of Vitagraph's "Vengeance—and the Woman."

"The Girl Philippa," "Within the Law," and "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the latter two with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey as the stars, were special Blue Ribbon features, the first being seven reels in length, the second nine and the third seven reels. These three specials were among the notable productions of the industry during the year and have been ranked among the most successful photo-dramas ever released.

In addition to Anita Stewart, Alice Joyce, Earle Williams and Harry Morey, Vitagraph now numbers among its featured stars Gladys Leslie, Corinne Griffith, Agnes Ayres, Nell Shipman, Carol Holloway, Hedda Nova, Grace Darmond, Florence Deshon, Alice Terry, Mildred Manning, "Mother" Mary Maurice, Eulalie Jensen, Julia Swayne Gordon, Miriam Miles, Edward Earle, William Duncan, William Dunn, Alfred Whitman, J. Frank Glendon, Marc MacDermott, Evart Overton and Little Bobby Connelly. Other favorites who are regularly included in the Vitagraph casts are little Aida Horton, Adele de Garde, Patsy DeForest, Katharine Lewis, little Helen Connelly, Webster Campbell, Denton Vane, Otto Lederer, Robert Gaillard, Templar Saxe, Stanley Dunn, George Holt, Charles Kent, Bernard Siegel, William Shea, Herbert Prior, Arthur Donaldson and Bigelow Cooper.

The "best authors" policy established by Vitagraph has borne fruit in the shape of an unbroken chain of good stories as the basis of Vitagraph pictures. During the year the company has adapted to the screen the works of such writers as Robert W. Chambers, O. Henry, Frederick Upham Adams, Alfred Henry Lewis, creator of "Wolfville;" George Randolph Chester, of Wallingford fame; Lillian Chester, Mary E. ## Getting Rid of Surplus Advertising

THIS question of economic waste is nothing new to the picture industry. It has been discussed in these pages time and again, frequently as a result of some trade member's criticism or comment. Having been advanced afresh, with some new angles, it is receiving more attention and creating more disturbance than heretofore simply because the need is more urgent. Thrift talk has no glamour when the skies are serene and industrial enterprise draws its pay. It becomes an absorbing topic as soon as it begins to represent the only clew to the recovery of vanishing profits.

While the latest suggested crusade against extravagance considers a number of things, the item of advertising stands out prominently because it is the nature of advertising to be conspicuous. And so a certain New York publisher to the trade, moved possibly by the potential threat against his own goods, but more probably by a genuine desire to help solve the problem, proposes the annihilation of all but two film papers. Of course he has the good taste not to suggest his own journal as one of the hypothetical two; but naturally that is his idea. And doubtless it would be.

Yet even this somewhat hysterical proposal is not new, either. Nearly every trade publisher in this business—and there have been, and are, several—has hinted at one time or another that he, and one other, could take care of the industry. Let it redound to their everlasting credit that none of them has proposed to handle it alone, and requested a monopoly. Always they are willing to stand a little competition—but not too much.

It seems to us that the papers which should or should not receive film advertising patronage are quite easily classified.

We can exclude popular magazines, like the Saturday Evening Post, from our calculations; because film advertising in such mediums is intended to influence the public, whom no trade paper pretends to reach, and is justifiable for that reason—if the advertiser can afford it.

Then there are the "popular" motion picture magazines; class publications aimed to interest those picture fans who are sufficiently enthusiastic to want reading matter as well as pictures. These readers have no more value to the film advertiser than the readers of any other "popular"; and there is no more excuse for film advertising in the public's motion picture story books than there is in the Red Book, or the Argosy, or the Popular Magazine, or any other newsstand thriller.

The next class is the theatrical, vaudeville, side-show and county fair "trade papers" which cry for film advertising on the strength of a "motion picture department" and a vague and hypothetical exhibitor following. In this class come also the newspapers with similar departments or sections, and similar claims. When the trade coffers are overflowing, there may be little harm in a limited advertising patronage of these; but in time of thrift, there is no excuse for them in a field as big and as specialized as ours.

These are the publications indicated by the aforesaid New York trade publisher as "twelve papers receiving trade advertising." It is a matter of plain reason that they are not entitled to any. Their circulation interest is divided among amusement enterprises generally antagonistic to and competing with the pictures. Their film advertisers pay full circulation prices—pay for distribution to circus men, carnival workers, vaudeville performers, band-masters, acrobats and gamblers—just to get a few straggling exhibitors who, if they have any purchasing value to the producer, must read one or more of the legitimate trade papers anyway.

This is the first point of attack for advertising economy. Cut out the papers that have no real part in the progress of the art; the papers that still treat the picture theater as a side-show. They have no place in the plan of the fifth industry.

As to the legitimate trade papers, whose publishers work wholly for the betterment of the industry, and whose wage is often purely nominal and incidental, in no wise commensurate with their influence on the art—perhaps there are more of them than there need be. That smug generality applies to so many important industries served by more than two trade papers, it were idle to argue the point.

When he cries out for the elimination of all his competitors—except one—our New York publishing friend is simply asking that the law of survival of the fittest be immediately applied. That law has a way of working itself out without assistance. It will work itself out in this case of motion picture trade paper advertising.

If the four or five trade papers now serving this field are too many, the next year will eliminate the weak ones, with or without our friend's argument. And we look forward with considerable interest to the results of Nature's (not trade's) weeding out process; for we imagine there are some who will be surprised thereby.

Taxes Are Not Likely to Diminish

THERE are many trade members, both producers and exhibitors, who look for the early repeal of film and ticket tax laws, and are providing for the payment of such taxes on a temporary and make-shift basis.

It will be the safest course for our industry to regard these tax levies as new but practically permanent increases in the cost of business. There is nothing in sight to bear out the theory that they will disappear in one or three or even five years.

We expect the present session of Congress to adjust a number of discrepancies included in the hastily passed laws of the last session. We hope and believe the motion picture tax law will be among those amended; for a short experience with it has demonstrated its need of clarification, and Congress knows the harmfulness of an obscure and indefinite tax law.

But to expect any marked diminution of the rate of taxation is unreasonable. We may be thankful if additional levies are not made upon the supposed treasures of the industry as the needs of the nation increase.

From all reports, the exhibitors are getting along as well as could be expected with their ticket tax. Of course there is the anticipated amount of pessimism and gloom; but we find that in every business.

The trade paper publishers, for one, are talking dissolution and death because second class postage rates go up about two hundred per cent next July—to say nothing about the cost of paper, printing, engraving and labor.

Some of the film producers have tried to saddle the film tax directly upon the exhibitor—"because," they say, "we cannot possibly pay it." That is largely a quibble of words, because they will pay it, and then they will pass it on to the exhibitor and he will pay it, almost without knowing it.

Our guess is that the producers and the exhibitors and the trade papers that are solidly established and really worth while will pay all the taxes without any more trouble than will be found in every business in these United States.

Congressman Kitchin has been criticised for saying that everybody would be "taxed until it hurts"; but that is the thing we must face, nevertheless, and face it cheerfully. Doubtless somebody will go out of business, too; but every reader of this page is privileged to make up his mind that it will not be he, and work with that thought in front of him.

The United States has immediately ahead of it the biggest job in history, and the motion picture industry, like all other industries, may come to have its right to live judged by what it can do for its country. It is fortunate that it can do more than most of them—and in other ways besides paying taxes.

"Within the Law" Wins Praise

Vitagraph Production Showing in Chicago Under Court Protection is Warmly Endorsed by Critic

"WITHIN THE LAW," the Greater Vitagraph special Blue Ribbon Feature which is now showing in many Chicago theaters under protection of the courts, has received the same degree of praise from the critics of the Chicago press as it did from those in New York and other cities where it has been shown.

"Within the Law" was denied a permit in Chicago for more than five months, and was only released after the Vitagraph company, in a legal battle directed by Albert R. Smith, president, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing branch of the company, had twice defeated Major Funkhouser and the police department of Chicago in the courts.

As soon as the court enjoined the police from interfering with the exhibition of "Within the Law," there was a stampede of exhibitors to book the big feature, the Ascher Brothers for their entire chain of twelve theaters, while many other exhibitors fought for dates.

An example of the appreciation shown by the critics of Chicago of "Within the Law" is found in the following article, written by Oma Moody Lawrence in the Chicago Evening Post.

"How much can be done for the advancement of the film drama without the aid of spectacle or mechanical effects has been amply shown in the Vitagraph production of 'Within the Law.' It is a drama, pure and simple, full of tensest suspense and the most compelling action. It never lags for an instant, there is no moment of fatigue, and though the situations are stern in their reality, the introduction of logical comic relief keeps the mind from being too severely taxed.

"The story of the drama is too well known to need repetition here. The stage version was a success that engaged the talents of some of the best known actresses of today in the role of Mary Turner, a shopgirl convicted of a crime of which she was not guilty. Alice Joyce was chosen by Director W. P. S. Earle to play this role and in the long list of feminine players of charm upon the screen, we can think of no one who would have been a happier choice. So often is mere beauty the only attribute considered in a selection of the kind, that it is a relief to see beauty and brains combined. Adele De Garde, who is cleverly cast as Aggie Lynch, furnished without effort the neecssary element of comedy. She is so lightheartedly aware of her shortcomings and so evidently full of admiration for Mary Turner's wisdom that she is refreshing.

"Harry Morey, always satisfying in a role that requires much dramatic skill and careful attention to detail, is more than usually good as Joe Garson, 'the best little forger in the United States.' There is no need to dwell at length upon each of the other characters more than to say that each has been exceptionally well chosen as to type and everyone plays as if inspired.

"The titles, taken from the play itself, are an important factor in the making of a finished whole, and the photography also is excellent. From every standpoint we see in 'Within the Law' a production of merit worthy of the closest attention of the critical as well as of the most ardent seeker after amusement. For the student of the technique of the moving picture, it offers a splendid example, for it is pure photodrama, relying on no cheap mechanical device or elaboration of background for its value. The settings are appropriate and serve as a means to an end, merely to show the players in harmonious surroundings without clutter or fuss. We are never conscious of the furniture or the lights or any of the other unnecessary details which so often stand out from the picture to the distraction of the artistic sense."

Chaplin Plant Nears Completion

The final lap of construction of the Charlie Chaplin motion picture plant, in Hollywood, Cal., was reached last week, when foundations for the last group of buildings were laid.

Simultaneously with this, work was started on the erection of the steel structure for the glass studio and an army of painters began the finishing touches on the completed buildings, carrying out a general color scheme of French gray and white.

Within three weeks, according to the building contractors, the entire plant will be completed.

Frank Crane Engaged to Direct Petrova

Producer of Goldwyn's "Thais" Starts Work on "The Life Mask," Her Latest Offering

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, that arrangements were consummated last week whereby Frank Crane will direct the third starring vehicle of Madame Olga Petrova.

Madame Petrova, as she appears in "Daughter of Destiny."

The selection of the well-known producer, who will commence work this week on the third production of the Petrova Picture Company, was made only after a series of lengthy consultations between Madame Petrova and the officials of her organization. This was due to the desire on the part of the famous star to insure the high standard of excellence which has been set in the making of her first two vehicles, which were produced by George Irving and Larry Timble, respectively.

In choosing Mr. Crane for this important task, Madame Petrova and President Collins feel that they have assured the exhibitors of the country the production of a feature which will be a worthy runningmate to "Daughter of Destiny," scheduled for release at the Rialto Theater, New York, Sunday, December 23rd.

Mr. Crane will start work on "The Life Mask," which is the title of the vehicle chosen for the third picture, immediately. His services were secured following his completion of the Goldwyn production of "Thais," starring the operatic prima donna, Mary Garden.

He is a man of wide ideals and high attainments in the field of screen production, having been associated with the Vitagraph, Universal and other prominent film organizations. He is responsible for the World Film version of "Old Dutch," which scored a tremendous success throughout the world.

Madame Petrova and Mr. Collins feel satisfied that the acquisition of the producer who handled the details of the stupendous Goldwyn production, "Thais," will achieve a worthy feature offering for presentation in the leading theaters of the United States.

Larry Gets Noisesome Welcome

Larry Semon got a hearty welcome back in Los Angeles the other day. Larry passed last winter at the Vitagraph Hollywood plant turning out comedies and it was decided to make his "home coming" a roarer. It was just that. William Duncan's cowboys in the "Vengeance—and the Woman" serial were the committee of arrangements and there was much gun shooting, rope throwing and wild riding along with other festivities.

Producers Complain of Brooklyn Boycott

APPEAL FOR RELIEF TO UNITED STATES ATTORNEY OF NEW YORK

COMPLAINT has been filed with Melville J. France, United States attorney for the eastern district of New York, by eleven prominent motion picture distributors through their attorneys, Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, regarding the boycott which the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn have threatened.

This local association proposed to put into immediate effect a boycott against two large distributors, the Fox Film Corporation and the Vitagraph Company of America, with the purpose of subsequently using a similar boycott against other distributors. The courts have held that the film industry, which totals many millions of dollars annually, is interstate business within the Sherman Act, and the plaintiffs claim that act is being violated.

Exhibitors Refuse to Pay

The matter has been precipitated by the War Revenue Act of Congress of October 4, 1917, in which a tax of three-fourths of a cent per linear foot is imposed on films. To meet this heavy tax, certain distributors determined to add to the rental charge of the reel (which rental charge ranges from $1 to $100 per day), a charge of fifteen cents per day per reel.

The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn take exception to this, and the members of the association object to pay any of the film footage tax.

The following is a copy of the detailed complaint filed:

December 5, 1917.

Hon. Melville J. France,
United States Attorney,
Eastern District of New York,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

We are directed by certain distributors of motion picture films to complain to you in regard to a boycott which the members of an organization known as the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn are threatening to put into immediate effect against two of the distributors with the purpose of subsequently using a similar boycott against the other distributors, in order that by concerted action and the unlawful means of a boycott they may coerce the distributors to their ends. The distributors who request us to make this complaint are the following:

Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, International Film Service, Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Select Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Vitagraph Company of America, World Film Corporation.

Boycott is Threatened

The two distributors against whom the boycott is about to be instituted are: Fox Film Corporation and Vitagraph Company of America.

In this letter we shall give you the salient facts, and we shall be pleased to amplify this statement in a personal interview at your convenience.

The concerns above named are engaged in interstate commerce in distributing motion picture films throughout the United States, the total business aggregating many millions of dollars annually. That this is an interstate business within the Sherman Act has been held by the court in United States vs. Motion Picture Patents Company (225 Fed. 800).

By the War Revenue Act of October 4th, 1917, Congress imposed three taxes affecting the motion picture business, a tax of one-quarter of a cent per linear foot on film which has not been exposed; a tax of one-half cent per linear foot on film containing a picture; and a tax on admissions to theaters.

The tax upon admissions, as the exhibitors have arranged, is paid by the patron of the theater when he purchases his ticket.

Rental Charge Increased

In order to determine how to apportion the tax of three-quarters of a cent per linear foot on films, an exhaustive examination of the subject was made by Price, Waterhouse & Company at the request of some of the distributors. As a result of their examination, certain of the distributors determined to add to the rental charge for a reel (which charge ranges from $1 to $100 per day, according to the character of the subject and the reputation of the actor), a charge of fifteen cents a day per reel (each reel comprising approximately 1,000 feet), on the assumption that the average life of a reel is fifty days.

In this manner something less than the amount of the tax will be collected by the distributors. As each exhibitor rents on an average six or seven reels a day, the average daily additional cost to the exhibitor is about $1 per day.

On the other hand if the tax were borne by all the manufacturers or distributors in the United States it would amount to a tax upon them of about $100,000 per week, which, in the minds of many of the distributors, would be ruinous.

Accordingly, it seemed to the distributors above named (who, however, comprise only a portion of the total manufacturers and distributors in the United States), that just as the exhibitors had passed on their tax, so the producers or distributors should pass on the tax imposed upon them, and that the method recommended by Price, Waterhouse & Company was a fair and equitable method of accomplishing this purpose.

No Rental Agreement

We direct your attention to the fact that the collection of this fifteen-cent charge has no relation to prices for the reason that the daily rental charge on reels ranges from one dollar to one hundred dollars and upwards per day, and is based, among other things, upon the character of the subject, the quality of the picture and the popularity of the actor. The rental charges of the distributors above named are all different. There is no uniformity between them in this respect, and there is no agreement of any kind as to prices or rental charges, for they are all in the keenest competition.

On November 18 there was a meeting in Brooklyn at which, we are informed, over one hundred exhibitors were present. At that meeting it was decided that two of the distributors should be singled out and that all exhibitors should cancel their contracts with those two distributors and thereafter restrict their business to the other distributors until the two distributors singled out had been brought to terms. This was to be done regardless of whether or not the other distributors charged fifteen cents to meet the tax. In this manner the exhibitors hoped to force the two distributors to terms and then to proceed to apply the boycott to the other distributors until all had been brought to terms.

Exhibitors Appoint Committee

At this meeting on November 18, a committee of fifteen was appointed with two powers, the authority to select the two distributors whose contracts should be cancelled by all of the exhibitors having contracts with them, and the authority to obtain the signatures to such cancellations of all Brooklyn customers of such distributors.

The committee so named held a meeting on Monday, November 19, and by vote singled out the productions of the Fox Film Corporation and the Vitagraph Company as the ones first to be cancelled by the members of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, called on the telephone one of the principal officers of the Vitagraph Company and requested a conference, stating that the exhibitors of Brooklyn had selected the Vitagraph Company for their cancellations, and that cancellations from exhibitors all over Brooklyn had been placed in the hands of the committee of fifteen, to be served on the Vitagraph Company, and that such cancellations meant that the Vitagraph Company would be shut out of Brooklyn.

We have advised our clients that such concerted action is in violation of law and is a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade, and accordingly our clients have considered it their duty to direct us to present the matter to you for your consideration, with a request that you inquire into the matter, by grand jury proceedings or otherwise as may seem to you advisable.

It has been stated by the officers of the Brooklyn Exhibitors Association and by the members of the Committee of Fifteen, at the conference above referred to, that the singling out of the two corporations named is but one step in a plan which is directed against all of the distributors. For the reason that they are all equally affected by the scope of this combination and boycott, all of them join in this complaint.

In view of the fact that the boycott may become operative at any moment may we respectfully request your early consideration of the matter.

Very respectfully,
Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft.

Two Dramas on Triangle Program

Belle Bennett's Beauty Helps Make "Because of a Woman"—Irene Hunt Stars in "The Maternal Spark"

THE Triangle program for the week of December 16 offers two dramas of life and business that have more than usual interest. "Because of a Woman," a seven-reel feature, with Belle Bennett in the leading role and Jack Livingston, supporting, will be the first release. Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Rowland Lee share honors in "The Maternal Spark," scheduled to follow.

Noel Clavering (Jack Livingston) is employed as business manager by the Everett Engineering Company in West Virginia. He is a well liked, capable worker and popular with everyone. Things are running smoothly enough, when oned ay information concerning a mining property that the Everett Company prepares especially for a client, leaks out. A competing firm taking advantage of the "leak," purchases the property, before the Everett client has had an opportunitw to secure the information. The next day the local papers all run two-column stories giving particulars as to the deal and hinting that a "shake-up" is imminent at the Everett offices.

Rising high in his wrath, the president of the Everett Company accuses some one of his employes of having sold him out. Colonel Gwynne (Joseph Swickard), chief engineer of the company, who had only recently returned from an inspection trip to the mining property, Noel Clavering and Allan Barrett (George Chesebro), mineral expert, are the three who know about the property, so the finger of suspicion points at them.

Noel being in love with Muriel Gwynne (Louella Maxim), the colonel's daughter, naturally feels for the old gent and rather than see the family name ruined, decides to assume the guilt. And this in spite of the fact he is suspicious of Allan Barrett. Not stopping to argue or consider, Clavering disappears. Naturally this is taken to mean he admits his guilt.

Eventually, Clavering lands in a little town called Chaparral, recognized and termed as "The most God-forsaken little station on the Santa Fe." He takes up his duties as telegraph operator and makes friends with the few folks living round about.

Then one day Noel receives word that a visitor is to arrive. This party is to investigate some mining property near Chaparral, and, when the visitor appears, he proves to be none other than Allan Barrett and the downtrodden Clavering makes a jump for his neck. Noel trounces Allan and wrings a confession from him that he sold the Everett information to the competing firm.

Clavering prepares to leave for home, but just as he is about to go, Barrett falsely says he has been married to Muriel Gwynne and that a boy is expected. Again accepting defeat, Noel sends Allan away.

Months later, Clavering receives a letter from Colonel Gwynne saying that Muriel and Allan are to be married on the sixth. Frantic, Noel makes haste to arrive in West Virginia before the wedding takes place, but once again fate interferes and Clavering does not arrive until the tenth, too late to prevent the marriage.

He finds Muriel happy with her lot and decides not to say anything concerning Barrett's confession or his lies.

After a while the contemptible Barrett wearies of his marriage ties. The faithful Muriel no longer pleases him and an affair with Valerie Greenway (Belle Bennett) follows. Learning of the situation, Clavering realizes Muriel's predicament and decides to intervene. With threats, he attempts to break off the affair between Barrett and Valerie. This proving a failure, Noel plans to make love to the beauty and win her from Allan. He does and unexpectedly falls in love with Valerie. There is a most agreeable ending to the story; an ending that carries a "punch" and leads to eternal happiness.

"Because of a woman" was written by F. Magnus Ingleton, picturized by George Elwood Jenks. The play was produced by Jack Conway. Others in the cast include Lillian Langdon and George Pearce.

"The Maternal Spark" was written by R. Cecil Smith, the scenario by George du Boise Proctor, and the play was produced by G. P. Hamilton.

In the Triangle-Keystone Comedy, "The Sanitarium Scandal," the Keystone bathing beauties do much in causing a general disturbance. The Sanitarium Hotel is a peaceful place until Peggy Pearce and her diving nymphs arrive. Then Baldy Belmont, a professor, Paddy McQuire, a porter, and Fritz Schade, the sheriff, all fall for the girls, and many "wet scenes" take place thereafter. William Beaudine directed the picture.

Two one-reel Triangle Comedies, "His Bad Policy" and "A Discordant Note," are also included in the week's releases.

Choose New Managers for Western Branches

A number of important changes have taken place during the current week in several of the western exchanges maintained by the Select Pictures Corporation.

Harry H. Hicks, formerly branch manager at Los Angeles, has been appointed branch manager at San Francisco.

Bernard E. Loper, for the past five years Pathe's manager at Los Angeles, has gone over to the Select organization to be branch manager in the same city.

H. L. Knappen has become manager of Select's Denver exchange, thus returning to scenes of his first activity, where he had at one time been manager for Pathe Frere.

Charles S. Goetz becomes sales manager at Kansas City, where he will be under Mr. W. H. Bell, branch manager at that city.

The appointing of H. H. Hicks to be executive over the San Francisco branch is in the nature of promotion in recognition of the exceptionally fine work which Mr. Hicks has done for Select in Los Angeles. The San Francisco territory gives Mr. Hicks a larger field, and one with which he is equally familiar, as he formerly had charge of the General Film Exchange at San Francisco.

"Frauds and Free Lunch" is announced as Greater Vitagraph's Big V comedy release for the week of December 10, and "Noisy Naggers and Nosey Neighbors" as the subject for the week of December 17. Montgomery and Rock are featured in the first of these, and Lawrence Semon is the star of the second. Florence Curtis, the Vitagraph dancing girl, plays opposite Mr. Semon.

Russell Headlines Mutual Releases

Star in "New York Luck" Tops Schedule for Week of December 17—Another Billie Rhodes' Comedy Is Ready

WILLIAM RUSSELL is the "headliner" in the Mutual release schedule for the week of December 17, appearing in "New York Luck," a story of "frazzled finances," intrigue and romantic adventure in the great metropolis.

"The Lost Express," with Helen Holmes, arrives at the threshold of the mystery.

Billie Rhodes comes near losing her happy home in "Little Miss Fixer."

The Cub Comedy, with George Ovey, and the Mutual Weekly balance the schedule.

Never has William Russell appeared in a more engrossing characterization or staged a more thrilling fight, than in his latest Mutual-American production, "New York Luck," released Monday, December 17.

At the beginning of the story, he is a country station agent. Instinctively he carries the spectator with him on a series of startling adventures which commence with his arrival on Broadway. There is a plot to steal British documents which the "Rube from Hohokus" foils but he is compelled to vanquish his foes in the most remarkable manner and under the most unusual conditions—in an elevator shaft of a palatial Fifth Avenue residence.

There is an unusual twist to the story, distinctly agreeable. It was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, and scenarioized by Chester Clapp. Edward Sloman has achieved another triumph in directing the production. In the cast are Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Vroom and Carl Stockdale.

A domestic tangle, arising from a family wrangle, gives Billie Rhodes another of her refreshing comedy roles in the Strand one-reeler, "Little Miss Fixer," released by Mutual, Tuesday, December 18.

Hubby departs in wrath after a quarrel, leaving Billie all alone. Along comes rich auntie, ready to donate to the happy couple, providing she finds them happy. Billie has to account for her solitude. To entertain the unknowing relative, Billie obtains an escort. Hubby, with a strange girl sees wifey with another man. There is a scrap. But in the end Billie finds her "fixing" succeeds and auntie comes across.

The strongest dramatic climax yet reached is shown in "Unmasked," Chapter XIV of "The Lost Express," the Signal-Mutual photonovel, starring Helen Holmes, released Monday, December 17. Despite the discovery that "The Hare" is proven to be an impersonation, the clever villain succeeds in actually marrying Helen while the real secretary is held a prisoner.

George Ovey "double-crosses" old man Grouch in his latest Cub Comedy, "Jerry's Double Cross," released by Mutual on Thursday, December 20. The Mutual Weekly, released Monday, December 17, shows momentous events on land and sea with a liberal number of stirring happenings in the war zone.

Suppose—

Suppose you were "up against it" financially, while supposed to be a millionaire, and your financial salvation depended on your presenting to your wife a man whom you knew to be socially impossible?

Suppose the impossible person promised to furnish the funds that would tide you over, provided that your wife would sponsor his wife in certain exclusive circles which the latter lady desired to enter.

Well, this is the problem involved in "Her Second Husband," a new Mutual special production featuring Miss Edna Goodrich, one of the most brilliant young actresses on the American stage.

Cuts Sunday Show

Driven to shorter shows to accommodate the crowd at his theater on Sundays is the experience of Paul H. Fenyvessy of the Strand Theater at Rochester, New York. Mr. Fenyvessy has written to the Mutual branch office at Buffalo:

"It will be impossible for me to use any single reel comedies on Sunday in my future. My business with Mutual star productions has been so big that it is necessary for me to shorten my show in order to accommodate the crowds."

Strand Features Scenic

An honor not usually granted to one-reel scenics was accorded the first release of a series offered by Essanay under the title of "Wonders of Nature and Science" by the Strand Theater of New York, the big Broadway house. The picture was run an entire week and was heavily advertised as a feature.

Puts Co-operation Above Everything

FRANK HALL DECLARES NOW IS TIME FOR INDUSTRY TO BE UNITED

THAT now is the time for manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors the country over to co-operate and above all to cease calamity-howling, is the conviction of Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, who, after receiving reports as to conditions throughout the United States, is convinced the situation is much better than many skeptics believe.

Muffle Calamity Howler

"With America engaged in the greatest undertaking of its history," declared Mr. Hall, "this is the time for all of us in the film industry to pull together for the general welfare of the trade. The calamity howler should be muffled. The moving picture business is not suffering any more from war conditions than other industries, despite the pessimism of certain individuals who have rushed into print with all manner of discouraging sentiments that certainly are not calculated to help conditions.

"Representatives of my company have made a careful survey of the domestic field and reports which have been submitted to me indicate that conditions are not nearly so distressing as some would lead us to believe. The main fault appears to be the lack of good productions, pictures upon which the exhibitor can depend for a reasonable profit. Over-production of mediocre films appears to be doing more to injure the business than conditions arising from the war.

Nation Now Wealthy

"On all hands we hear reports that the nation has been so absorbed in the war since the soldiers of America entered the trenches in Northern France that interest in moving pictures is waning. Shortage of money also has been advanced as another reason for business depression.

"But in contradiction is the fact that the country has never before had so much money. The war has brought a veritable golden windfall in some sections. Men and women are earning higher salaries than ever before. We never hear of bread lines today. If war conditions have caused a falling off of theater patronage I am confident the depression is but temporary. There is bound to come a re-action that will carry interest in the theater back to flood tide.

Too Many Mediocre Films

"From what I have been able to learn, however, the mediocrity of photoplays has been more responsible than war conditions for the falling off of business. The market is cluttered with program productions of little or no merit, which the theater-going public is ever demanding something new and something bigger. The novelty of the five-reeler has long since vanished. Many theaters now exhibit two such features a day and comedy and educational reels and vaudeville in addition.

"The remedy for such conditions as have impelled certain gentlemen to fear for the future of the industry is mainly in better pictures. The picture business does not differ from the show business. The public wants the best always if the price isn't too high. The company that sells the best pictures and employs the most economical and efficient system of distribution will have no cause to complain.

"Special Feature" Is the Thing

"The 'special feature' is the production of the future. The sooner the manufacturers cease grinding out their grist of mediocre features the sooner the tide of business will swing in their favor.

"Our company, which was organized for the express purpose of distributing special productions, has found a tremendous demand among the exhibitors the country over for the special production based upon a successful play or popular book, or possessing exceptional advertising qualities.

"The crying needs of the hour are better pictures and mutual co-operation and square dealing. Cut-throat competition must stop. The manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor must get together and work for their mutual welfare and, above all, calamity howling must cease."

Uses 8,000 Miles of Film in Year

Fox Releases One Hundred and Five Productions Averaging Six Reels Each During Last Twelve Months

ONE hundred and five productions averaging six reels each—that is William Fox's contribution to the 1917 screen product. Twenty photoplays in this total were specially elaborate and spectacular.

The output from the Fox studios is said to be the largest for a year of any concern having no subsidiary producing organizations. It represents an annual consumption in excess of 8,000 miles of film—more than enough to reach across the continent to San Francisco and thence on to Yokohama, or from London to Moscow and back, twice. The amount of celluloid used would make a strip one-third of the way around the world.

About three-fifths of the pictures were taken in California. The rest were made at the Fox plant in New Jersey. All of the twenty-six Fox film comedies and the six Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedies were done in the west. Such pretentious super-productions as "The Conqueror," "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Treasure Island," "Cleopatra," and many others, were likewise screened on the Pacific coast.

One of the most important of Mr. Fox's achievements during the year was the inauguration of the series of photo-dramatic spectacles such as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin," with Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin. These plays were of a type new to the cinema world and their advent was the occasion of wide laudatory comment.

Twenty-seven stars were on the William Fox lists in the last twelvemonth. Of those still with the organization, George Walsh and Virginia Pearson appeared in the most features—eight each. June Caprice had the leading role in seven, William Farnum and Gladys Brockwell in six each, and the others range from five down to one for Sonia Markova and Jewel Carmen, whose initial starring vehicle, "The Kingdom of Love," is released on December 23.

Theda Bara starred in seven productions, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, the most notable of which was "Cleopatra."

William Farnum in "Les Miserables," directed by Frank Lloyd, was another ultra-fine film. The picture has just begun a run at the Lyric Theater in New York City.

C. H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, is visiting eastern cities in the interest of Christie Comedies.

Exposition Offers Various Advantages

GRAND CENTRAL PALACE SHOW INVITES ACCESSORY AND SUPPLY MAKERS

BY FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT,
Executive Secretary, Motion Picture Exposition, Grand Central Palace, New York, February 2 to 10

WHILE the producers and distributors of films generally realize the value of co-operation and members of both the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are sufficiently foresighted to see that only by co-operation can the industry grow greater and more sound, there is evidence of a lack of this spirit of co-operation among the makers of accessories who sell to the manufacturers and exhibitors.

Many supply and equipment concerns have seen the wisdom of concerted effort and are numbered among the numerous exhibitors at the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 10, but others are making the war, the high cost of living, etc., an excuse for not taking space.

Poor Economy Unwise

Now there is a big difference between war economy and the sort of economy which stifles trade. Motion pictures are the cheapest form of amusement the public can buy and the allied industries should do their utmost to preserve the prosperous condition of the big industry of which they are the tributaries during these war times.

The Motion Picture Exposition affords the acessory and equipment maker an opportunity to increase and improve his business. It also serves to interest the public to a greater extent in motion pictures, for the program for the coming show is most elaborate and will warrant wide newspaper and magazine publicity throughout the country.

Not Alive to Opportunity

But there are hundreds of concerns marketing various sorts of equipment for the playhouse, studio, and the actors themselves, who are not fully alive to the opportunities. There is not an industry of any size which does not in some way contribute to the film industry.

Producers of chemicals, celluloid, lighting apparatus, furniture, glass, interior decorations, carpets, rugs, automobiles, building materials, electrical apparatus, paints (both oil and grease varieties), powder (smokeless and otherwise), gowns, hats, tailored goods, shoes, wigs, artificial flowers, jewelry—in short, everything from artificial tears for tragediennes to pies for comedians might be featured profitably at the Exposition.

Expositions Help Industry

One has but to consider the other great industries which cater to the public's recreation for a moment to realize how expositions have helped to make them what they are today. Take the automobile accessory industry for example. For the last seventeen years manufacturers of motor cars, parts and sundries have exhibited at the annual automobile shows.

There has not been a National Automobile Show held during the last ten years in New York and Chicago that could accommodate all of the accessory makers who applied for space.

It was through these get-together events primarily that automobile parts became standardized—so that they could be produced cheaper and therefore more cars and accessories could be sold.

Idea Exchange Valuable

The exchange of ideas made possible at these shows enabled the new inventions and ideas offered to secure the consideration they deserved and the fitted to survive.

More and more industries began to contribute to the enormous output of automobiles until now there is not an industry that does not contribute to the motor car industry and the various food industries which, of course, contribute to the workers in the factories.

A lamp-lens maker who produced only a thousand pairs of automobile lenses in 1907 makes more than 300,000 pairs per annum nowadays; spark plug makers who did only a trifling business a dozen years ago now turn out spark plugs by the million. Ask some of these men how expositions helped them.

Boat Shows Successful

The motor boat industry is a parallel example, with its annual expositions, while the hotel men of the country, realizing what can be accomplished by co-operation, have held two successful annual shows at which there were several hundred exhibitors producing every conceivable line of goods that possibly could be sold to a hotel.

The same exhibitors at the first of these, participated in the second exhibition, together with a horde of new exhibitors. Why? Because, primarily, they found that it paid them; secondly, they know that co-operation was helping their business as a whole. In like manner the motion picture equipment industry can be developed.

Industry Gets Profits

It should be borne in mind by those who are trying to sell goods to the motion picture men that the profits of this exposition are to be divided equally between the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and that this money will be used to further the interests of the motion picture and accessory industry, such as fighting antagonistic legislation, the censorship abuse, Sunday closing, taxation, and other needed purposes.

No commissions are being paid to solicitors for this exposition. The regular staff at the headquarters of the National Association is doing all the soliciting, organizing and staging the entire display. The coming exposition is not like some of those of the past, where private promoters exploited the industry for their own benefit and pocketed the lion's share of the proceeds.

Exhibits Increase Business

The alert manufacturers of sundries and equipment will exhibit at the exposition because they know it will be the means of increasing their business just as the film producers know they will increase theirs. They by their concerted action will help to promote the industry in general. They are reading the handwriting on the wall which seems to say in effect:

"Keep the industry firing on all twelve cylinders; keep up public interest in motion pictures by selling exhibitors more modern goods and letting them give the people better theaters and better programs; the people must be amused in spite of the war and its horrors; the people must be shown in motion pictures what our boys are doing 'Over There.'

"Photoplay houses must not shut down because of the war; they must improve so that a still larger proportion of the masses will visit them."

The Motion Picture Exposition is a huge film caravan headed up the road to Bigger and Better Business. Join in the procession and lend your moral and financial support to this undertaking, which will in many ways revert to your interest and success."

War Takes Five Fox Publicity Men

Five members of the general publicity bureau of the Fox Film Corporation now are serving the United States Government, either in the army or the navy.

Arthur B. McGinley, formerly editor of the Exhibitors Bulletin, one of William Fox's publications, is a private in a machine gun battery, being stationed at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

Jay Voorhies, who until his enlistment covered the Fox Eastern studios for the publicity department, is a chief yeoman in the navy, at present being attached to the cable censor's office in New York City.

Robert Houghton, who was connected with the publicity bureau's photographic division, is now at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., as a private in the heavy artillery.

Two other members of the publicity staff have departed within the last week. A. B. Bernd, engaged in special work, and Gerald B. Spiero, who prepared the mimeograph and clipping sheet services, have enlisted in the quartermasters corps of the army and will be stationed within a short time at Jacksonville, Fla.

More Metro Soldiers

Dwight Begeman, cameraman, is the latest Metro employe to enter the service. He has left for his home in St. Louis, to enlist in the navy, and he hopes to be assigned to the work of taking motion pictures for the government. Jack Lamond, another of Metro's photographic force, is already engaged in taking pictures of naval manoeuvres. Irving Flisser, formerly a member of Metro's electrical force, is in the navy. These men did not wait for the operation of the selective draft.

War Is Fox Subject

Gladys Brockwell is now working on the production of "For Liberty," a new film play that deals with the international struggle. Most of the scenes in the drama are laid in Berlin.

Film Players Enjoy Roughing It

Vitagraph Artists Are Having Great Time on Outing on Mount Wilson While Making Blue Ribbon Feature

THE Greater Vitagraph Company making "Cavanaugh Forest Ranger," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon feature in which Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are to be starred, is camping among the giant pines on Mount Wilson, in California, where the early scenes in the picture are being photographed in all the grandeur of those famous forests.

Director William Wolbert expects to keep his company there a month and there will be no protests for every member in having an ideal time with just enough "roughing it" to make them forget the work incident to making the picture. A score of cabins have been built for the occupancy of the screen actors and for the exteriors.

Most of the interiors in "Cavanaugh Forest Ranger" will be made on the new stage just completed at the Vitagraph Hollywood plant. The stage is 150 by 300 feet, one of the largest ever constructed for screen photography. Mr. Wolbert and his company are the first to use it.

The cabins on Mount Wilson will be transported to Hollywood and set up on the stage, as will a number of the great pines to give a realistic background to the sets.

The completion of the new stage was the occasion of a celebration which proved quite an event on the screen colony in Hollywood. Miss Shipman was hostess and to her belongs credit for the artistic dressing of the big, open air ballroom. A trellis was built amout thirty feet from the floor and served as a ceiling from which smilax and hundreds of chinese lanterns, electrically lighted, suspended. A Jazz band furnished music, and refreshments were sold over the bar in the Western saloon by William Duncan and his cowboys from the serial company in "Vengeance— and the Woman." Carol Halloway conducted a shooting gallery and the proceeds of the ball, a goodly sum, were given to the Red Cross. W. S. Smith, manager of the studio, turned the switch which formerly opened the improvised ballroom.

Nell Shipman, one of the stars of Vitagraph's "Cavanaugh—Forest Ranger."

Wastes No Food in Dining Scene

Charles Miller, director for Norma Talmage, claims to have broken all records for Hooverizing the movies in the newest of the Talmage productions, "Chosts of Yesterday," the screen adaptation of Rupert Hughes' drama, "Two Women," soon to be released.

The cabaret scene in "Ghosts of Yesterday," in which two hundred principals and extras dined and supped, was four or five days in the making and during that period not a single morsel of food was photographed by the camera-man. This foodless feast began with cocktails and ended with nuts and all of the intervening courses were conveniently swathed in darkness.

A breakfast scene for which a zealous assistant had ordered grapefruit was speedily Hooverized by Mr. Miller, who practiced another form of camouflage in this instance without making the movie fan think for a moment that anything had been taken away from the realism of the picture.

And so every day continues to be meatless and wheatless at the Talmadge studio under Mr. Miller's regime.

Nephew of A. E. Smith Is Wounded

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, has received a letter from his nephew, Vincent Smith, stating that he is now in a hospital in France recovering from wounds received during recent fighting on the Somme and also carrying the information that he has just been promoted to corporal.

"Just to celebrate the occasion," the young man wrote, "I received a 'packet' but my wounds are not of a very serious nature and I expect soon to be back at the Huns."

Corporal Smith, a son of George Smith, European manager for Greater Vitagraph, is one of six blood relatives of the Vitagraph chief now fighting the Germans or in training for war.

Lieutenant A. V. ("Vic") Smith, formerly studio manager in Brooklyn, a brother of Albert E. Smith, received a commission at Plattsburg in the first class of officers to take the training course, and now is an instructor at one of the national army camps.

Sergeant G. H. Smith, another nephew who has just returned to London after a long period of service on the Ypres front, has been selected on the field for promotion to a second lieutenancy in the British army.

Jack Smith, a private in the British army, also a nephew of Mr. Smith, is in service at Salonica, and Corporal J. Smith, another nephew, is "somewhere in France."

Frank L. Smith, nephew, is a member of Battery A, California Field Artillery, and may now be in France.

Actor Turns Author

Otto Lederer, Vitagraph character player, who has a prominent part in "Cavanaugh Forest Ranger," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon feature, has turned author and producer. Last week his new sketch, "Partners," had a successful tryout on the Pantages circuit.

U. S. Disagrees with Chicago Censor

DECLARES "ROSE OF BLOOD" IS PROPER FOR PUBLIC EXHIBITION

THE United States Government, through the committee on public information, of which George Creel is chairman, has stamped its approval on "The Rose of Blood," the William Fox Standard Picture which depicts the efforts of revolutionists to overthrow the government of the Czar.

This approval has been given in the face of the statement of Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, Chicago film censor, that he had refused a permit for showing the production in Chicago because the committee on public information, which exercises much the same sort of supervision over motion pictures that it does over newspapers, had requested such action.

Major Asks Suppression

As a matter of fact, according to Mr. Creel, Major Funkhouser was responsible for calling the attention of the government to the film. He wired the department of justice requesting assistance in preventing the production from being shown, his telegram being referred to Mr. Creel, who turned it over to Director L. M. Rubel of the division of pictures.

For the purpose of co-operating with federal authorities to the extent of its ability and to give them first hand knowledge of the scope of the picture, the Fox Film Corporation sent a print of "The Rose of Blood" to Washington. It was reviewed by the division of pictures and by representatives of the war department.

Government Gives O. K.

After seeing the production, Mr. Rubel wrote the following letter to Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox corporation:

"The picture, 'The Rose of Blood,' has been reviewed by this committee and representatives of the War Department and is released for exhibition without cuts or changes."

The government thus gave its approval to the production which Major Funkhouser sought to suppress.

Injunction proceedings are pending before Federal Judge Carpenter in Chicago to prevent Major Funkhouser from enforcing his mandate against the exhibition of the picture.

Major Stands Alone

"The Rose of Blood" is a Russian play and was written by Richard Ordynski, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, who played opposite Miss Theda Bara, the star.

The picture has been released since November 4 and has been shown in most of the large cities of the country, including Washington, the seat of national government, but encountered no opposition until it reached Chicago.

It has passed the censors of Ohio, Pennsylvania and every other state and city, except Chicago. Reviews in the daily press and the trade papers are reported to have generally been highly commendatory.

The timeliness of the production and the stamp of reliability which it bears, owing to the author's familiarity with his subject, have resulted in "The Rose of Blood" appealing strongly both to exhibitors and the general public.

Author Is Native Pole

The spirit of the picture, according to the Fox management, is anything but such as to afford opportunity for criticism on the ground of national interests. Mr. Ordynski is a native of Poland and his treatment of the Russian situation is altogether sympathetic, the picture's presentation of facts being wholly favorable to the revolutionists. The government established by the latter, it will be remembered, was immediately recognized by the United States.

George Walsh, Fox star, performs spectacular feat in "The Pride of New York."

Three Cameras Catch Aerial Thriller

It often is almost as difficult to obtain really satisfactory photographs of remarkable stunts as it is to devise and carry out the stunts themselves. This was true in the case of one of the scenes in the George Walsh photoplay, "The Pride of New York," which William Fox will release as a Special Feature December 9.

Arrangements had been made with a contractor erecting a building at Madison avenue and Fortieth streets, New York City, to have Walsh hauled twenty stories into the air at the end of a chain. It was necessary, of course, to show that the actor really was performing a daring feat—not merely dangling on a few feet above a studio floor. Three cameras accordingly were used. One was on the ground, pointing upward, taking the whole flight. For close-up purposes and to show the roofs of adjoining buildings, another camera ground away from a position on the fifteenth floor. It pointed downward and showed Walsh being hauled up. A third camera, on the twentieth story, caught the actor as he rose the last five flights and came "over the top" to safety.

There are three persons in the cast besides Mr. Walsh. Regina Quinn, who plays opposite him, is new to the Fox forces. James A. Marcus, cast as Walsh's father, in consequence of his intemperate habits and his son's efforts to reform him, creates much amusement. William Bailey is the fop of the production.

The production was staged and written by R. A. Walsh.

Signs Another Feminine Star

A. E. Smith Makes Long Time Agreement with Miss Grace Darmond, "The Lillian Russell of the Screen"

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, announces that he has signed Miss Grace Darmond, sometimes called "the Lillian Russell of the screen," to a long-term contract and that she will be starred in Blue Ribbon features.

Miss Darmond was recently engaged for a special role in "In the Balance," a five-reel feature in which Earle Williams is featured, and her work was of such extraordinary merit that President Smith immediately offered her a permanent place in the circle of Vitagraph stars.

Miss Darmond, who is one of the youngest stars in motion pictures today, is a girl of wondrous beauty, with an aureole of sunlit hair, large brown eyes and a perfected moulded face. She is slightly over five feet in height and weighs about 125 pounds.

She has been a featured player almost from the day she stepped into the Selig studio in Chicago three years ago. She got her first chance in pictures when, as a schoolgirl, she visited the studio with a party of her classmates, and the director impressed them into a scene. Her striking beauty and her exceptional ability to wear pretty clothes so appealed to the director that she was offered a permanent place in the company and accepted it at the close of her school year.

Prior to her advent in pictures and even while she was going to school, Miss Darmond had had some experience in theatrical stock, and after a brief experience in small parts at the Selig studio she was advanced to the position of a leading woman. Her first important picture was "Your Girl and Mine," a propaganda picture made for the Illinois Suffrage Association and written by Gilson Willets. Next she played the leading feminine role in a three-reel subject, "The Quarry," and then was featured in support of Tryone Power in "A Texas Steer." She also appeared with Otis Harlan in "A Black Sheep" and with Harry Mestayer in "The Millionaire Baby" and "The House of a Thousand Candles." Miss Darmond left Selig to go with the Astra company and was the star of the serial entitled "The Shielding Shadow" and of other productions, among them "Absolute Black" and "The Black Orchid."

Miss Darmond was chosen as the star of the first Technicolor feature, and at the conclusion of her work in this was engaged by President Smith for support of Mr. Williams in "In the Balance."

The role portrayed by Miss Darmond in this piece, it is declared, is one of the most difficult a woman has been called upon to play, but she handled it with such grace and finesse that she was at once picked as an actress of exceptional talent.

Miss Darmond is a native of Toronto, but left her native town when she was ten years old and she was reared in Chicago. Her first stage experience was in the play "Editha's Burglar," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, and later appeared in numerous other stock plays.

The claim to fame of Miss Darmond does not rest entirely on her beauty and her histrionic talent, because it is of record that she displayed her daring by making a trip with Leo Stevens in a balloon and also by jumping with a parachute from a balloon at Jersey City. On this occasion she landed in the Hudson River, but as she is an expert swimmer she suffered no ill effects.

President Smith declares that Vitagraph will feature Miss Darmond in Blue Ribbon features and is planning to provide her with vehicles which will display her beauty and talent to their fullest extent. At the present time she is working with Harry Morey and Florence Deshon in "The Other Man," a Blue Ribbon feature which is being produced under the direction of Paul Scardon.

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's youngster, in a scene from "Sadie Goes to Heaven."

Mary McAlister Play Nearly Finished

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," Little Mary McAlister's newest Essanay production, is about completed. It tells the story of a little tenement maid and her ragged dog in search of happiness in the home of a millionaire. Essanay's six-year-old child star wears both ghetto rags and "Gold Coast" fineries in this picture. And Mary's mother provided for her some special gowns to wear. Patsy, the ragged dog that plays with her throughout the picture, was imported for this production from his home on a Michigan farm. An exceedingly intuitive creature, he does some splendid and amusing pantomime. Essanay is bonded to assure his return home in first-class condition.

Brazilian Actor Makes Screen Debut

Syn M. de Conde, the Brazilian actor, makes his first American screen appearance in the Metro Company's first Nazimova release in January. M. de Conde has just come to this country from France, where, after two years on the fighting line and six months in a hospital, he was given an honorable discharge and by reason of it came to New York.

M. de Conde lately has been enraptured with the gaiety of the tea-hour in the New York hotels. But a cloud of unhappiness has been cast upon this hour for him because but two lumps of sugar per person are permitted with a pot of tea. As M. de Conde comes from the land of sugar—South America—he is particularly addicted to its use. In the accompanying photograph he is shown solving the tea-hour sugar-problem by taking his own sugar with him!

Books Patriotic Film

"For the Freedom of the World," distributed by Goldwyn, has been booked by Marcus Loew for his entire American chain of theaters.

Universal Makes Patriotic Move

Buys Large Quantity of War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps for Distribution Among Employes

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Co. will enter largely into the purchase and distribution of War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps put into circulation by the government to raise $2,000,000,000. Universal took a quarter of a million in the first Liberty Loan and sold the bonds on weekly payment plan to its employes. In its move to promote the War Savings Certificates, every employe will be invited to participate, and Universal's Accounting Department will propose that every bill it pays for merchandise, supplies and other business obligations shall be partially accounted for in Thrift Stamps or Certificates.

"The Federal Government's plan is admirably adapted to our purpose," says Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., in announcing the move that organization has made to extend the sale of War Certificates and Thrift Stamps. "We shall invite our employes to accept Thrift Stamps as part of their weekly salary in any amount from the minimum of 25 cents to as much as they feel inclined to take. At Universal City and Coytesville, where our studios are located, the players and working staff will have the same opportunity to accept War Certificates and Thrift Stamps as part of their weekly pay; and in all Universal branches, throughout the world, the Liberty Savings Stamps will be available to our employes in any amount they may choose to accept.

"Our employes invested generously in the first Liberty Loan and have now paid in more than fifty per cent of their holdings. They have made weekly payments, and I venture to say that few, if any of them, have missed the amount that has been transferred weekly from their salary to their Liberty Loan account. But it naturally follows that only a limited number felt that they could undertake the purchase of Liberty Bonds, and there were scores of Universal employes who failed to voluntarily buy Liberty Bonds for the presumable reason that they did not care to undertake a consecutive investment. Thrift Stamps provide for just this contingency—our employes may invest any amount they choose and undertake a consistent weekly saving plan that will not alone serve a patriotic purpose but be profitable as well.

"Some 3,000 persons are on Universal's payrolls throughout the world. Two-thirds of this number are employed at Universal City, at Coytesville, in the home office and in our laboratories. Seventy-two distributing exchanges are scattered throughout the United States, and in addition to the salary lists there is a large turn-over of money in paying our bills for supplies, merchandise and accessories. We shall ask the firms we deal with to accept a certain share of their payments in War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps. We shall send these government certificates abroad to our branches in the Far East, South America, Great Britain and the Continent, thus giving a world-wide circulation and interesting our employes overseas in this beneficial plan for savings and governmental support."

Aviators Visit Triangle Studios

Recently, when an entire class of American aviators, comprising many fliers, was making a trial trip from North Island, San Diego, to Venice and return, they "dropped in" at the Culver City studio of the Triangle Film Corporation and were at once made the guests of honor.

While being shown about the studio, the aviators were given an opportunity to witness a part of the filming of the forthcoming Triangle feature, "The Gown of Destiny," a drama of love and war. The fliers showed great interest in the trenches constructed in the studio and several men remarked, "Those trenches look mighty realistic."

After taking lunch with Studio Manager E. G. Patterson and after thoroughly looking over the studio, the aviators were escorted to their planes by practically every member of the Triangle playing forces.

Before starting on their return flight, several of the boys circled over the studio, and taking advantage of the realism to be secured thereby, Director Lynn Reynolds, had several "shots" of the aviators taken to be used in "The Gown of Destiny."

Miss Hadie Clayton, who has been a great favorite in stock for some time, has become a member of the Paralta forces.

"Baby Grand" Stars Face Big Year

Jane and Katherine Lee Will Appear in Eight William Fox Standard Pictures During 1918

JANE and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, have a busy year ahead of them, having been assigned by Mr. Fox to make eight pictures for the Fox Standard Picture schedule. Scenarios for some of these have already been written and others are under way.

The Lee children having demonstrated that they are especially adapted as fun makers, these eight pictures will be comedy-dramas with the "human interest" vein predominating.

The decision to confine the little Lee's to comedy-drama was largely the result of requests from exhibitors who have found the children in this role one of their biggest box office assets.

A vigorous publicity and advertising campaign of national scope in behalf of the Fox "Baby Grands" is now in full swing. An unusual line of posters and other advertising matters on "Troublemakers," their next picture, has been provided for exhibitors. "Troublemakers" was ready for exhibition December 9.

President Writes to Douglas Fairbanks

Douglas Fairbanks has received a letter from President Wilson that reads:

"My dear Mr. Fairbanks:

"George Creel was kind enough to hand me yesterday a copy of your 'Laugh and Live' which we you were thoughtful enough to send me, and I want to send you this line of sincere appreciation. If laughter can keep me alive, I am apt to live, because I fortunately come of a race that had laughter implanted in them.

"With much regard and very best wishes.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,

(Signed) "WOODROW WILSON."

Press Critics Praise Fox Production

New York Newspapers Are Unanimous in Praise of "Les Miserables" with William Farnum in Leading Role

HUMAN interest is the keynote of William Fox's production of "Les Miserables," according to the dramatic critics of New York City who witnessed the initial showing of the picture on the night of December 3 at the Lyric Theater. The production also was praised because of the care and accuracy with which the Victor Hugo story had been followed. William Farnum, in the role of Jean Valjean, generally was credited with having scored the triumph of his screen career.

It was the judgment of The New York Herald reviewer that "the photoplay probably is as close an approach to literature as has been accomplished on the screen," and The Morning Telegraph declared "the visualized work is every bit as strong as the printed word."

Following are a few of the comments of New York newspapers:

"There are people who are continually crying for better pictures. To them we would say: 'See "Les Miserables."'"—Tribune.

"Quite the best picture that has been seen hereabout for a considerable period."—Times.

"In strength of plot and human interest 'Les Miserables' surpasses the memorable 'Honor System.'"—American.

"A note of poignant human interest was dominant through it all."—Herald.

"An excellent example of what the movies can do for the classics of literature."—Morning World.

"The humanity of the book was well reproduced."—Evening Post.

"Months of preparation have been spent and the splendid photoplay showed fine evidence of this fact."—Globe.

"A delicious piece of character work. It was a triumph of art for William Farnum."—Evening World.

"The film moves on with a dramatic intensity that never flags. Always the human interest is uppermost."—Evening Telegram.

"The ability of William Farnum as an actor of dramatic and heroic roles is given more scope in this picture than perhaps in any other in which he has appeared, and the star made the best of his opportunity."—Morning Telegraph.

News Film Appeals to Men of Draft Age

To men of draft age a special appeal is carried in the Hearst-Pathe News, Number 97. An excellent opportunity is offered them, by a special ruling of the War Department, to enlist for the work to which they are best fitted. Mechanics, carpenters, sail makers, wood workers, motor-truck drivers, and many other craftsmen are vitally needed in the aircraft division of the Signal Corps. Men enlisting in this division now, for the work they are qualified to do, will be attached to the manufacturing departments of the Government and probably will not be liable for oversea service, as they will be attached to one of the departments classed as expert labor.

This opportunity is open until December 15th. After that date, all men of draft age who are called will be compelled to go to any division to which they may be assigned.

Realizing the enormous number of people who see the Hearst-Pathe News every week, the Signal Corps had special motion pictures made at one of the important aviation fields, showing the various lines in which men are needed, and these pictures are included by Mr. E. Cohen, the editor of the news film, in issue 97, calling the attention of all men of draft age to the special opportunities offered in the aircraft division.

Becomes Allied Aviator

Joseph Waddell, for several years cameraman at Universal City, is now with the Allies aviation corps in Italy. Fred LeRoy Granville, of the Universal camera force, has received a letter from Waddell, stating that he is at Foggia, on the Venice front. Waddell was one of a dozen Pacific coast men who were sent to Italy for war training under the Italian aviators.

Sonia Markova, as she appeared in "The Painted Madonna."

Picture Makes Stars of Two Actresses

Whatever may be the public verdict of "Les Miserables," the production will be memorable to two young women in the employ of William Fox as having been the picture which gave them their opportunities to prove their right to be starred.

Before Madame Sonia Markova was announced as a star, Mr. Fox wished to verify his judgment by a try-out and gave her the part of Fantine in his William Farnum de luxe production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece. He put her in high grade company, knowing that if she could make the part stand out under such conditions, she had the mettle justifying advancement.

The other young woman who started her first starring picture under Mr. Fox's management just after finishing her performance in "Les Miserables" was Jewel Carmen, who had already proved her attractiveness and worth in numerous pictures, including William Farnum's de luxe production, "When a Man Sees Red." Mr. Fox brought her from the coast especially to play the part of the grown-up Cosette and her portrayal was so satisfactory that she was sent immediately back to California, and Frank Lloyd with her, to be starred in a play called "The Kingdom of love."

Vitagraph Adapts Oppenheim Novel

Produces Screen Version of 'The Hillman" as Blue Ribbon Feature with Earle Williams in Lead

EARLE WILLIAMS, as John Strangeway, in "In the Balance," a Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature scheduled for release December 17, will be seen in one of the strongest characterizations since his portrayal of John Storm in "The Christian," according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph.

"In the Balance," which marks the appearance of E. Phillips Oppenheim on the list of Vitagraph's "best authors," is an adaptation from the novel, "The Hillman," and is declared to be an extraordinarily powerful story with highly romantic element in it. It was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon.

Grace Darmond, an actress of extraordinary beauty and proved popularity, and Miriam Miles, who has played in several Blue Ribbon features, are the chief feminine supports of Mr. Williams. Robert Gaillard plays the role of an elder brother of Williams, a fine character role, and Denton Vane is unusually effective as the heavy.

News of State Rights Productions

THE LATEST FROM ALL OVER THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Offer Shorty Hamilton Comedy Dramas

W. H. Clifford Photo Play Company Will Produce One Feature Each Month for State Rights Buyers

THE success attending the private runs of the first two pictures produced by the W. H. Clifford Photo Play Company has induced Victor Kremer, the general manager, to contract for the production of one five-reel feature a month. These features will be exploited on the state rights plan and a franchise for the entire twelve stories to be released on the first day of each month during 1918 will be open to negotiation.

These franchises are available to the most progressive buyers in the various states who may either purchase outright or make arrangements upon a co-operative basis. These releases will prove of unusual value to all buyers and exhibitors because they introduce Shorty Hamilton, who already has the backing of over 20,000,000 movie fans.

Shorty Hamilton's first release is entitled "Denny from Ireland." Tom Moore never wove a more interesting theme into song or story. The contrast between the pathos and ready wit of the lad in Ireland and his humorous escapades in the cattle country, form a theme mingling laughter and tears.

Several of the Shorty Hamilton subjects to follow have already been decided upon and some of them already produced. They will be known as "The Snail;" "A Prisoner of War;" "In Society;" "A Texas Ranger;" "On Wall Street."

Through the state right buyers and prominent exhibitors, the motion picture public will be asked to vote their choice of other humorous stories which will be presented for their selection through the medium of the press.

After thoroughly investigating market conditions for a period of two weeks, the W. H. Clifford Company came to the conclusion that Ernest Shipman was the best qualified to handle the exploitation of this series both in the United States and abroad, and a contract was accordingly entered into, whereby all business in connection with this series of pictures will emanate from Mr. Shipman's offices, 17 West Forty-fourth street, New York City.

Is Business Bad? Ask Hoffman

His Foursquare Exchanges Are All Doing Well According to Reports Received from the Managers

EVIDENCE that exhibitors throughout the country are holding an optimistic viewpoint and in generous numbers, is forthcoming from reports received by several of the representative producing and distributing concerns. M. H. Hoffman, Inc., through its Hoffman-Foursquare exchange, have verified the recent utterances in these columns of Mr. Hoffman that he believes that business prospects are excellent. In response to communications sent out by P. V. R. Key, of the Hoffman organization, the following responses have been received from the various exchange managers:

Hy. Gainsborg, manager of the New York Foursquare exchange: "Our contracts would appear to be the best evidence that exhibitors will always back good pictures when they can be had at right prices. I am sure that contracts for the next six months will materially surpass those of the past half year."

Samuel Rubenstein, manager, Boston Foursquare exchange: "New England exhibitors are not pessimistic. They are having splendid patronage and do not hesitate to book any picture they feel supplies the demand of their patrons."

A. G. Buck, manager Philadelphia Foursquare exchange: "Philadelphia will do its full share and the industry need have no apprehensions concerning bookings of pictures that have merit."

T. C. Bromstetter, manager Pittsburgh Foursquare exchange: "I am so enthusiastic over the progress of our product that I haven't noticed that exhibitors were not optimistic over the future."

Harry Marsey, manager Buffalo Foursquare exchange: "The industry will experience the greatest era of prosperity in its history and before long; watch and see if I'm not correct."

G. W. Erdmann, manager Cleveland Foursquare exchange: "There is a strong undertone which is most encouraging."

Paul E. Kreiger, manager Cincinnati Foursquare exchange: "Personally I can only say that our own business shows a steady increase. As for prospects, they are bright. An optimistic attitude is beginning to show among exhibitors in this part of the country."

George Weeks, manager Detroit Foursquare exchange: "Hoffman-Foursquare pictures are progressing so nicely that perhaps I haven't noticed any feeling among exhibitors that hasn't been optimistic."

Frank J. Flaherty, manager Chicago Foursquare exchange: "Why take the time to reply to your remarks. Foot up the contracts I am sending. Business improving every day."

Ben S. Cohen, vice-president and general manager Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Colorado: "Whadya mean, optimism? Of course, we have it out here. Been open a week and first runs going like the proverbial hot cakes."

J. J. Unger, Toronto head of Metro Film Services and Foursquare exchange: "Our business is exceptional in every respect."

M. C. Hughes, manager Montreal exchange: "Business is great."

Charles W. Harden, manager Atlanta Foursquare exchange: "Exhibitors down here are doing well and expect to continue to do so."

Jerome Abrams, assistant general manager Foursquare exchanges: "My visit to Atlanta and to New Orleans most gratifying. I look for steady growth of business down here. Opening Dallas exchange next week."

E. T. Luk, division manager of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky: "Everything points to a wonderful year for 1918."

Shallenberger and Clune Combine

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has completed a deal with W. H. Clune of the Clune Productions, Los Angeles, for the marketing of "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona" in all unsold territory.

Robert W. Priest, who is associated with Mr. Shallenberger in the state rights business, is laying out the sales and advertising campaign.

Mr. Shallenberger is pleased on account of his success in securing these two features and said that already he had received bids for territorial rights that bespeak great interest among buyers. It seems that the history made by J. L. Adams in exploiting "The Eyes of the World" in the eastern states has spread throughout the industry and wherever pictures for the state rights market are discussed, some one mentions the fact that Mr. Adams took $131,000 with "The Eyes of the World" as a road show out of the eastern states.

Mr. Shallenberger admits that while he believes there is a great deal of money to be made with "The Eyes of the World" as a road show, he prefers to sell it on the open market to independent distributors rather than to enter the field and compete against them.

Give Trade Showing in New York

"The Eyes of the World" will be given a trade showing in New York shortly. This production is an adaptation from Harold Bell Wright's famous novel of the same title, and was produced by W. H. Clune, whose "Ramona" was presented at the Forty-fourth Street theater for an extended run. Shallenberger & Priest of the Arrow Film Corporation are the selling managers of both "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona."

Exhibitors See "Those Who Pay"

Announced as the second special release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, "Those Who Pay," produced by Thomas H. Ince, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and starring Bessie Barriscale, was shown for the first time at the Broadway Theater on Wednesday morning, December 5, before an overflowing audience composed mainly of exhibitors from the metropolitan district.

Especial interest attached to the presentation of the new Ince production in as much as it was made by the famous director recently as a state rights subject and not for any program. "Those Who Pay" is in seven parts and unfolds an engrossing narrative of romance and political intrigue in which, besides Miss Barriscale, Howard Hickman and Melbourne McDowell also portray important roles.

Raver Picture Ready for Cutters

The final scenes of the new mystery story, which has been announced as in course of production by Harry Raver, have been photographed and the picture is now ready for the cutting room. The picture is described as a new type of "crook" drama and contains a plot of unusual complications interwoven in a story, which in addition to possessing a strong mystery element, is notable for plenty of action of the rapid fire sort.

After considering the capabilities of over twenty prominent players of national reputation, Harry Raver decided that Edmund Breese possessed ideal qualifications for the leading part. Alma Hanlon plays the leading female role.

Goldberg Opens Independent Office

Pioneer in State Rights Field Quits Ogden Pictures Corporation to Operate His Own Organization

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, lately sales and exploitation manager for the Ogden Pictures Corporation, has completed plans for a state rights sales and exploitation office, and is located in the Times Building, New York City. The plan of Mr. Goldburg's operations as outlined in his announcement is essentially in accordance with the ideas of those who had endeavored to form the Producers' Protective Association.

Mr. Goldburg will exploit and handle independent productions that are to be released through the state right market and as part of the entire scheme, will supervise and regulate the advertising and publicity, and the advertising matter issued in connection with the productions placed under his charge.

Mr. Goldburg is credited with having been the first independent producer to release pictures on the state rights plan, having originated the present method of state rights distribution. He organized the Life Photo Film Corporation, which produced among others "The Grey Hound" and "The Ordeal," and which numbered among its stars Lionel Barrymore, Mary Nash, Florence Nash and Elita Proctor Otis. Mr. Goldburg thereafter organized the Rialto Film Corporation, and with both companies acted as supervising director and sales and exploitation manager.

Before joining the Ogden Pictures Corporation, which has ceased producing, at least for the present, Mr. Goldburg was sales and exploitation manager for the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

In the course of his activities, Mr. Goldburg toured the entire United States and Canada several times in the exploitation of independent productions and in order to keep abreast of market conditions.

Mr. Goldburg has given out the following statement at his new offices:

"The entire industry has suddenly awakened to a condition of affairs that some characterize as likely to destroy the entire industry. This clarion call is sounded because of extravagance in production and methods of distribution, and lack of business co-ordination. The same condition of affairs exists, although to a lesser extent, in connection with independent producers and state rights exchanges.

"With my organization I hope to ultimately house under one roof a medium of distribution concentrating the advertising mediums, and engaging in a method of exploitation that will materially reduce the expense of selling and exploiting, and shorten the time within which a picture production can be entirely disposed of."

"Mother" Aids in Convict Reform

McClure Picture Meets With Approval of Officials in Penal Institution Following Prison Showing

FOLLOWING out the arrangements which have recently been completed by General Enterprises, Inc., with the various penal institutions throughout the United States for the purpose of using the McClure picture "Mother" as the means of uplift, the film was shown to the prisoner body of Great Meadow Prison on November 30. That the McClure production fully justified the faith which has been placed in it as a force for betterment and uplift is demonstrated by the following letter from the librarian of the correctional institution at Great Meadow:

STATE OF NEW YORK
GREAT MEADOW PRISON
Comstock, N. Y.,
December 3, 1917.

The McClure Publications,
25 West 44th Street,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

May I thank you on behalf of the inmates of New York State's Honor Prison, for the loan of your picture "Mother." And to the thanks I would add a word of congratulation to you on the organization which could visualize the story in mind, gather so excellent a cast, direct and photograph the play and then assemble it with such skill as to make the most of every opportunity without ever once over-emphasizing the superb work of the star.

This production plainly marks a new step in the evolution of the photoplay. It reveals the conscious recognition of the limitations and possibilities of the motion picture and its application to its proper use, even as a medium of entertainment as "The Silent Messenger of Truth."

It teaches, as all things should be taught, by presenting to the mind a logical sequence of coherent images which portray a right idea and then leave the mind leeway to function and unfold for itself in the direction in which it has been gently and unsuspectingly led.

No one can begin to measure the good such a picture does.

The reviews for the press will be going out tomorrow and will be published some time during the week. Copies will be sent you as soon as available.

Sincerely yours,
THE LIBRARIAN,
Great Meadow Prison.

The penal institution at Great Meadow "New York State's Honor Prison" and the showing of the George Loane Tucker picture starring Elisabeth Risdon is directly in line with the efforts of the prison officials to employ the aid of such a film subject as "Mother" in their praiseworthy work of reclaiming the unfortunate "shut-ins." Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., who were responsible for the screening of "Mother" at the great Meadow Prison, are busy at present mapping out a schedule whereby the picture will be presented in the various state prisons throughout the country.

Alfred Hickman has been added to the cast of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, which is in the making at the Brenon studios on Hudson Heights.

U. S. Exhibitors' Adds to Sales Forces

Joseph Desberger, G. W. Wilson, A. B. Lucas and Joseph Levy Join Corporation in Middle West Territory

RECENT additions to the sales forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, a representative of which is stationed in every large city of the United States and Canada, are Joseph Desberger, G. W. Wilson, A. B. Lucas and Josephy Levy, all of whom have had long experience in the Western district.

Mr. Desberger comes to the U. S. Corporation from the World Film Corporation and will represent the booking concern in St. Louis, where he will make his headquarters in the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange. Mr. Desberger formerly served as manager of the World exchange in St. Louis.

Mr. Wilson, who will direct the marketing of U. S. productions in the Cincinnati district, resigned as representative of the Triangle Film Corporation in that city to join the U. S. forces. Before serving with Triangle, Wilson was manager of the Paramount exchange in Cincinnati.

A. B. Lucas also leaves the Triangle to take charge of U. S. business in Kansas City, where he will make his headquarters in the Hoffman exchange. Mr. Lucas has served many years in the Western territory for important film concerns. He was with Paramount in Chicago, Triangle in Omaha and Kansas City and also served as the Triangle manager in Chicago, which position he resigned to affiliate with the U. S.

Joseph Levy has resigned from the sales forces of Select Pictures, Pittsburgh office, to handle U. S. productions in Minneapolis. Mr. Levy formerly acted as the Fox representative in St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha.

Other district representatives will be named in the near future by Joseph Partridge, division manager for the U. S., who is now engaged in assembling the company's sales forces beyond the Rockies. Mr. Partridge will announce shortly the names of the men who will act as U. S. representatives in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle, in each of which cities the U. S. headquarters will be established in the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges which have recently been opened.

Shipman Business Is on the Increase

The fact that there are thirteen letters in his name does not cause Ernest Shipman any worry. His second month in business for himself and which has just come to a successful close shows a rapidly growing organization and many things accomplished. Nine independent productions have been contracted for and will be manufactured during the coming months. They will be released in the open market. Some of the most prominent producers in the industry have these productions in hand. Contracts have been executed for exploitation of the Shorty Hamilton five-reel comedy successes, which will be released one a month to state right buyers during 1918.

A line of patriotic comedies in one and two reels is being exploited and will soon be announced. The Art Studios and Laboratories situated at 316 East Forty-eighth street, New York, have been working night shifts in order to care for new business, which includes some of the European war negatives of D. W. Griffith.

Some prominent stars of the screen have been enrolled under Mr. Shipman's management and a special service department has been opened to attend to their needs. Among others is King Baggott, who has been placed with the Warton Brothers Secret Service Serial, and which will keep Mr. Baggott occupied until April next, after which time he will be starred in two special state rights features which Mr. Shipman has already contracted for.

Syn M. DeConde has recently completed a prominent leading role with Madame Nazimova in a Metro feature. Many prominent authors have entrusted business management of their works to Mr. Shipman's play department. John R. Coryell's first screen release, "Talking Talbot," was so well received in scenario form by the state rights buyers throughout the country that its early production is now assured.

Start Trip to Show "Mother"

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., announced this week, that following an itinerary which they have carefully mapped out, M. R. Fink started on a tour of the important states in the interests of "Mother."

It is planned to hold screenings of the McClure feature in all of the important cities, at which time the prominent territorial buyers of the various sections will be present. All of these gatherings have been pre-arranged by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin in order that every state right man may have the opportunity of viewing the merits of "Mother" for himself.

In conjunction with this plan it has been arranged for Mr. Fink to carry with him a quantity of copies of the January issue of the Ladies World, which magazine carries a complete story in fictional form of the George Loane Tucker production.

owner of "The Warrior" for the states of Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. He originally purchased the territory embraced by the state of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio and Indiana for the seven part feature exploiting the hero of Cabiria from Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., which firm controls the territorial privileges to the picture for the United States and Canada.

Pleased with Outlook for "Raffles"

L. L. Hiller of State Rights Firm Is Confident John Barrymore Feature Will Go Well With Public

WITH a dozen special feature photodramas vieing for public and state rights attention last year at this time as against a decidedly limited general output of what might be termed special production features this year, Hiller & Wilk, Inc., are happy over their acquisition of the selling of the state rights for the new L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas' (Inc.) first presentation, "Raffles, The Amateur Cracksman," with John Barrymore in the title role.

"We've never handled a picture that met with such overwhelming and immediate demands," said L. L. Hiller, president of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

"Perhaps it is the fame of the picture. Everybody knows it is the one detective play that has seen stage realization in almost every city in the United States that boasts a stage. Professionally it was played in more than 8,000 theaters. In stock it has had more than a thousand representations. Societies from the far Canadas to the Gulf and from the Pacific border to far eastern shores of the Atlantic have sought and in some instances secured the right to present it at benefits. In book form, the stories have enjoyed circulation to a greater extent than any detective story ever published.

"Perhaps it is the combination of the play's stage and the story's book fame and the association with its screen version of John Barrymore, who plays the fascinating hero. Barrymore is conceded to be the most popular of all the younger stage players today. His performance in the Galsworthy piece, "Justice," last season and his appearance this year for a long run in New York and now on tour of "Peter Ibbetson" has added infinitely to the esteem affection with which the playgoing public regards him.

"The emphatic widespread fame of the production is evidenced in many ways. The unanimous acclaim of state rights buyers and their representatives who saw the picture, and who necessarily spread the report of its super excellence is one proof. Herbert Brenon's enthusiastic approval of the production voiced so substantially as to purchase for the Brenon Distributing Company the right for New York and Northern New Jersey fairly within an hour after he arose to applaud after the final scene is another.

"We anticipate one of the most successful gross results of all the big pictures we have handled when we finally come to close our books on this feature. It is big enough to place down as an independent show in any first-class theater and fine enough for any audience anywhere, while at the same time satisfying the masses who crave sustained excitement and thrilling situation.

"No reviews of the year have been so lavishly in praise of every element of the production."

Forbes-Robertson Film Nears Completion

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which Herbert Brenon is presenting Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, is now rapidly nearing completion. Sir Johnston will sail for England next week, and the production will be offered to the public shortly after the new year.

Mr. Brenon has great enthusiasm and confidence in this production.

"It carries a message of hope and optimism which Americans—indeed people of every land—are seeking in these dark and troubled days," he said. "To me the message of loving kindness is the greatest message that can be borne to the world today, and that is the message of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back.' I love the subject; it is full of sunshine, beauty and comedy, as well as drama of the finest order. I am firmly convinced that not only will it be the most artistic achievement of my career, but the most popular. It fulfills to the highest extent one of the greatest functions of the screen—to spread the message of hope to the masses."

Buys More Rights to "The Warrior"

The remarkably enthusiastic reception which "The Warrior" has met with from the exhibitors throughout his territory has induced J. R. Grainger, manager of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, Ill., to contract for further rights to the spectacle starring Maciste. To this end, contracts were closed this week whereby Mr. Grainger becomes the Corporation. Bessie Barriscale is the star of the production.

The cast supporting Florence Reed, who plays Body, are Milton Sills, as Mind; Irving Cummings as Soul; Wellington Plater as Champion; E. J. Radcliffe as Banker; Edwin N. Hoyt as Worldly Wise; Fred C. Jones as Musician; Albert Hall as Poet and Actor; H. Hatteras as Aristocrat; Margaret Pitt as Wife; Mildred Chesire as Frail Sister and George Cooper as Slimy Thing.

Makes Personal Appeal to Patrons

Charles H. Ryan, Successful Exhibitor, Keeps in Close Touch With Audiences—Program Editorials Effective

CHARLES H. RYAN, manager of the Garfield Theater, one of the Chicago West Side's photoplay palaces, is making a success as an exhibitor. Part of his success is due to the fact that he keeps in constant touch with the theater-goers of the district that supplies his patronage. He studies their wants and he gives his personal attention to every picture that is shown on his screen. Every program issued by his theater carries some personal message to the patrons of the theater, printed on the front cover of the four-page weekly booklet. A recent message to Mr. Ryan's public follows:

"The Garfield Theater is a peptimist. What is a peptimist? A peptimist decides when others hesitate. Acts when others dream. Works when others wait. Succeeds when others fail."

When the subject of the war tax began agitating the motion picture industry, Mr. Ryan took the subject up with his patrons in an open and frank manner. He began preparing the Garfield's patrons for the tax in advance of its becoming effective, and when he was forced to make an advance in price to meet the added cost of operating his house he published a personal message on his program.

Mr. Ryan takes pride in the care that is given to making patrons comfortable. On this subject he gave the following space in his program:

"The management of the Garfield is sparing neither time nor expense in getting attractions that will meet with the approval of the good people of this locality. We also take great pride in keeping our house in a clean and sanitary condition. When visiting the Garfield, please make yourself at home. The attendants are at your service and are instructed to see that your every want is carefully looked after. Should they not do so, please notify the manager and he will quickly rectify it."

In justifying to his patrons the increase in Sunday admissions, Manager Ryan sent out the following notice under the heading "A Necessity":

"Our regular price of admission is ten cents, but on Sundays and on occasional stated week-day evenings, the price of admission to the Garfield will be fifteen cents. This increase in the price of admission when big pictures or popular stars are shown is not actuated by any desire on our part to take advantage of your eagerness to see the best pictures. It is dictated by necessity. The explanation of this necessity lies in the fact that film actors and actresses who have become popular favorites realize their drawing power and demand fabulous salaries. In turn film producers demand high rental for the films and the exhibitor is thus constrained to increase the price of admission."

Previous to the admission war tax taking effect, Mr. Ryan informed his patrons that the theater was required by law to collect the tax and explained the amount that must be paid on each ticket. He had printed a card containing twenty-five spaces for punching out the war tax amounts, each space representing one cent, which he would turn over to the government. These cards were sold to theater-goers for twenty-five cents, with the understanding that a refund would be made at any time for any amount not cancelled.

After the tax was effective, Mr. Ryan published the following editorial on his program cover:

"Who gets the war tax? You do, for it is spent to insure your peace, to protect your interests, to help end the war. The tax is your share, Mr. Patron. Uncle Sam is also collecting from us in many ways. In addition, our pictures cost us thirty-three per cent more than a year ago, and operating costs have increased likewise."

The following editorial comment, written by Mr. Ryan on thoughtless patrons, is interesting:

"Thoughtless patrons chatter away during a performance in such a manner as to distract the spectator's attention. To enjoy a motion picture and the music that accompanies it, a person must concentrate with the same degree of intensity as he would give to a good book. Talking during a motion picture performance is, in our belief, not only a show of bad taste, but also of unfairness, and we think there would be less of it, if people would only stop to consider their neighbors."

Frequently when Mr. Ryan is offering an attraction which he knows has an unusual amount of virtue as a picture, he prefaces his announcement of the week's bill with his personal indorsment as in the following examples:

"We stake our business reputation on the statement that 'The Fighting Trail' is the greatest photoplay serial that ever was produced. Every kind of thrill and danger—of the air, the land and water—is met with as the story unfolds."

"'The Honor System'—Personally guaranteed attraction. By this we mean that this picture is the cream of a number of feature pictures. When any of our productions are so advertised, you know that they are exceptionally good. It is the best your amusement money can buy."

Wants No Theater in Neighborhood

There is a controversy on in St. Paul, Minn., over the projected construction of a neighborhood theater on Grand avenue. That there are yet some persons who are not converted to the idea that moving pictures are not harbingers of evil is evidenced by the following, which was written to the St. Paul Dispatch and signed "An Old Resident":

"I beg to differ from the pioneer resident of Lincoln avenue in the statement he makes that he 'believes 80 per cent of the residents want a moving picture house on Grand avenue.' I am also a pioneer resident of Goodrich avenue, having lived there over twenty years, and I do not feel we have ever needed or need now a moving picture house in our neighborhood. Moving pictures are taking our children out at nights, when they should be home or in bed, especially the younger ones, and the downtown houses are near enough for the older ones. If the movies are not so near the children will not go so often and so get into the habit, a bad one, of spending money constantly. Moving pictures have been and are responsible for a lack of home life and companionship at home. I think I can count on the fingers of one hand the really good pictures I have seen, yet I try to go, when I go at all, only to the best. They usually give the young people a wrong idea of life, too. No, we do not want a moving picture house on Grand avenue. It will cheapen our neighborhood. What our American children need is more home life, and I sometimes think the parents do, too."

Does $21,000 Business in One Week

S. L. Rothapfel, director general of the Rialto Theater in New York, reports a total business of $21,000 during a one week's run of a William S. Hart picture. This, in spite of war conditions, is an indication of what can be done in these times and it is a tribute to the managerial genius of the men who are directing the fortunes of the Rialto. The theater seats 2,000 persons and it required several packed houses to bring the total business up to $21,000.

Film Deliveries Are Delayed

The Regent Theater, one of Calgary's finest, has had an unusual run of ill-luck with respect to the delivery of films for shows as advertised. The trouble became so pronounced that Manager H. B. Wright finally published an apology in the local newspapers.

The first picture to miss fire was the Goldwyn "Fighting Odds," which was delivered in Edmonton instead of Calgary by mistake. This was not presented until Tuesday evening, although it was advertised to start on the Monday. Another Goldwyn, "The Spreading Dawn," did not arrive on time and several performances were missed.

Lyric Presents Fox Masterpiece

"Les Miserables," in which William Farnum portrays the immortal Jean Valjean, had its first presentation on December 3, at the Lyric Theater, in New York City. William Fox, who is sponsor for the picturization of Victor Hugo's tremendous melodrama, has never offered a subject of greater promise—and of promise which has been entirely fulfilled.

Fresno Picture Palace Opens

Liberty Theater Attracts Two Thousand Persons Who See Most Modern Screening of Photoplays

TWO thousand persons took part in the dedication of the new Liberty Theater in Fresno, Cal. The gathering made no secret of the favorable impression made upon it by the picture palace on which Theodore Keech and James Beatty spent a quarter of a million dollars. The Liberty is the largest theater in Fresno. Only two houses in the San Francisco district are larger —the California in San Francisco and the new Oakland Theater in the suburb of that name.

The Liberty Theater is pronounced an architectural achievement of no mean proportions. The exterior of the building is an example of the highest type of Italian renaissance which has lately been adopted by many of the larger picture playhouses of the east. It has been declared to be a civic ornament of which the community of Fresno is proud.

Entering the theater, one is impressed with the harmonious artistry that characterizes the decorating scheme. The entire effect is dignified and refined to a high degree.

Floors and stairs are covered with soft Wilton in which has been woven the barely perceptible letters, "L. T.," the theater's monogram. All the colors are in restful pastel tones.

Large bronze lamps shed a glow of soft orange illumination over the foyer. The auditorium is lighted by the indirect glow of immense bronze baskets.

The entrance is floored with white tile. The walls and columns throughout the theater are done in three tones of gray —a rather warm gray. There are lounging rooms on the second floor. In the foyer of the third floor are the executive offices and a completely equipped hospital room.

The balcony seats rise from the second floor to a height approximating what would be the sixth floor of the building and the last row of seats is against the little row of narrow windows that complete the exterior ornamentation of the building, giving perfect ventilation to those sections of the theater which usually are stifling. There are 1,000 seats on the main floor and 1,000 seats in the balconies. The balcony is entered from both the second and third floors—through a tunnel from the second floor and by broad stairways from the third. Under each seat is a ventilator which gives out heated air in winter and cool air in summer.

The operating room is on the lower floor and is walled on the four sides with concrete and is perfectly ventilated by a plant of its own. The location of the booth allows a straight line of projection of light, giving the picture a uniform intensity on all parts of the screen, which is seventeen by twenty-two feet square.

Loew Buys Memphis Theater

Marcus Loew's theatrical expansion has again reached Memphis, Tenn. After having put up one high-class vaudeville and moving picture house during the past year, he has purchased a house where he will show moving pictures alone.

On December 22 the Loew interests will take over the Princess Theater, which has been running for many years as the "five cent house." Some of the largest features have been shown at this theater, with no increase in the admission price, and the building itself is one of the largest in western Tennessee. Heretofore the program has been changed daily, but under the new administration the highest class features will be shown for ten cents, with change of program four times a week.

Repairs will be made and the auditorium brightened up and improved to meet the demands of the Loew standard. The house will be known as Loew's Princess, retaining the name given it by the Princess Amusement Company, under which it formerly operated. The slogan of the house, which has become generally known over the state—"Five Cents, Why Pay More?"—passes out of existence with the transfer of ownership.

Want Children Shows

The Manitoba Sunday School Association, in annual session in Winnipeg on November 30, passed a resolution favoring the holding of special moving picture shows at local theaters at stated hours each week to which all children would be admitted without restraint.

Theater Changes Hands

The Gaiety Theater, Winnipeg, Man., known as "The Theater Beautiful," passed into the control of the management of the Province Theater, one of the city's best houses, on December 10. With the change in management came a change in policy, the feature innovation being the operation of the theater each day from 1 p. m. to 11 p. m., instead of in the evenings only. The matinee price has been fixed at ten cents, while after 7 p. m. the admission for adults is fifteen cents. Children pay five cents in the afternoons and ten cents at nights. It has also been arranged to change programs twice weekly, instead of three times as heretofore.

Boosts for National Amusement Day

Nashville, Tenn., is making every effort to continue the prestige of its amusement houses in movements of a patriotic nature, and will do its full share toward making "Nation-Wide Amusement Day" a success. Harry Sudekum, manager of the Princess, is in charge of the local divisional work, and promises to give a good account for his show.

Helps Soldiers' Smoke Fund

The Princess Theater of Nashville, Tenn., recently placed a container in the lobby to gather smokes for the Tennessee boys in camp at Greeneville, S. C. Harry Sudekum, manager of the Princess, wrote Lieut. Baxter Jackson, of the 114th Field Artillery, as follows:

"I am sending you a box by express prepaid as a result of our campaign to collect smokes for the Tennessee boys, which I wish you would distribute among your men, with the compliments of the Princess Theater."

The box contained over 17,000 cigarettes with a number of cigars and packages of smoking tobacco.

Adds Vaudeville Bill

The Majestic Theater No. 2 of Memphis, Tenn., has added a vaudeville act to its picture program. The "theater with the largest seating capacity" is using this one act of high-class entertainment to break the program between reels. A Hawaiian act is holding the boards for the current two weeks. Within a few weeks the Majestic Amusement Company's newest theater, the Majestic No. 1, will put into effect a twice-a-week picture change, instead of the four-time-a-week change as now running.

Shows Latest War Films

The Strand Theater in New York this week is showing the Donald C. Thompson war films. The photographer has assembled six reels of the best pictures he obtained while he was with the Russian army recently. Many of the scenes were taken during actual fighting between the Russian and German armies. Mr. Thompson appeared before the Advertising Club of New York one night last week and during the showing of the film related the story of how some of the more spectacular scenes were obtained.

"Fringe of Society" Shows at Loew's

Something different in motion pictures has been announced for showing at Loew's New York Theater, Wednesday, December 12, in "The Fringe of Society," the Hoffman-Foursquare picture written by Pierre V. R. Key, music critic and magazine contributor, and the lineal descendant of Francis Scott Key, author of the Star Spangled Banner.

It is the initial production of the George Backer Producing Corporation. "The Fringe of Society" contains a big theme, one of daily interest to every human being in this country, the attempt and suppression of a food staple manipulation, the keen struggle between a patriotic newspaper owner and editor, and a political trust vandal.

The settings are of unusual excellence, a charming and wholesome love interest runs through the plot, there are many comedy situations, and not a few stirring scenes. Co-starring in the cast are Ruth Roland, Leah Baird, Milton Sills and J. Herbert Frank.

Exhibitors' Organization Is Growing

Associated Theaters, Inc., Announces Meeting for Present Month—Ready to Begin Business Operations

THE first meeting of stockholders of Associated Theaters, Inc., has been announced to take place at the West Hotel in Minneapolis, Minn., Monday, December 17, to elect a board of five directors, adopt franchise and information blanks after discussion, and to transact other business.

This is an organization of exhibitors which was incorporated last October for $100,000 under Minnesota laws to operate booking offices and film exchanges in the following cities of four states: Minneapolis, Duluth, Milwaukee, La Crosse, Sioux Falls, Aberdeen, Fargo and Minot.

Six hundred theaters was the goal to be reached before starting actual operations. According to General Manager T. J. Hamlin in a statement issued December 1, the five hundred mark had just been passed.

The present officers are: President, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; vice-president, W. S. Smith, Menomonie, Wis.; chairman, C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; treasurer, H. P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn.; secretary and general manager, T. J. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minn.

"Although our plan is a radical departure from the present expensive methods of marketing and distributing film, supplies and equipment, we do not expect to revolutionize the motion picture industry in a single day," declared Mr. Hamlin.

"At the start we will not be able to serve all of our members all the time, but we can start serving part of our members all the time and all of our members part of the time.

"In the meantime they will continue dealing with the individual exchanges direct as under the present system. When we have the film that each member desires for every day in the week at a price which he feels he can individually afford to pay, then and only then will we be able to serve the entire membership every show.

"While this evolution is going on, the members have no dues or assessments to pay, so there can be no dissatisfaction.

"Film rental is to be determined from an information sheet which each exhibitor signs before a notary public, giving a list of film, makes and subjects, which he has played during a certain selected period of fourteen days, and the rental he paid for them. He must also state the titles of the last five state rights pictures he has played and what he paid for them.

"We feel that film rentals must be established by precedent only and that is the foundation we start from.

"When an exhibitor applies for membership he pays ten dollars and there are no dues or assessments. He is issued one share of common voting stock and has a buying privilege in Associated Theaters, Inc.

"When the Associated can supply him for a few days each week we notify him to send a sum equivalent to pay his film rental to us for a period of ten days. He is issued additional stock in return for this, but does not receive any film C. O. D., nor does he have to pay his bill to us until the end of each current week. Ours is a mutual co-operative, equitable form of organization to practice collective merchandising.

"This is what forms the buying power of thirty thousand dollars a week and still each exhibitor retains his own individuality. It is not the middleman that we are aiming at.

"Our sole aim is to eliminate the middleman's enormous expenses. We want each producer and parent distributing company to realize more net profit on these four states and our members under our plan of distributing will be able to obtain better film at a lower film rental.

"Our weekly sales sheet eliminates the expenses of traveling salesmen and saves approximately seven thousand dollars a week in these four states.

"The seven inspection points to be established in the different localities will save our members express charges to the same amount weekly because of the shorter hauls.

"It is just eleven hundred miles across our zone from Sheboygan, Wis., to Beach, N. D., and it is a losing territory for the producers and distributors.

"We will either play film on a percentage or buy exclusive rights and pay for our own prints. Associated Theaters, Inc., is not in the business to make a cent of profit from anybody. It is here to give the best service to its members at the very lowest cost.

"If there is very little film handled at the start our overhead expenses will be correspondingly low as they can be made very slight."

Build Costly Egyptian Set

No expense has been spared in reproducing an ancient Egyptian throne room, one of many of the unusual scenes shown in "Her Sister," the Empire All Star production, which presents Olive Tell for the second time on the screen and is scheduled for release by Mutual December 24.

Director John B. O'Brien is a "stickler" for truth in detail. He was not satisfied with the descriptive literature at the New York public library so, accompanied by David Powell and a well known artist, a visit was made to the Egyptian room in the Metropolitan Museum, where, by special arrangement with the authorities, permission was granted to make drawings of the pottery, carvings and draperies and other furnishings of the royal chambers of ancient Egyptian royalty.

From these drawings duplicates were made. Imported tapestries were obtained to conform to the designs of the original ones and a magnificent tiger's skin was purchased as a covering for the throne itself.

Scene Painters Expert at Camouflage

It is said that every motion picture studio in California is represented at the American Lake, Wash., national army cantonment. About fifty-seven of these formerly were motion picture scene painters. In accordance with the attempt to put every man where he will be of the most service in the new army, these scene painters, along with numerous cartoonists and other artists, have been selected for special training in camouflage.

They go through the usual drill and regular training. Then at other hours they attend camouflage classes. Experiments have proved that moving picture scenic artists are expert at making things "look like what they ain't."

Food Pictures Are Showing

Official motion pictures bringing home the vital importance of increased food production will be shown by the Department of Agriculture in hundreds of motion picture theaters throughout the country.

The first release, which is being handled under an agreement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company through its exchanges, is now going the rounds. It shows activities in the national forests, which are important sources of timber and water supply and supply much grazing land for live stock.

Breaks Foot While Asleep

Arthur G. Hoyt, casting director at the Triangle Culver City studio, is confined to his home suffering from a broken bone in his foot. Hoyt is unable to explain the accident. He went to bed one evening last week and when he awoke the next morning his foot so pained him that it would not support his weight.

Reynolds Wears Broad Smile

Director Lynn Reynolds, of the Triangle Culver City studios, is celebrating the arrival of a baby son at his home in Hollywood. Reynolds now sports a wide, "pleased with himself smile," and says the boy is "one wonderful chap."

"Les Miserables"

Fox Production, Starring William Farnum. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

"LES MISERABLES," with William Farnum appearing as Jean Valjean, presented by William Fox, is without doubt one of the greatest melodramatic screen triumphs ever done. The three absolutely essential points necessary in the making of a picture which will last for all time, namely, the story, the star, and the direction, have been wonderfully put together in the filming of "Les Miserables."

Most everyone of mature age at some time or other has either read this classic of Victor Hugo's or else has been made familiar with the story of the poor honest peasant, Jean Valjean, who spent most of his life in prison for the theft of a loaf of bread.

One of the reasons why the works of Victor Hugo have lived through the ages and never grown old, or the morals of his stories failed to fit the ills of present day humankind is due to the fact that Hugo's style of telling his stories made them so vivid in one's imagination that the reader was carried along living with the times of each story.

William Farnum, however, brings us Jean Valjean as he must have been. For over two hours he gives us Jean Valjean as a living creature. Were one, after seeing this Valjean of Farnum, to describe his appreciation of Farnum's work, those who had not seen for themselves would be inclined to think the description was that of a deep emotionalist or one inclined to use superlatives.

Wonderful, sums it up. Not only does Farnum give us the best interpretation he has ever done but the supporting cast with Hardee Kirkland as Jaret, the police inspector; George Moss as the Bishop, Sonia Markova as Fantine, Jewel Carmen as Cosette, and all the others who are part of the story of "Les Miserables" have reached such a height of perfection, it will take long for any other dramatic production to surpass.

Great credit must also be given William Fox for turning such a valuable work over to Frank Lloyd for adaptation and direction. It would be hard to find any spot in the action of the picture where Mr. Lloyd could have improved it. Everyone, young and old, should see this production, not only for the excellency of the entertainment but for the valuable moral which is pointed out and which causes one to think for hours after coming away.

The story: During the chaotic state of government in France in the latter part of the seventeenth century and the early part of the eighteenth century, poverty laid its heavy hand on the peasantry throughout the country. Jean Valjean was one of the latter. At the opening of "Les Miserables," Valjean finds himself the sole support of his widowed sister, who is trying to mother her six children.

On the day the story begins, Valjean returns home to find but a small portion of a loaf of bread and a bowl of soup. Seeing the children crying for food, he gives what is left to them and leaves the house. Going into the village he sees in a bakery window a loaf of bread. Necessity, brought about through the pangs of hunger, prompts him to break the window and steal the bread. Rushing home with it he is caught by the police, taken before the judge, and sentenced to five years in prison for the theft of the loaf. The injustice of the sufferings he and his fellow prisoners are made to endure by the police turns him from a simple, honest man to a vengeful knave. His numerous efforts to escape, all of which are unsuccessful, lengthens his term from five to nineteen years. At the end of this period we see the body of a man, with the soul of a brute, released from prison.

Then begins the wanderings of Jean Valjean—through the country searching for employment. Whenever he is about to make a fresh start, destiny in some way discloses the fact that he is an ex-convict, and he is shunned and cast back into degradation. Finally, he finds himself the guest of the bishop of a convent. The good bishop realizes what the man needs and feeds both his physical hunger and that of his soul. Valjean is given the guest chamber for the night in the next room to the bishop, and while the bishop is sleeping, Valjean decides to murder him and steal what he can, but as he is about to strike the bishop, the kindly old face of this reverend man rises before him and he leaves, taking along such silver as he can.

He is caught by the police and returned to the convent, whereupon the bishop, instead of preferring charges, gives him not only the silver he has stolen, but two of his prized candlesticks, telling him that from thence on he belongs to the bishop, body and soul, as the bishop has bought and paid for him and given his soul to God.

Jean goes forth from here a changed man, and the remainder of the picture shows him rising to the heights of kindness for all. Wealth comes to him and he is then able to spread much happiness among those with whom he comes in contact, but throughout the whole action of the story, Javert of the police hounds him and tries to drag him down.

Were an accurate description of the whole film to be given, the complete story of Jean Valjean would have to be told in order to do it justice, but anyone who can possibly find time to see this picture will be spending it to advantage.

As has been said before, the triangle of the picture is complete. The story is a classic, the star is an actor who is real, and the direction has been done superbly. Laughter and tears are combined. Thrills crop up at expected and unexpected moments, and at all times the settings, both interior and exterior, are true to the action of the time. "Les Miserables," as done by Fox, should continue to pack any house for years to come.

"Tom Sawyer"

Famous Players-Paramount with Jack Pickford. December 10. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

A DELIGHTFUL visualization of Mark Twain's incomparably humorous book, "Tom Sawyer," has been effected by Jesse L. Lasky with Jack Pickford seen in the role of Tom.

All of the beloved characters which one finds between the pages of the classic are faithfully represented in this picturization, which is saturated with atmosphere and quaint humor, and which can't fail to delight both those to whom the book is familiar and those to whom the characters are introduced for the first time.

Tom Sawyer is shown in all his boyish mischievousness, playing pranks with Huckleberry Finn and Joe Harper and worrying his Aunt Polly and Sid and Mary. As the characters were introduced at the Strand Theater, New York, where the picture was being shown, patrons laughed uproariously in sheer anticipation of meeting old friends, and they were not disappointed in the scenes which transpired.

The costuming in the picture is a picturesque treat and care has been shown in the smallest details to reflect closely the story as related by the author. The producers deserve unlimited praise in thus familiarizing the general public with a work of art which has charmed so many for so many years.

The production is one of unexcelled excellence from every point of view.

No one could have been selected who would have portrayed the likable Tom Sawyer with a keener realization of the demands of the character than Jack Pickford. He is Tom as we have always imagined him, happy-go-lucky, imaginative, dirty and lovable, the leader of the boys and the victim of the girls. Jack Pickford has never done better work and his characterization of Tom is one not soon to be forgotten.

The whole cast gives delight in their representations of the various characters and includes Robert Gordon as Huck Finn, Antrom Short as Joe Harper, George Hackathorne as Sid, Alice Marvin as Mary, Edythe Chapman as Aunt Polly and Clara Horton as Becky. William D. Taylor has directed the production with skill and an understanding of the author's work.

"My Little Boy"

A Good Christmas Picture, Bluebird Special Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

HEART appeal is the chief ingredient of this offering. It is a timely Christmas offering, with its story woven about a child and with Eugene Field's poem, "Little Boy Blue," as its inpiration. The production is very nicely done and its director, Elsie Jane Wilson, has skillfully handled her material. It is a home picture, of the type women and children will enjoy especially. A neighborhood house can make a real feature of this, by clever advertising and displays, and there is no danger of disappointment.

The acting, photography and settings of the picture are good. There are several favorite players in the cast, Ella Hall, Emory Johnson, Zoe Rae and Gretchen Lederer among them. Good acting is also contributed by Winter Hall as Uncle Oliver, Harry Holden as the old butler and the youngster who plays the hero as a child. Elliott J. Clawson is the author of the story.

To sum up our opinion of the release, we believe it will be as much of a success as "Mother O' Mine."

The Story: Fred's guardian was a very severe uncle, who cared nothing for the boy and made his life unhappy. When Fred fell in love with Clara, Uncle Oliver opposed their marriage, but Fred rebelled at his control and married the girl. For many years the uncle could not forgive. When Fred's little son, Paul, called "Little Boy Blue," was about six years old, Fred at last persuaded his uncle to visit them and see the youngster. Uncle Oliver accepted the invitation to spend Christmas with them, but was so gloomy and cross that he almost spoiled the occasion.

On Christmas morning, Uncle Oliver was awakened by the romping of "Little Boy Blue," who had came downstairs to play with his new toys. The uncle went back to sleep and dreamed that he and Fred were hunting that day and accidentally shot the child. "Little Boy Blue" died, and his toys were left where he had placed them. Fred and Clara left their home and gradually became estranged. At last they sought a divorce, and Uncle Oliver, at last feeling sorrow and pity, tried to reconcile them in the memory of their little son.

Then the old man awakened and found that it was Christmas morning and that the sad accident had all been a dream. In his joy, he forgot his severity and became as gay and frolicsome as "Little Boy Blue" himself.

"The Tenth Case"

World Film Picture with June Elvidge. Released December 17. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

PLENTY of opportunities are given June Elvidge in "The Tenth Case" to appear at her best, and her acting stands out as by far the best feature about the picture. Good use has been made of old material in the writing of this piece, which succeeds in maintaining a generous amount of interest until the finish. The story contains no degree of ingenuity in the telling or in the plot, depending rather upon loosely woven incidents of a more or less well-known variety to endow it with color.

A young wife who was divorced upon circumstantial evidence implicates the judge's wife in an embarrassing situation in order to prove to the judge that circumstantial evidence may be erroneous. There are a number of issues of non-dramatic value which lead up to this climax, and the ending is rather unsatisfactory, the wife returning to the husband who had cruelly wronged her, instead of marrying a likable young chap whom she was supposed to have loved from the beginning. The picture doesn't once deviate from set rules and so patrons, with whom the movies are a habit, will know just what to anticipate throughout.

June Elvidge makes the wife a sympathetic figure from the start and this portrayal will win for her many new friends. She plays with a self-consciousness that is very refreshing, and her beauty is always an asset to a picture. Others in the cast who do acceptable work are John Bowers, George McQuarrie, Eric Mayne and Eloise Clement. George Kelson was the director.

The story: Claudia Payton marries Jerome Landis, a man much older than she, in order to help her father out of financial difficulties. Sanford King loves her but for pecuniary reasons she does not follow the dictates of her heart.

Jerome Landis refuses to furnish his nephew Harry with more funds, so Harry, in order to pacify an extravagant paramour, appeals to Claudia for money. When his demands become too numerous she refuses to help him further and incurs his enmity to the extent that he plans a revenge. He hides in her bedroom at night, and the husband, when he returns, sees grounds for a divorce in spite of the fact that the wife pleads that she is innocent.

The judge grants Landis an absolute divorce, stating that in nine cases out of ten circumstantial evidence is proof of guilt.

Claudia helps force the judge's wife into the same sort of a situation and proves to the judge, when he is ready to condemn his wife, that there is such a possibility as the "tenth case."

A timely automobile accident, which kills Harry Landis, forces him to confess, on his death bed, that Claudia is innocent, so she returns to the husband who had so cruelly doubted her and caused her so much trouble.

of a number of the European countries which have sent their people to the new world. These "vision" scenes include Irish, Dutch, French and Russian settings.

In the story proper, Miss Goodrich plays a Red Cross nurse, a society belle and a western girl. The story is rather loosely put together, but its diversity should give it some appeal to almost any taste. Its best feature is its excellent photography of lovely scenes. Pictorially it is a joy.

Its success as a drawing card will depend largely upon the appeal Edna Goodrich makes in your community. She is very pleasing in this, although she is not called upon to do the heavy emotional acting some of the previous features required. The picture is lighter in vein, but has enough sentimental interest to satisfy the average spectator, although it is not very logical or true to life.

The Story: David Starr falls in love with the Red Cross nurse who aids his recovery in a Belgium hospital from battle wounds. Later he learns that she is the daughter of a millionaire and he decides to give her up. Both eventually return to America but do not meet again until two years later, when the girl visits her father's ranch in the west. She hears of a mysterious outlaw and bandit. One day she encounters him, as he is eluding the sheriff and his aids. The outlaw is David Starr. He explains his position and the injustice which has been done him. Through her father's influence, matters are straightened out and the romance begun in Belgium is continued.

A Paramount Picture with Lina Cavalieri. Released December 3. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

LINA CAVALIERI'S debut in Paramount Pictures is an event of unquestionable interest. Famed as a beauty the world over, she must prove a drawing card of exceptional magnitude, and those who see her will readily realize that her fame is well founded and not merely the idle warbling of a press agent.

The vehicle which exploits her charms is unrelieved melodrama, and contains that bulwark of melodramatic appeals, the lover who ruins himself to buy jewels for his mistress. Where the story in part is crude, Mme. Cavalieri plays with a quality of cultured intelligence which will allay criticism of it. She is always the siren through and through, but, as such, she does not, for which we offer thanks, resort to few clothes or bear-skin rugs, and she does not eternally rest upon a divan with incense burning at her elbow. She moves about like a human being, and gives us a vampire that is a living, breathing creature in whom we can believe.

Her lover is pictured as a worthless cad with whom one loses all patience, and even Elliot Dexter's superior acting does not atone for the crassness of this character. The most satisfactory feature about this picture is the appearance of the star, while the Italian atmosphere, which has been nicely depicted, comes in for second mention. The plot is only mediocre and at times is even intangible.

The scenario was prepared by Eve Unsell from the original story by Mme. Fred De Gresac and has been directed by Emile Chautard. The settings, lighting effects and direction leave nothing to be desired.

The story: Cordelia Sanzio (Lina Cavalieri) is the mistress of Harry Althrop (Elliot Dexter), who has about come to the end of his resources, having spent all of his money upon her. Knowing this, Prince Estazery and Count Rudolph decide to use Harry's need for money to obtain information for which the Austrian government is willing to pay a big price.

Count Rudolph pays court to the Princess and gives her costly presents, thus inciting Harry to terrific jealousy and making him desire more money with which to compete with his rival.

It is at this point that Count Rudolph offers Harry a large sum of money if he will obtain for him a certain document to be found at the American embassy. Harry, desiring money with which to keep the love of Cordelia, agrees to do this despicable deed, and obtaining the paper, turns it over to the Count and receives his reward.

His act is discovered and he is given his choice between public disgrace and the privilege of killing himself. He chooses the latter and retires to carry out the bargain, when Cordelia rushes in upon the scene. She had learned of the theft and the reason for it, had gone to the Count's house under pretense of caring for him, had killed him to obtain the papers, and was now ready to forfeit her life to save Harry's.

Harry is allowed to enlist, to find his manhood on the firing line, and Cordelia takes her own life.

Artcraft Picture with William S. Hart. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

ALL of the western dash and spirit which one has come to expect in Hart-Ince pictures, plus the personality of William S. Hart, the incomparable, will make this offering as popular as any of the star's former successes. The story itself is trite, depending upon the personality of the star to make it effective and he does so to the extent that the action doesn't lag for a minute. Plenty of spirited riding, elusion of the law and gun play help to carry the picture along to an exciting climax in which Hart brings his ability as a wizard of the trigger into prominence. The picture abounds in thrills, human touches and gorgeous scenic effects, the latter having been beautifully photographed.

Hart is seen in the role of a tactiturn individual, who believes in action rather than words. He is willing to evade the law, pull the trigger on the smallest provocation, and take the wildest chances, but he also has the tenderest heart under his rough exterior and the willingness to sacrifice himself when others are in need. The part carries a big appeal and Hart is seen at his best. "The Silent Man" is a typical Hart picture which has been splendidly developed by Vola Vale is very pleasing in the role of Betty Bryce, and Robert McKim, George P. Nichols and Harold Goodwin give able support.

The story: "Silent Bud" Marr (William S. Hart) holds up a stage coach and kidnaps Betty Bryce (Vola Vale) who has just married "Handsome Jack" Pressley, a dissolute creature with another wife, whose evil design was to put Betty at work in a dance hall.

"Silent Bud" takes Betty to the home of "Preaching Bill" Hardy. Betty is furious and at first refuses to believe the stories she is told about her husband.

A large reward is offered for the capture, dead or alive, of "Silent Bud" Marr. He is seen by Betty's little brother who takes a shot at him. "Silent Bud" shoots in return and slightly wounds the boy. He then learns from the boy that "Preaching Bill" Hardy is being persecuted for refusing to disclose information about him, so plans for the boy to take him back to town, bound and covered with a gun to obtain the reward.

At the trial "Handsome Jack" Pressley is exposed and arrested, and Betty reveals her love for "Silent Bud."

THIS episode, which nears the finish, contains many thrilling scenes, notably one where a trestle is blown up as a train, carrying Nan and Gwyn, is crossing it. The train plunges into the river in a sensational manner.

William Duncan and Carol Halloway continue to do pleasing work in this serial, which proves to be one of the best ever produced.

After an aeroplane has demolished the mine, Gwyn brings it to earth with a high-powered rifle. He then makes a journey to the governor of the state, with Nan, to ask for the assistance of state troops.

A spy at the mine warns Shoestring and Cut-Deep that Gwyn is leaving and they plan to blow up the trestle over which Gwyn's train must pass. As the train reaches the middle of the trestle the nitro-glycerine explodes and the locomotive and coaches plunge into the river beneath.

"The Honeymoon"

Select Picture with Constance Talmadge. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"THE HONEYMOON," which features Constance Talmadge, is a clever little farce which doesn't, as farces so often do, strain one's gullibility to the breaking point, or annoy one by a string of palpable events. It is breezy and clean, though it tries to be naughty, and it provides genuine entertainment of the frothy, frilly variety, if such entertainment may be termed genuine.

Constance Talmadge's delightful personality has everything to do with making the picture the pleasing product that it is. She is brimful of youth and humor and artifices, and each expression which she registers is pregnant with meaning. She is one of the most capable comediennes of the screen.

The story tells of the woes of a newly married husband who finds himself in hot water during the honeymoon because of an exaggerated bump of jealousy belonging to the bride. After numerous misunderstandings and changing of bedrooms they make it all up, only to learn that an ambitious lawyer has obtained a divorce for them in record time, and there is nothing for them to do but be married all over again.

There is a great deal of dragging of trunks and clothing from one hotel bedroom to another, and of over-moral hotel clerks and bell-hops insisting upon absolute propriety between the honeymooners who don't know from one minute to the next whether they are married or not. The employees of that hotel had suspicious, prying, efficacious natures. We should hate to be obliged to stop there.

The photoplay was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, directed by Charles Giblyn and photographed by Hal Young. The beautiful scenes taken at Niagara Falls are worthy of mention. The cast is a very capable one and includes Earle Foxe as the groom, who does excellent work, Harris Gordon, Julia Bruns, Lillian Cooke and Russell Basset.

The story: Susan Greer has an uncontrollable jealous disposition and even becomes furiously jealous of Marian Starr at her wedding breakfast because she sees her husband, Richard, talking in an aside to her. Marian Starr and Susan's brother Phil wish to announce their engagement, but Phil has previously engaged himself at a wine supper to Maizie Middleton of the Jigfeld Rolics, and Maizie refuses to let him off.

The couple beg Richard to help them by seeing Maizie at Niagara Falls and buying her off. Of course there is the usual promise that Richard must not tell Susan.

Richard, as per instructions, sees Maizie in her dressing room, is seen by a meddlesome maid who informs Susan, and Susan in a high huff wires her uncle to obtain a divorce for her immediately.

The remainder of the picture is given over to explanations, misunderstandings, doubts and promises until the couple is finally reconciled midst joy and kisses, and Susan has banished the green-eyed monster from her nature.

"The Marriage Speculation"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released December 10. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell.

IT all depends upon the angle from which this picture is viewed whether it will be enjoyed or otherwise. If taken seriously one will find it a bit preposterous and feel that it is playing fast and loose with one's intelligence, but if viewed from a comedy angle if will prove at least diverting. The fact that the three principal characters are selected from a pickle factory, a confectionery emporium, and a grocery store, leads one to anticipate a comedy of note, but towards the end the picture takes a dramatic turn which is a bit irrelevant. Characters are never selected from a pickle factory for the drama. It simply isn't done.

It is a pity that the picture does not maintain throughout the degree of interest which it provokes at the beginning. The plot is good, and quite unique, but the desire to do too much with a slender story has made the author resort to the commonplace in the fourth reel, and to carry the picture to an inelegant finish.

Charles Kent, Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are entrusted with the leading parts and handle them with efficacy. Wallace McDonald is especially pleasing when seen as the lazy, plodding grocery clerk.

The story concerns Mr. Cliday, who for twenty years has worked in a pickle factory and managed to save $10,000. He desires to invest this money so as to insure him a competence for the remainder of his life.

Clara Milton works in a confectionery store and loves Billy Perkins, an unambitious grocery clerk. Cliday offers to educate Clara and give her the opportunity to mingle in society, if she will marry a wealthy man and insure Cliday a future life of ease. Clara accepts this proposition, realizing that Billy will never be able to give her the advantages for which she craves, although it breaks her heart to part with him.

After two years Clara emerges from the select school where she has been installed, and is pursued by fortune hunters who believe her to be the neice of a millionaire. Cli-day instructs her to marry the wealthiest man at her command.

In the meantime Billy has been spurred on to great ambition and has become partner in a grocery store, with the idea ever paramount of someday finding Clara and winning her back for his wife. In a society paper he sees a picture of Clara with a nobleman whom he recognizes as a swindler sought by the law. Clara has become engaged to this nobleman who is supposed to be the inheritor of vast riches but who is, in reality, after the money which he believes Clara to possess.

Billy arrives upon the scene, exposes the nobleman and learns that he himself is heir to a title and great wealth. He is reunited with Clara much to the joy of all concerned.

Cyrus Townsend Brady wrote the story for this picture, which was directed by Ashley Miller.

George Kleine Re-issues Famous Play as a Perfection Picture. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

"QUO VADIS," one of the earliest and most famous of big, spectacular productions, is to be released again through the Kleine exchanges. It has been retitled and edited and new prints are made. It appears now under the Perfection brand, and is in eight reels.

A Cines production, made in Rome and its vicinity, and containing such spectacular scenes as the burning of Rome, chariot races and gladitorial combats, the picture made a great impression when it originally appeared in this country. Its artistic merit is so high that it will be liked today, after our audiences have seen many even more elaborate photoplays. It is well worth reissuing and should be a good drawing card for both its own sake and for its early fame as a spectacular feature. Also its educational value is considerable, and exhibitors may win cooperation from schools and churches in showing it.

The story: Taken from Sienkiewicz's historical novel, the plot follows the fortunes of a young Christian girl, Ligea, and Vinitius, a Roman patrician who loves her. The dissolute life of the Roman nobles is shown, and the character of their emperor, Nero, is vividly portrayed. Nero sets fire to the city, then, fearing the consequences, lays the blame upon the small band of followers of the new Christian religion. They are burned, tortured and thrown to the lions in the arena. Vinitius follows Ligea and finally wins her. He becomes a Christian and in the more peaceful days which follow, the lovers find happiness.

THIS is the best so far of the Irene Castle Pathe five-reelers. Its foundation is a detective story, with plenty of action and interest, and with opportunities for the wearing of a wide variety of costumes by its star. George Fitzmaurice, who directed it, and Philip Bartholmae, who wrote it, have handled it entertainingly. Occasionally the story is side-tracked in favor of scenes showing Mrs. Castle in unusual costumes, but as these are cleverly linked with the plot and are in themselves diverting, no one will be displeased.

As a theater offering, this will please audiences of varied taste. It fills its purpose well and will be generally liked. An exhibitor may advertise it well with no fear of disappointing his patrons. The feminine portion of the audience will be delighted by Mrs. Castle's costumes, at any rate.

Elliot Dexter, J. H. Gilmour, Suzanne Willa and J. W. Percival appear in support of the star. The acting is good, the sets well chosen and the photography clear.

The Story: Curtis Prescott, a young Englishman, accepts a secret mission to take a priceless diamond from a jeweler in Holland to England. Soon after he leaves the jeweler is found murdered. A gang of jewel thieves follow Prescott in an effort to get the diamond. A detective from Scotland Yard, on trail of the murderer, suspects Prescott. Sylvia Carroll, in the secret service, is also in the case. The characters are all on board the ship. Sylvia almost captures the leader of the gang, but a blunder by Heming of Scotland Yard, allows them to escape.

In America, Sylvia poses as a millionairess in order to get in touch with the jewel thieves. They fall into her trap, offer to sell her the diamond, and after much excitement she, aided by Prescott, captures them.

Butterfly Western Play with Poor Story. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

TO present first its good points, we may call attention to the beautiful western scenery in this picture and the good acting by the leads. Aside from these, there is little to commend, for the story is not good and is hazy in its working out. It is not up to present-day standards and recalls old-time "westerns." We do not believe it will appeal very much to any audience.

William Stowell acts well the leading role, Doctor Lambert, but it is not a very interesting one. Helen Gibson, Betty Schade, Hector Dion, Alfred Allen, Mildred Davis and M. K. Wilson complete the cast. E. J. Le Saint directed the play from a story by J. G. Alexander and Fred Myton.

The story: Doctor Lambert and his young wife arrive at the mining town. The doctor gives his entire attention to aiding the miners. His wife is unhappy and lonesome. Expecting the birth of a child, she begs her husband to send her home to her mother. He does so, but West, a gambler, follows her and the two run away. Mrs. Lambert dies when her child is born. Her husband, learning of her affair with the gambler, gives the child to a miner's family and goes away, resolved never again to love or aid anyone. Years later, an outcast, he wanders back to the mining town. Lily Sawyer, a young girl, but already a dancer in the gambling hall, wins his friendship. West, the gambler, tries to kidnap the girl, but Faro Fanny, his accomplice, who likes the girl, saves her. Fanny recognizes Lambert and tells him that Lily is his daughter. Lambert, his heart softened, takes the child away from her dangerous environment.

Work in the Clara Kimball Young studio in New Rochelle was temporarily suspended when Miss Florence Atkinson, a member of Miss Young's staff of players, was seriously burned about the face and shoulders by the explosion of an alcohol stove in her dressing room.

Miss Atkinson plays an important role in "The Marionettes," the gripping French drama which is scheduled to follow Miss Young's current release, "Shirlay Kaye," and it was while making up for the part that the accident occurred. A small heating stove on her dressing table exploded, throwing the burning liquid over her face and head and setting fire to her flimsy negligee. A Happy New Year

Oil Stiffens with Cold

I noticed a question in your department several weeks ago from an operator who wanted to know what to do to keep the belts from slipping and he said that most of his trouble was on cold, damp days. I had some trouble like that but I found by experimenting that the trouble was not with the belts, but was caused by using too heavy an oil on the machine. On cool days the machine would work stiff until the oil was heated up a little so now I use a lighter grade of oil and I have not had any trouble since. This suggestion of mine may not be the trouble that the other party had but from the way his question reads I think that it is the same.—H. F. Ohio.

Your suggestion about the oil is very good as far as it goes but there is one thing that you want to bear in mind when purchasing oil for a projection machine and that is do not buy too light an oil. Too light an oil is just as bad, in fact worse than a heavy oil, for if it is too light the speed of the machine will throw it off. I would suggest that No. 1 Dynamo Oil is about as good as can be secured. The Power and Simplex companies each offer a very good oil that is retailed under their names and can be purchased at any first class supply house.

End Play in Sprocket

I am an operator working on two Simplex machines and I would like to have you answer one question for me. The question is this: How do you take out the end play in an intermittent sprocket on a Simplex machine? I also have a couple of suggestions to offer to the readers of the department. The first one is in reference to the patching of film where there is a scene that fades out and then in again, and the second one is a small attachment that I made to keep oil off the film. I had considerable trouble for a time in making a patch in film where there was a fade-out or where I had to join two reels with a fade-out on the end of one and a fade-in on the start of the other. That is how I hit upon using the system that I am giving you now. I find that it works fine. I took a piece of white leader one foot long and marked on the emulsion side of it with a pen and ink the frame lines as they appear on the picture film. I fastened this strip of leader on the rewind bench between the two rewinds and now when I have a patch to make on a picture with a fade-in on it I measure back from the last visible frame in the picture up to the patch and by comparing this to the strip of marked leader I can cut my patch so that it will be in frame. The method is very simple but is accurate. I was prompted to make the attachment for the machine for keeping oil off the film by numerous complaints from the film exchange that my machine was responsible for oil on the film and as I am using first run film I used every care that I knew to prevent this oil on the film. In spite of my efforts I would find oil on the film after a few hours' use. I finally discovered that the oil was coming from the crank shaft and working along the crank shaft to where the crank fitted to the shaft, just above the bottom magazine rollers. Then it was dripping onto the film. By examining the film I noticed that the oil was only on the film at considerable distance apart. I also discovered that the oil was not as heavy on the emulsion side as on the smooth side and that led me to discover that the oil was coming off the crank shaft. Here is my remedy for the trouble: I took a piece of light gauge tin and made an attachment that hangs on the crank shaft and fits so that any oil coming from the crank shaft will fall on this tin and be drained to the front of the machine on the inside. I have not had a single complaint from the exchange since I started to use it. In fitting the attachment to the machine, the tin must not be bent to fit the crank shaft until the drain is in position on the machine.

As to the end play in the intermittent sprocket, there should be none at all. The intermittent sprocket fits snugly against a shoulder on the intermittent shaft and the eccentric bushing and if you have any end play at all in the sprocket it is caused by the pin running through the sprocket and shaft becoming loose or else the tapered holes in the sprocket and shaft are not true with each other. If you find the latter the cause take out the intermittent movement and take it to a first-class machinist. Have him turn the sprocket one-quarter way on the shaft and drill a new hole in the sprocket so that the sprocket will fit snugly to the shoulder on the shaft. Warn him to use extreme care in handling the shaft for it is sprung very easily. Once it is sprung a new shaft must be installed. As to your suggestions, the first one has been in use for some time among operators and film exchanges, but all operators and film exchanges evidently do not use it, judging from the amount of mis-frames that are in some films, so I will pass it along to the readers and possibly it will be an incentive to some of them to use more care in the patching of film. I can see absolutely no use for the attachment mentioned in your second suggestion. It is very evident to me that one of two things is to blame for the condition that you mention, either the oil that you are using is too light or else you have the "oil bath disease," which is a very common affliction among operators. The average operator goes on the theory that if a little is good then a whole lot is better and consequently instead of using one drop of oil at a time on the parts to be oiled he uses enough when he does oil the machine to last a week and then expects the machine to run on an all-day grind without any more attention, when the truth of the matter is that he should use one drop of oil at a time and use it oftener. The working parts of a machine will only accommodate so much oil at one time and any time that more than that amount is used it is merely wasted. Use a good quality of oil and use it sparingly and I do not believe that you will have to use a drain to keep the oil off the film.

I am enlarging my theater and when it is completed I will have to move the screen back twenty feet. It is now seventy feet from the machine and the picture is 9x12. I use a 5¼ lens. Will this lens that I am now using do when I move back the screen? My operator says that I will have to buy new lens, but the ones that I have are nearly new and I do not want to buy new ones unless I have to.—T. T. H., Ohio.

You will either have to buy new lens or else enlarge the screen. The lens that you are now using will throw a picture 11.60 feet by 15.46 feet at ninety feet and to get a 9x12 at that distance will require a 6¾ lens. If it is possible, I would enlarge the screen and use the same lens, although you can buy a new lens for less than the cost of a new screen.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

Beverly Bayne is being almost swamped with sweaters, scarfs, socks, wristlets and other wearing apparel for the men at the front. At the motion picture convention in Chicago, in July, Miss Bayne bought and gave away yarn to all comers, to everyone who would promise to make it up into needed articles for men in the aviation, naval, infantry or any other branch of the service. The names and addresses of those who received the yarn were recorded, and many requests came in by mail from all parts of the country. Some knitters have completed their sets, and have sent them on to Miss Bayne at the Metro studio. As fast as these articles arrive they are being despatched where they will do the most good, in the work of war relief.

Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Maris," adapted from William J. Locke's well-known book by Frances Marion and staged by Marshall Neilan, has been finished at the Hollywood, Calif., studio. In this picture "Our Mary" for the first time in her career, appears in a dual role.

A coincident in connection with the screening of "The Song of Songs," Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft picture, is the fact that Frank Losee, who now appears in the chief supporting role to the star in the film, was scheduled to portray that character on the stage three years ago. On account of sudden illness Mr. Losee could not fulfill his stage engagement and when the film was announced recently the actor made his application to portray the part over which he had spent many hours of study. In view of his past record on the stage and screen, Mr. Losee was immediately engaged for the film.

Following the completion of the Geraldine Farrar picture, "The Devil Stone," Cecil B. De Mille, the famous director, has commenced work on the first of a series of big productions to be staged by him for Artcraft release. "The Whispering Chorus" is the title of the new film, adapted from the novel of the same name by Jeanie Macpherson. Perley Poore Sheehan wrote the original story, the publication of which is being withheld, so that both the photoplay and the book may be released simultaneously.

Little Mary McAllister was so interested in the dolls used in producing Essanay's novelty feature, "The Dream Doll," that she delayed the taking of scenes in her own picture for over half an hour.

Extravagance is the theme of Kitty Gordon's new World-Picture, Brady-Made. It leads to scandal, a suicide and very nearly the ruin of "the woman in the case," who is brought back from the brink in the very nick of time. Miss Gordon wears some stunning gowns and magnificent jewels in this picture play.

Blanche Payson, Triangle-Keystone's tallest leading woman, lies in a Los Angeles hospital in a serious condition, as a result of injuries sustained by slipping on the tiled entrance of a Los Angeles jewelry store. It is a freak of fate that Miss Payson, who has taken part in many hazardous feats in film comedy without injury, should be injured while on a shopping tour.

John Sexton, a 300-pound Essanay player, plays with little dolls in "The Dream Doll," a new Essanay novelty picture.

Geraldine Farrar is noted for her temperament, and even on the operatic stage her changing moods are well known. In "The Devil Stone," produced by Cecil B. De Mille for Artcraft, Miss Farrar kills her husband with a candlestick, when he attacks her to take the big emerald around which the story is woven. Tully Marshall played the part of the husband, and he admits he was extremely nervous until the big scene was taken. "Of course in picture work one takes a crack on the head as a matter of course," says Tully, "but with Miss Farrar I didn't know just how hard that crack would be!"

Very practical admirers of Virginia Pearson sent the statuesque William Fox star a live seventeen-pound gobbler for Thanksgiving. The turkey came from Louisville, Ky., where Miss Pearson was born and raised and where her fame is a civic pride.

Oleta Ottis, who has recently joined the Balboa studio acting staff in the ingenue ranks, was formerly understudy for Mona Morgan in "The Whip." Previous to this she appeared as a classic dancer over the Orpheum circuit.

Sherlock, Essanay's trained dog, known to thousands who have seen him in vaudeville and pictures, has an important role in "The Dream Doll."

It was not a chance happening that the rose was used as a symbol of revolution in "The Rose of Blood," Theda Bara's most recent release for William Fox. The rose was employed because it was usually accepted as a sign of secrecy. In ancient times, when the people of the North wished to keep absolutely unrevealed anything that was said among themselves at their feasts, a freshly gathered rose was hung from the ceiling above the upper end of the table. It was considered not only dishonorable, but even criminal, to betray that which was said "sub rosa," that is, under the rose.

Reaves Eason is producing a seven-reel picture, on the Balboa stage, of which he is the author. The piece is called "Little Roughneck" and features Mitchell Lewis who starred in "The Barrier" by Rex Beach. Jimsy May is his leading lady and Mr. Eason's twenty-eight months' old son plays the title role.

Henry Otto is once more a member of the Balboa directing staff. He began his picture-making career with Horkheimer Brothers four years ago, when they first opened their studio. At that time, he put on Jackie Saunders' first starring vehicle.

Beverly Bayne was featured in the very first motion picture in which she appeared. She visited the Essanay studios in Chicago, several years ago and was persuaded to try one picture "just for the fun of it." Her success was instantaneous.

Baby Lawrence Johnson, a clever little three-year-old actor who played the infant Czarovitch in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," appears as the child of the Fromes in Metro's picturization of "Daybreak," starring Emily Stevens.

Some of the scenes of "The Dream Doll" that take but a few minutes on the screen required days of labor on the part of Director Moss and his camera man.

One of the Triangle-Keystone girls was told by a Los Angeles photographer last week that he could take three photos of any girl and, by studying their lines and curves, make a beautiful portrait. Now Dale Fuller, who says she is built on angles, and not curves, wonders what the photographer can do for her cause.

Taking a bath under an ice-cold shower, getting a score of bumps in a roller skating scene, sliding down a clothes chute in a clothes hamper, indulging in a fight with boxing gloves and flooring her boy opponent are a few of the stunts Little Mary McAlister indulges in in her latest Essanay comedy-drama, "Sadie Goes to Heaven."

Having been given a permanent discharge from military service because of his voice, Ray Griffith, comedian, returned to the Triangle-Keystone studios, from the training camp at American Lake, Washington. For several years, Griffith has been unable to speak above a hoarse whisper and the army examining board decided this would impair his efficiency as a soldier.

"The Bluebird," Maurice Maeterlinck's world famous play, is to appear in picture form, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. Artcraft Pictures will produce it.

The cast in William Fox's latest photoplay, "The Painted Madonna," starring Sonia Markova, is somewhat international in its character. Mme. Markova is Russian, Oscar A. C. Lund, the director, is Swedish, Julia Stuart is from Scotland, and Sidney L. Mason was born in dear old Paterson, N. J.

The paintings shown in "The Painted Madonna" were done by John Sparrow, a well-known American artist. This is true even to the daddy long legs caricature which is an important point in the photoplay. Mr. Sparrow hung many of his high-priced pictures in the artist's studio during the making of the photoplay. The Madonna and Child shown in the play was painted during the progress of the production.

Amedee Rastrelli, a well-known screen comedian who, it is stated, can fall farther and harder than any other living actor and escape injury, is featured in a new series of Essanay one-reel comedies released by General Film Company. Rastrelli, who has been seen in many Max Linder comedies, makes his first appearance as a special star in "Ducky Dan in Hard Luck," which provides fifteen minutes of the most lively fun. Arthur Hotaling, well known as a Keystone Comedy director, directs this new series. Director Hotaling is using to the limit Rastrelli's ability to fall off of a building or a flying train.

In line with its policy of advocating a "Go-to-Movie-Week" the Chicago American this year is adding another slogan to its campaign to induce the public to patronize moving picture shows during the week of Christmas to New Years. This season's message to picture fans is "Let's Be Cheerful." In its "Go-to-Movie-Week" campaign the newspaper carries a daily article urging the public to go see the pictures showing in the various neighborhood theaters of the city. The campaign is being conducted by Fred McQuigg, who is well known to Chicago motion picture folk as Rob Reel.

Peace Declared by Exhibitor Factions

SORES ARE HEALED AND HARMONY REIGNS AT ALLIED MEETING

THE reunion of the divided organizations of the motion picture exhibitors of the American continent is a fact.

Differences that have kept the factions divided are to be forgotten, sore spots engendered at the Chicago convention last summer when the American Exhibitors' Association was formed have been healed.

A joint committee of the leading members of the association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is at work on the plans for the formation of a united industry insofar as the owners and managers of theaters are concerned.

This condition resulted from the gathering in conference at Washington of the representative exhibitors of the nation, called by Lee A. Ochs, president of the league.

MOTOGRAPHY Urges Reunion

The reunion of the exhibitors in one powerful organization, free from factional fights and petty bickerings, has been advocated editorially by MOTOGRAPHY for the last several weeks. It was brought about at the Washington conference with greater ease than had been anticipated. Even the leaders in the "get together" movement were surprised that the task was accomplished with so little diffculty.

The conference called by President Ochs resolved itself early into a joint convention of the league and the association. With Mr. Ochs in the chair, everybody being given as much time as he desired on the floor, the committee appointments being made with a view to giving both factions an even break, every session of the meeting was without unpleasantness of any kind, and all the leaders of the forces of the league and the association radiated harmony.

Resolutions Spell Unity

The resolutions committee, composed of Frank B. Eager, chairman; Charles C. Pettijohn, secretary; Louis L. Levine and Alfred S. Black, voiced the sentiment of the united exhibitors' organization in the following set of resolutions, which were adopted without dissent:

"Resolved, By the joint convention of the members and representatives from the various motion picture exhibitors' organizations of the United States in convention assembled in Washington, D. C., this twelfth day of December, 1917, as follows:

"That, whereas, the United States Government has called upon the owners and operators of motion picture theaters in the various states to render certain assistance and perform certain services during the present war crisis, that it is now unanimously declared to be the sense of this meeting that all motion picture exhibitors of the United States do hereby pledge and tender to the United States Government their united and whole-hearted support in the carrying out and making effective all plans and all war aims, and we hereby tender our motion picture screen, stages, bill boards and appurtenances thereto to be so used for such purposes. And

"Be It Further Resolved, That the National Council of Defense and the Bureau of Public Information be forthwith notified that a permanent committee of exhibitors is hereby selected, as follows: Lee A Ochs, H. B. Varner, J. H. O'Donnell, Ernest Horstman and F. J. Rembusch, to present to said National Council of Defense and the Bureau of Public Information a copy of these resolutions and to assist in every way in devising ways and means to carry into effect such plans as have already been designated or adopted by the Government.

"Be It Further Resolved, That it is for the best interests of all motion picture exhibitors and for the motion picture industry at large that all exhibitors and exhibitors' organizations shall in the future stand united and work harmoniously together for our common cause, to the end that our actions may be consistent and that fair and equitable solutions may be found for the many problems now confronting us, and to the further end that the near future may see one large, harmonious, united organization of motion picture exhibitors in the United States, her provinces, and the Dominion of Canada, and that a committee be forthwith selected, representative of all motion picture exhibitors' organizations present, to formulate definite plans to effectuate the objects and intent of this resolution. And

"Be It Further Resolved, That in order that the motion picture exhibitors of the United States may know some of the subjects upon which the various exhibitors' organizations agree to stand against and oppose, it is the sense of this joint convention that all organizations are unalterably opposed to—

"1. The advance deposit system.

"2. The present exorbitant and unreasonably high salaries of certain stars.

"3. The unbusinesslike and unnecessary waste in other branches of the industry by manufacturers and distributors.

"4. The passing along of the fifteen-cent per reel manufacturers' tax.

"5. The daylight saving plan.

"6. Any suggestion upon the part of the Thrift

Campaign Committee advising against attendance at motion picture theaters. And

"Be It Further Resolved, That we are in favor of and indorse the following:

"1. The issuance by the Government of a fifteen-cent coin.

"2. The elimination of, or a proper definition for, Section 1007-A of the Revenue War Tax Bill.

"3. The action of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Cleveland in their effort for legal relief from the arbitrary imposition of the fifteen-cent per reel manufacturers' tax and to pledge the united support of all organizations in their future endeavors upon this subject.

"4. A change in the present tax schedule to comply with the following:

"a. The elimination of the present tax based upon the seating capacity of theaters.

"b. The elimination of all admission taxes of children under the age of twelve years.

"c. The addition of a tax of one cent on each five-cent admission for all persons over the age of twelve years."

Hit at Footage Tax Law

A decided stand was taken by the exhibitors against the footage tax on film as it is provided for in the present war revenue law. The convention urged that this section of the law be repealed or amended in such a manner as to fix the responsibility for the payment of the tax and not permit it to be passed from one branch of the industry to another.

In this connection, the convention declared against the fifteen cents per reel assessment levied by some of the producers and distributors of the country. The resolution on this subject stated:

"That it is the sense of this joint convention that the film or so-called 'footage' tax law should be repealed or so amended to fix definitely the sources from which this tax shall be collected in such a manner that this tax may not be shifted to a different branch of the industry than the one for which it is intended."

Appoint Legislative Committee

A permanent legislative committee whose duty it shall be to seek remedial legislation from Congress was appointed, to consist of the following members:

H. B. Varner, chairman; Lee A. Ochs, J. H. O'Donnell, Ernest Horstman and Frank Rembusch.

This committee will work in Washington this winter, without instructions and without hindrance, in the interests of the united organization of exhibitors. The expense of the committee's work will be met by a fund to be collected from the allied exhibitors.

Many Delayed by Train Service

At the opening of the conference at noon on December 11, President Ochs announced that because of train delays and other unavoidable incidents the initial session would be informal.

He announced the appointment of the committee on resolutions and the following committee on rules: Harry Bernstein, chairman; Sam Bullock, E. M. Clarke and Joseph Hopp. He invited all the exhibitors present to co-operate with the resolutions committee and to present to it any ideas for any business that was desired to be brought before the convention.

In a brief address, Mr. Ochs made a plea for harmony in the ranks of the exhibitors of the country and a united front for betterment of the exhibitors' branch of the motion picture industry.

The effect of the war tax in various parts of the country was recited. A letter was read from C. D. Cooley, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Florida, in which it was stated that the combined effect of the admission and footage tax would be to drive forty per cent of the theaters in that state out of business.

A letter from A. M. LaBelle, secretary of the same organization, said that since the tax laws had gone into effect business had decreased considerably.

"Sixteen theaters in Brooklyn, N. Y., were forced to close their doors since November 1 because of the war tax," declared William Brandt, addressing the convention.

Agree Tax Law Is Bad

C. C. Pettijohn of Indianapolis, Sidney Berman of Brooklyn, E. M. Clarke of Mississippi, Sam Bullock of Cleveland, C. H. Bean of New Hampshire, E. H. Horstmann of Massachusetts, Harry Bernstein of Virginia, manager of the Jake Wells Circuit, R. D. Craver of North Carolina and Alfred S. Black of Maine were of the same opinion of the effect of the tax law—that it was uniformly detrimental to business. Frank Rembusch declared that business in Indiana had dropped off fully twenty per cent and that in the smaller towns of the state many owners were about to close their houses.

Frank Eager of Nebraska said that conditions in the West were not so serious on account of the war tax as they were in the East. He stated that business had been but slightly affected by the war revenue law in his section of the country.

Joseph Hopp, outlining conditions in Chicago, stated that children business had fallen off greatly because adult attendance was less since the tax law became effective.

Urges Uniformity in Tax

C. M. Rappaport of Philadelphia, speaking on the tax situation, declared in favor of a uniform tax of one cent on all admission tickets up to twenty cents.

Pleas for unity in the exhibitors' organization were voiced by Louis Schindler and William Heaney, both of Chicago. Mr. Schindler said that the exhibitors should not go before Congress in conjunction with the producers, and that the exhibitors' organization should not contract any alliances with the manufacturing branch of the industry.

Mr. Heaney seconded the attitude of Mr. Schindler, declaring that the exhibitors were doing more than any other branch of the industry in aiding the Government to spread patriotic propaganda, and that they should be recognized by the Government rather than the officials of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Pettijohn Makes Stirring Address

This same sentiment was voiced by Charles C. Pettijohn, who delivered a stirring appeal for a united exhibitors' organization. In his speech Mr. Pettijohn said:

"Whatever we do, we must act together as one big, harmonious body acting in concert. In the past, officials of the national association have come to Washington and told the Government that they would deliver the screens of the country to the Government for its work.

"Let us be independent and stand on our own feet. If we are to do any delivering, let us do the delivering direct to the Government ourselves and not to the manufacturers. And let us do it as one big, unified body. I want to tell you right now that I am with you heart and soul, and will go the limit with you.

"I believe that there should be a permanent legislative committee appointed representing all exhibitor organizations to remain in Washington and put into execution the wishes of this convention.

"The fact which has been brought out here this afternoon that the tax is preventing children from attending the theaters is dangerous in the extreme, for the children are the future patrons of the theater. Therefore, I believe that the children's tax should be eliminated. I further believe that you should determine yourselves just what you want done. I do not believe that there should be any consultation with the manufacturers, for I do not believe that the manufacturers should be heard concerning the tax which you pay."

Eager Endorses Pettijohn's Stand

Endorsing what Mr. Pettijohn said, Frank Eager of Nebraska said:

"I cannot too emphatically call your attention to the importance and necessity for concerted action at this time; not only harmony and unity among ourselves, but harmony and unity throughout the whole industry. But I fully believe that we should settle and determine on our course of action and policy, for what is best for us is best for all.

"If we don't succeed, how long can the manufacturers and distributors stay in business? They are absolutely dependent on us and this dependence is increased if we are united.

"I believe that the present law should be readjusted, not repealed. I do not think that we have any right to ask for its repeal under present conditions. The country is at war and is in need of money to carry on and win the war.

"We should pay a tax the same as any industry, but a tax should be levied along scientific lines.

"We should say to Congress, 'We are with you, but we do not want to pay a manufacturer's tax amounting to twice as much as goes into the national treasury.'"

At the second day's session representatives of five independent producing corporations appeared before the convention and explained their attitude on the fifteen-cent reel tax. None of these companies—the Frohman Amusement Corporation, Ogden Pictures Corporation, Harry Rapf, Ivan Film Corporation and Triumph Film Corporation.

Choose Amalgamation Committee

Following the reading and adoption of the resolutions that had been framed the previous night, the following committee on amalgamation was appointed: Charles C. Pettijohn of Indiana, I. M. Mosher of Buffalo, Louis Frank of Chicago, Harry Crandall of Washington, Lee A. Ochs of New York, A. S. Black of Maine, Joseph Hopp of Chicago, and L. F. Blumenthal of Jersey City.

An attempt on the part of William Brandt of Brooklyn to get the convention to withdraw from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry failed, after the plan had been opposed by Messrs. Pettijohn, Levine and Black. It was pointed out by Mr. Black that this was not a convention of the league, but a meeting of the allied exhibitors' organizations, and that such action could not be taken legally.

Write to Your Congressman

The final afternoon session was devoted to discussions as to methods to be pursued in bringing about desired legislative changes in the laws governing the raising of war revenue from the motion picture industry. H. B. Varner urged that every exhibitor in the country write to his senator and congressman, giving facts as to the injustices brought about by the present war revenue act.

The following attended the convention:

MUTUAL.

Miss Jackie of the Army, with Margarita Fischer (American-Mutual)—"A very clever comedy drama. While the story lacks depth, the clever acting of Miss Fischer enables it to get over. his motion, the convention went on record as being in favor of exhibitors everywhere booking films offered by distributors who do not charge the fifteen cents per reel tax. On the Brooklyn situation the convention adopted the following resolution:

"That the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in filing criminal charges against the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, charging them with conspiracy and boycott, be condemned, and that the entire support of the joint convention be pledged to these exhibitors."

On the battle that is on between the exhibitors of Brooklyn and the distributors who demand the fifteen-cent tax, the following statement has been issued by the exhibitors' local organization:

"The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island is being charged by the combined and concerted action of the Distributors' Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with a criminal offense. Evidently the felony charged is of such serious character as requires the employment of the most eminent counsel to represent them.

"Notwithstanding the usual method of first presenting the case to the authorities, it simultaneously gave such complaint the widest publicity in the public press. The reason for doing this is manifold and, no doubt, apparent to everyone.

Not Trying Case in Paper

"The exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island do not intend to try the issues in the public press, and therefore will welcome an investigation by the proper authorities, provided that the complainants will be put under oath, to ascertain the real true facts, and the exhibitors will welcome, at the proper time, an opportunity to present their side.

"The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was originally organized and incorporated for the primary purpose of bringing about a better understanding among its various branches and to adjust, if possible, any differences that might arise between the various branches therein. A nation-wide complaint has been filed against the distributors' branch of this industry, and instead of meeting as real proper business men they find it necessary to hire the most expensive counsel obtainable to secure the machinery of the United States Government to help them compel the exhibitors to accede to an illegal demand.

United States Is Busy Enough

"The United States Government is certainly busy enough conducting this world war without being asked to indulge itself in patching up internal differences of this industry. The fifth largest industry of the world must certainly look ridiculous. This proceeding on the part of the distributors' branch will tend to create an unfortunate breach between the exhibitors of this country and the distributors, and has torn away the foundation of an organization that was built for the purpose of unity in the industry."

"Pictures Might Have Saved Russia"

SECRETARY DECLARES PRESENT CONDITIONS COULD HAVE BEEN PREVENTED

"HAD motion pictures illustrating the various phases of American life been exhibited widely through Russia from the beginning of the war in 1914, it is probable that the present situation in Russia would never have occurred," said Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, in an address on the subject, "Movies and the War," given on December 11 in the First Baptist Church in Syracuse, N. Y., before the Commonweal Club, a large and important women's organization of that city.

"The stern reality of war has forced the people of the United States to think clearly on a number of questions," said Mr. Cocks. "This is quite as true of the motion picture as of business, society, commerce and government. When people had nothing else to do they seized the opportunity to criticize the motion picture. Now all this is changed.

Pictures Carry Message

"People in authority realize that the motion picture has a universal message. It speaks a universal language and obtains results. It is therefore being used increasingly in connection with the war.

"We may fairly say that it has come into its own high place among amusement and cultural agencies. The government, for instance, has been puzzling over the question of uniting the whole nation for the war. Some departments realize that they speak a language which does not reach the majority of the people. They have reached the cultured classes who do not need to be reached and have deluged them with facts, arguments, criticisms, and information. All the while the motion picture has gone unostentatiously about its work of binding together the common people for this vast enterprise.

"Government officials now have commenced to see a great light. The Red Cross, the Food Administration, the Liberty Loan, the Committee on Public Information, the Treasury and Agricultural Departments, as well as others, are trying constantly to use motion pictures. The government also in its relation to foreign peoples recognizes that a far more effective instrument for carrying American ideals and principles than the public press is the motion picture.

Could Have Changed Events

"If this agency had been used from August, 1914, to the present day in the cities, towns, and villages of Russia, the present attitude of the Russian people would have been decidedly different. There might have been no attempt at a separate peace. Italy, France and the northern countries also need a continuous stream of motion pictures which actually interpret American life and American democracy to the common people.

"We are discovering also that the danger point both with the civil population and the army and navy is during the hours of leisure. The recreation which is offered to this first group will play a large part in preserving the civil morale, and will keep it from dropping to the low point of Germany, Austria, France and England. There is no other agency which so effectively and completely meets the situation as the motion picture for entertainment purposes.

Aid Nation's Defenders

"The million or more men in the army and navy in this country who have been drawn away from the normal life of home and family especially need this form of public entertainment. They prefer it to many of the forms of recreation which have a suspicion of charity or condescension.

"This has been recognized by the Commission on Training Camp Acitivities, and efforts are being made both within the camps and in the community surrounding these camps to give the kind of entertainment which will satisfy the soldier during his off-duty periods and send him back to his training a better rather than a poorer man.

"If this need is evident during the period of training, it is doubly needful during that other period before and after the tour of duty in the trenches. Those of us who sit quietly at home have no realization of the nervous strain of the soldier in actual warfare. Unless absorbing forms of entertainment of a wholesome nature such as the motion picture furnishes, is given to the men, they break out in search of some form of amusement which will be as violent in its nervous reaction as the hell through which they have gone. The motion picture is performing a great public service."

Cocks Makes Southern Trip

The United States Commission on Training Camp Activities and the Playground and Recreation Association of America have asked the National Board of Review to aid them in making a survey of the motion picture activities of communities surrounding the training camps. Mr. Cocks started on December 12 for a trip through the South Atlantic States, where some of the largest camps are located. He has already visited Boston and Portsmouth and been in touch with the situation at Camp Merritt and at Norfolk, Va.

The objects of the survey are those of obtaining accurate statistics about the interest of the soldiers in this form of amusement and its relation to other forms of extra camp amusements; to develop co-operation between the exhibitor and the field representative of the commission; to advise friendly interest in the whole problem between the exhibitor and the local camp authorities; and to assure the communities of the whole-hearted support of the motion picture industry in the government program.

Make Long Trip to Film Garden Scene

Madge Evans, "the World's kiddie star," with Director Harley Knoles, Lionel Bellmore, Gerda Holmes, Mrs. Evans and a number of cameramen and assistants, made a flying trip last week extending over two days, to Charleston, South Carolina. The purpose of the journey was to utilize magnolia gardens located in Charleston as a background for the fairyland scenes of the picture, "Wanted: A Mother." The foliage of these gardens in the sunshine gives a peculiarly ethereal effect which is well suited to the scenes in question.

Eugene O'Brien is making good as a leading man. He appears with Norma Talmadge in "Ghosts of Yesterday."

Getting Together on the Tax Adjustment

ON one of our advertising pages we are displaying an appeal to picture theater men, signed by the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee. This committee was appointed by the joint convention of all exhibitor organizations, which was held at Washington, D. C., December 11 and 12.

The purpose of the committee is to secure a readjustment in congress of the war excise taxes on theater tickets and films. A plan of action has already been defined, and the committee now needs only the specific information requested, that it may be laid before the law-makers.

Every exhibitor should realize that the information he supplies can be used only for his own benefit. The only thing that will convince congress the law should be changed is specific evidence that it is really injuring business. Nobody but the exhibitors themselves can prove that their business is injured.

The questions asked by the committee do not call for a statement of the amount of business actually done by any exhibitor. They merely ask if business last month was better or worse than business a year ago—if it was worse, why?—and if the ticket tax had anything to do with it. Answering these queries reveals no business secrets and furnishes no ammunition for any possible enemy.

It is plain that without these data the committee will be sadly handicapped in its effort to help the very exhibitors who withhold their answers. Nor should any man assume that there will be enough without him, and consequently that he need not respond. It would be most desirable that the committee have figures on all the theaters in the United States. The evidence must be thoroughly convincing if it is to relieve the situation. And for similar reasons the answers should be sent as quickly as possible.

As an incident to this committee action, it provides a significant commentary on the "get-together" policy so earnestly advocated by this paper. The committee is composed of representatives of both the American Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. More than that, it shows organization officials of violently opposed politics working harmoniously together. Thus is it demonstrated that a common cause and an altruistic motive may overcome prejudice and dissolve the differences that make able men work at cross purposes.

And when occasion arises like the present, demanding the industry's full show of power, the coalition of organization resources becomes not only possible but vitally essential.

If the men whose names are signed to the appeal for information in our advertising pages—the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee—can work together for a big purpose, and better than they can work apart; then the American Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, which furnished those men, can work together. And if that is true, there is no excuse for the continued existence of two exhibitors' organizations.

We realize that the consolidation of two such bodies cannot be accomplished merely by the exercise of the "fraternizing" methods recommended by Messrs. Lenine and Trotzky of Petrograd. Some statecraft is doubtless necessary. But we cannot question that diplomatic means will be forthcoming when the executives are convinced that the result will strengthen even their own position.

In this tax adjustment matter, the biggest and most immediately important question that has ever confronted exhibitor organizations, the two-association condition would not stand up. It will not stand up on any big problem. The coalition committee at best is a makeshift that concedes the weakness of two societies and the strength of one. Let us pay tribute to the cleverness of some one who camouflaged its dual character under a new name that looks, at least, like a unit.

Consider These Facts, Mr. Vanderlip

TALKING about government war savings stamps, Frank A. Vanderlip said "Instead of buying that theater or movie ticket, you buy a thrift stamp. Your money goes direct to the war coffers, you have the satisfaction of feeling that you have helped win the war." At least Mr. Vanderlip is so quoted by several newspapers.

War tax money goes direct to the war coffers, too. For every twenty-five cent picture theater ticket, the government gains three cents on which it need pay no interest.

We expect every American citizen to buy as many war stamps as he can possibly pay for. But if he borrows the money for them from his legitimate amusement fund, the government will lose one of its biggest sources of revenue. Picture theaters run on a pretty narrow margin, and it does not take much loss of patronage to put them out of business. And every one that goes out means a government loss of several thousand dollars a year.

It is rather astonishing to hear advice of this sort from a man of Mr. Vanderlip's prominence and experience. Surely it is not good business policy to sacrifice those industries which pay the highest war taxes. Money diverted from taxes and put into war stamps merely succeeds in changing a tax into a loan. That, as we see it, is not the government's purpose, since the net gain in revenue would be small and the injury to industry would be large.

Obviously, money for the war stamps should come largely from untaxed sources, and especially should be diverted from nonessential industries. We will not waste time and space here in arguing the essential nature of entertainment for the preservation of national morale. That is answered by the war department itself, and by the Y. M. C. A., in their provision of entertainment for the enlisted men of our armies.

Expenditure of money by the people for entertainment is a conspicuous act, and therefore most likely to occur as an example to those patriots who preach thrift without analysis. But every citizen who keeps a daily record of his petty cash expenditures knows that he fritters away much more small change foolishly and unprofitably than he puts into theater tickets.

Compare the popular expenditure for amusements with the liquor trade—a traffic so unpatriotic, wasteful and utterly without excuse that not even high taxes can justify it. The liquor tax is, in fact, the only salvage out of the wreck of liquor expenditure. The people are urged to waste billions that government, state and municipality may receive a few millions.

Consider the use of tobacco—a harmless but much abused "vice," whose reduction by fifty per cent would pay for more thrift stamps than the absolute annihilation of the picture theater business.

Examine the jewelry trade, and, to be as conscientious as possible, figure that only fifty per cent of it is for vanity. Put that fifty per cent into thrift stamps and compare the result with the destruction of the motion picture industry.

Remember that the seventy millions of dollars that the government expects from this industry as one year's taxes must all come from the exhibitor, and that a reduction of twenty per cent in patronage will put thousands of exhibitors where they can pay no more taxes. And remember that when the exhibitors quit, the producers quit, and the taxes quit.

If that happened, seventy million dollars more of stamps would have to be sold just to make up the deficiency, without actually gaining a cent. And the stamps have to be redeemed; the taxes do not.

There are dozens of curtailments the public can make to provide its stamp money without the destruction of tax-paying industry, which would surely defeat the very purpose of the stamps themselves.

Form New War Films Division

The Division of Films of the government Committee on Public Information, announces the creation of a New England bureau, with headquarters at Boston. Paul D. Rust is the managing director of the new organization, and is supported by an executive committee composed of the following Bostonians: Llewellyn Howland, chairman; Allan Forbes, treasurer; J. Pennington Gardiner, secretary; Gen. Hugh Bancroft, Elton Clark, Alexander S. Porter, Roger Ernst, and Louis B. Mayer.

A number of the members of the New England bureau have been active since the beginning of the war in directing exhibitions of war films in New England for war benefits.

The various State councils of defense in New England have appointed special representatives to co-operate with the new bureau. All members of the committee serve without pay. Modern offices and also a film exchange building, complete in all details, have been leased by the new bureau. The distributing force is in charge of Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, of Boston. Forty thousand feet of new film have been delivered to the New England bureau by the Washington office, and copies of all new releases will be forwarded to Boston.

Louis W. Mack, director of the Division of Films, and Charles P. Watson, in charge of distribution, are now organizing a Middle Western bureau at Chicago, while other representatives of the government's film department are engaged in organizing similar division headquarters at Kansas City, San Antonio, Minneapolis, and on the western coast. A million feet of film will be required to supply these bureaus for the winter.

All official films on war activities in the United States bear the name of the Committee on Public Information, and are distributed only through the committee's own divisional headquarters or by State councils of defense.

Pay $80,000 for Theater Site

Word from Glen Falls, New York, states that a contract has been signed there for the purchase of an entire block in Warren street to be modeled for a theater by J. R. Lockwood, part owner of the Majestic Theater, Burlington, Vermont, and F. E. Corburn, also of Burlington. The price was $80,000.

The theater will open April 1 with a seating capacity of 2,000. There will be twenty boxes. The block formerly contained the World in Motion Theater. The new policy probably will conduct vaudeville and pictures.

Writer Makes Attack on "Funkhouserism"

JOHN H. RAFTERY SEES MAJOR'S ABILITY TO INFLICT GREAT HARM

John H. Raftery, writing editorially in the New York Morning Telegraph, goes into the Chicago censorship situation and points out a number of evils that exist under the present city laws governing the releasing of moving pictures in Chicago. Mr. Raftery's comments on "Funkhouserism" follow:

"Major M. L. C. Funkhouser draws a considerable salary and occupies a conspicuous position as official fault finder of the police department of Chicago. He is the ex-officio head of that city's board of censors, an organization which gratuitously puts in a lot of time gathering evidence and furnishing testimony relative to the ways and means by which the people seek to be amused and edified.

Jane Addams Active Adviser

"Jane Addams, of Hull House Settlement, who was by way of becoming a historic and idolized figure in the history of the world's best charities until she became known as a professional pacifist and conscientious objector to war, has always been an active adviser and, in some cases, a monitor to Major Funkhouser, whose incessant and deliberate interferences with the regular police activities of Chicago engage most of his attention.

"Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton, another well-meaning and less experienced philanthropist of the Hull House group, is a second personage who has had great delight and much more or less advantageous publicity by her association with Funkhouser in dictating what the public of Chicago may or may not have in the way of entertainment. As a source of newspaper 'copy,' Funkhouser looms in the minds of Chicago reporters as of equal importance with Mayor Thompson, John Alexander Dowie and ole Cap' Streeter and Mariar of the Deestrict of Lake Michigan, all of whom fattened upon free publicity until the public became surfeited with their incessant posturing and wearisome impertinence.

Capable of Much Damage

"Major Funkhouser, however, is in position to inflict incalculable damage and permanent injustice upon law-abiding, patriotic and highly intelligent men and institutions whose activities extend far beyond the confines of Cook county, Illinois, and whose ideas of government and of progress are not scaled to the Hull House Settlement standards of censorship, which so largely influence the Funkhouser rulings.

"The conflict of the Funkhouser idea of desirable motion pictures with that of the authorized United States Government censors, as recounted in The Morning Telegraph recently, only goes to show the mischief which Funkhouserism is able to commit against any number of costly, artistic, educative and commendable theater attractions which do not happen to coincide with the Hull House code of pedagogical politics and patriotic pedantry of which Funkhouser is only the mouthpiece.

Terror to the Industry

"It has come to pass that motion picture producers, the state rights buyers of important and extensively advertised films and all of the movie exhibitors of Chicago itself, regard the antics of Funkhouser and his extensive faculty for mischief-making, as among the unknown and unaccountable terrors of the business.

"The Major's implied and expressed disregard, if not contempt, for the opinions and rulings of the Federal censors, is characteristic both of the individual and of the parochial influences which prompt him to new, and always theatric, spasms of far-fetched patriotism and orgasms of vicarious piety.

"The entertaining and courageous purchasers of state rights for feature films are, perhaps, the most direct and greatest sufferers at the hands of the Funkhousers for the Chicago Major has his emulators, fac-similes in little and pocket editions in nearly every State and city in the country.

"If all of these censorious busybodies would adopt a single standard and uniform code of censorship, if they even agreed to abide by the Jane Addams Hull House estimate of alien kindergarten entertainment which the leading Funkhouser follows, things would not be so unfair, so unjust, so maddeningly bewildering to the business-like and liberal minded factors in films and other traveling entertainments.

"But they all have different standards, adhering to Funkhouserism only in the autocratic, myopic and sacrosanct style in which they libel the real property of others, fire their professorial popguns and thunder in the index purgatorius of their own narrow spheres.

"Thus a feature film de luxe, acclaimed by the public and even acclaimed by the professional scolds of one body of Funkhouserists, is likely to run afoul of the censorial pundits of the very next state or nearest city.

Christ's Life Is Censored

"Instances are of record in which an epical screen drama dealing with the most beautiful, uplifting and inspiriting events and incidents in the life of Christ has been interdicted, stopped, publicly condemned by the pietistical prudes of a state board of censors on the ground that it did not convey their own personal and hypocritical ideas of the Trinitarian theory of the Nazarene, His character and the 'manner of His baptism.'

"Many a meritorious play and many thousands of dollars of honestly and intelligently invested money for state rights in films have been Funkhouserized into disaster by the parochial criticaster of scattered communities, most of whom—as in Chicago—are influenced, no matter how honestly, by the small and narrowing orbit of their own sectarian, sociological, political and educational activities.

Government Appreciates Industry

"As Mr. Creel pointed out in his deposition in the Chicago case, producers, manufacturers and exhibitors of motion pictures are more than willing—they are keenly eager—to co-operate with the proper authorities in regulating their film products and projections upon a fixed and stable platform of patriotism and good morals as well as of entertainment.

"The government at Washington is fully cognizant of the unanimous, voluntary and generous services of the motion picture industry in the enlistments for the army and navy, in national charities, in educative enterprises and in informative and truthful 'news.'

"The representative factors of the film industry would welcome that uniformity of 'editing' which would result from a centralized censorship of national scope and of genuine American vision. Until that broad-gauge and far-reaching method is adopted and enforced the Funkhousers of every sect, schism and neighborhood 'ism who infest every community where there is a theater may be expected to exert the impertinent power of their petty prejudices and preferences."

Cummings Takes Lead in Nazimova Play

Irving Cummings, leading man with Ethel Barrymore in the Metro production, "An American Widow," has been engaged to support the great Nazimova in her second Metro photodrama now in the course of production at St. Augustine, Florida, under the direction of George D. Baker.

Fox Broadway Attractions Succeed

Productions Draw in Spite of General Depression in Theatrical Business — "Cleopatra" Receipts $77,000

THE spoken drama is encountering serious difficulties in New York this season. In fact the 1917-18 period promises now to pass into history as one of the most disastrous in the experience of Broadway managers. Already, it is said, the record of the worst of previous seasons has been approached and there are rumors of additional closings which will materially increase the failures.

That this is due, at least in part, to the nature of the offerings is indicated by the fact that some productions are playing to capacity right along, and that the only photoplays which have been put on for extended runs in the Broadway district during this season have been highly successful. It is probable also that the price—$1 for the best seats at the photoplays as against $2 and upwards for the spoken drama—also is a factor in the situation. Whatever the cause, the fact remains, however, that motion picture productions thus far have a 100 per cent success score as against a possible twenty per cent showing for the spoken drama.

Only one photoplay production has undertaken invasion of Broadway this fall and he has offered several productions. He has plans moreover, it is understood, for continuing until spring, having already announced the opening, at a date not yet set, of another big photoplay.

This producer is William Fox, who is using the Lyric Theater, in Forty-second street, at the very center of New York theatrical activities. Long previous to the time last summer when Charles Dillingham wanted his theater, the Globe, for the opening of his season of spoken drama, Mr. Fox leased the Dillingham house and there, in spite of the fact that the weather was hot, began showing Standard Pictures. "The Spy," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Conqueror" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" all had long runs, every one of which was reported to be highly successful. Then followed Fox's removal to the Lyric Theater and the opening of "Cleopatra," now declared by Fox to have been the most successful photoplay run ever made in the Broadway district.

"Cleopatra" was taken off after an eleven-week showing, during which the box office receipts were $77,000, only because of the necessity for giving early bookings to "Les Miserables" and "Queen of the Sea." The William Farnum production now being shown is a photodrama of a very decidedly different nature from "Cleopatra," but the patronage it is receiving, according to Fox reports, is in every respect the equivalent of that which was accorded its successful predecessor. From the very first performance, it is announced, it has been necessary to turn people away, this applying to matinees as well as night showings. As in the case of "Cleopatra," the demand for seats has necessitated an advance sale.

"This success," says William Fox, "has been wholly a matter of giving the public big productions of the right sort. We are not confining ourselves to any one class of photoplays, but we are taking big themes and doing them in a manner befitting their greatness. Some exhibitors doubted our ability to put over 'Cleopatra' under existing conditions, but I disagreed with them. Now, I predict for 'Les Miserables' and for 'Queen of the Sea,' our new Kellerman wonder picture, successes even surpassing that of 'Cleopatra.'"

Rambeau Films Are Making Good

Series of Six Productions Featuring Broadway Star Are Succeeding—Many Rebookings Are Reported

THE action of screen popularity on the box office value of a stage star and the reaction at the ticket window of the motion picture theater has just been demonstrated by Miss Marjorie Rambeau, the Broadway actress who returned to the stage after the production of a series of six pictures for the Frank Powell Producing Corporation for release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Miss Rambeau's most phenomenal success on the stage, it has been admitted by critics and public alike, is "The Eyes of Youth," in which she is now appearing on Broadway. Miss Rambeau was a star of no considerable consequence before she came out in "The Eyes of Youth," but her 1917 play has proven by far the most startling success of her career of successes.

The success of "The Eyes of Youth" has been reflected in new bookings and rebookings of the Rambeau star productions at Mutual exchanges and an apparent increase in the box office value of the star's name in motion picture theaters in all sections of the land.

Miss Rambeau's series of pictures was "The Greater Woman," "Motherhood," "The Debt," "The Mirror," "The Dazzling Miss Davison" and "Mary Moreland," each produced and directed by Frank Powell.

Immediately that the success of her stage production was noised across the country, exhibitors began receiving requests from patrons who wanted to see Miss Rambeau in pictures. The result has been a revival in all parts of the United States of the Mutual-Powell productions starring Miss Rambeau.

Exhibitors who are showing the Rambeau series of pictures are making heavy advertising capital out of Miss Rambeau's present Broadway popularity.

New York State to Have Patriotic Film

WILL SHOW THE WORLD HOW ENEMY PLOTS ARE THWARTED

THE Vitagraph Company has been selected by the State of New York to produce a big patriotic feature designed to show the rest of the states and the world in general how the Empire state has put down enemy plots and plotters before and since the entrance of the United States in the great conflict.

Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York will personally appear in the picture, playing before the camera the role that he has played in real life. Every agency and facility of the state protective machinery will be placed at the disposal of Vitagraph in making the mammoth picture.

The story was written by Robert W. Chambers and is founded on actual records in the state archives. The title will soon be announced.

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, will personally supervise the making of this big feature, the actual direction being in the hands of John Robertson. Corinne Griffith and Webster Campbell, Vitagraph favorites, will be the featured players, with Governor Whitman as the dominant figure behind the marvelous protective machinery of the state.

Governor Approves Plans

Final production plans were completed last week after more than a month of conference participated in by the Adjutant-General of New York state, President Smith of Vitagraph, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, Governor Whitman's chief military advisers, the head of the state military police, Robert W. Chambers and leaders in the work of ferreting out alien enemies in this country. The plans as finally determined upon were submitted to Governor Whitman and approved.

At the start of these conferences the general plan of the enterprise was outlined and at each succeeding meeting the story was strengthened and developed from official records, Governor Whitman's advisers, Mr. Smith and Mr. Chambers working in close harmony on the preparation of the scenario.

The Vitagraph Company was selected for this enormous undertaking after the officials of the state of New York had surveyed the entire motion picture industry for the purpose of securing the cooperation of a producing and distributing organization whose equipment, resources and prestige gave assurance of the most complete presentation and widest possible dissemination of the big subject to be handled.

Will be Lengthy subject

No announcement has been made as to the number of reels to be used in making the production, but from the mass of official data which was placed at the disposal of Mr. Chambers for the preparation of his drama of patriotic energy, it probably will be as imposing in length as it is powerful in conception.

The chief object of letting the state and the nation know through the medium of a motion picture of the methods that have been employed here to stifle treason, sabotage, arson and other crimes inimical to the United States, is to let the rest of the country—states, cities and hamlets—profit by the experiences of New York.

Long before the United States was drawn into the war, the state of New York, with its thoroughly organized machinery and its thousands of special agents, acting under the direct orders of Governor Whitman, was working in cooperation with the Federal Secret Service to protect the metropolis and the nation from their enemies. From the time the first German ship was interned, the state had a problem on its hands that was universal in its relation to the rest of the country.

As each month drew this country closer to the maelstrom of carnage, this problem grew larger, with thousands of ramifications, and the fact that New York city and state have been so free, relatively, from the explosions and other outrages that have been visited upon other sections of the country by secret enemies of America, is a tribute to the vigilance and efficiency of the Whitman defensive machinery.

Newspapers have given bare outlines of many plots nipped in the bud by state and government secret service agents, but in virtually all instances details have been withheld from the public. Now, for the first time, the dramatic and dangerous circumstances attending these cases are to be revealed.

Thousands of aliens have been arrested and placed in prison on the formal charge of being "dangerous aliens" and that has been all that was known of their offenses, so far as the general public was concerned. The public, with confidence in Governor Whitman and his aides, took it for granted that there was just cause for the arrests and created no furore. But to those on the inside, the real facts were known and they chose not to reveal these facts, probably for the reason that they did not wish to incite the people to acts of reprisal against the Germans and their allies in this country.

However, nothing will be withheld in the forthcoming moving picture. Attempts to blow up shipping, to hamper transportation, to stir uprisings, destroy munition plants, incite strikes and otherwise cripple the United States and New York in their defensive measures will be revealed. The method of patrolling the vital industries and utilities and the guarding of the water front also will be shown.

New York's virile governor, his war cabinet and various important military officials will be conspicuous all through the action of the production, as necessarily most of the big action of the piece will center around them. New York harbor, the great buildings of the metropolis and every place that in any way has been imperiled or menaced by enemies will be filmed.

Same Right to Free Film as Free Speech

GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL OVERRULES CHICAGO CENSOR'S STAND ON PICTURE

"THERE is the same right to a free film that there is to free speech or a free press," declared George Creel, chairman of the government committee on public information.

Mr. Creel made this statement in a deposition which he gave in connection with the suit of the Fox Film Corporation of New York to enjoin Major Funkhouser, film censor of Chicago, Ill., from forbidding the showing of "The Rose of Blood," in which Theda Bara takes the leading part.

Major Funkhouser in refusing to grant an exhibition permit for "The Rose of Blood" declared that he had done so because he believed the exhibition of the photodrama was inimical to the best interests of the government in the prosecution of the war against Germany.

The Committee on Public Information reviewed "The Rose of Blood" and unanimously approved it for exhibition, but Major Funkhouser still insists that he is a better judge of what the government needs than the officials designated for this service.

Mr. Creel, on direct examination, said: "A very intimate contact had been established between the government and the motion picture industry and the producers of the nation have worked generously to place the purposes and needs of America before the people through the films."

As indicating the close co-operation of the motion picture industry of the United States and the government, Mr. Creel said that while there is no absolute authority vested in the Committee on Public Information to suppress a picture, there has never been, at any time, that such a request made by the committee had not been complied with instantly by the producer.

Thinks Major Unqualified

"I dissent in a great many instances from Major Funkhouser's observations as to the views of the government," said Mr. Creel. "I do not think he is qualified to nor has he the authority to speak for a government bureau in these matters.

"Our sole object is to prevent the exhibition of pictures that this committee believes to be prejudicial to the national interests," said Mr. Creel on cross examination by Attorney Ayers. "Aside from that we have no interest in any commercial enterprise, nor would we feel at liberty to infringe upon the legal rights of any local authority, municipal or state. We simply declare our opinions with regard to these films when presented to us, and that declaration of opinion carries with it no authority other than that imposed upon the individual by his own patriotism.

Emphasize Patriotic Subjects

"We do feel a very vital interest in getting producers to put emphasis upon patriotic subjects and solely because of that we do have an interest in the presentation of commercial films. We have made a general request of the motion picture industry that it concern itself more and more with the production of patriotic films."

"As a government official, do you want 'The Rose of Blood' to be exhibited in the cities of the United States, including Chicago?" asked Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres.

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Creel. "I want this picture to be shown because it violates none of the requests of the government and seems to us to convey a patriotic message."

"If it should appear that this film portrays an uprising against the Romanoff government of Russia at a time when that government was on friendly terms with this government, would you say that such a picture should be exhibited at this time when we are at war?" persisted Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres.

President Is Quoted

"The President of the United States himself has declared his full sympathy with that revolution," was Mr. Creel's answer. "It is absolutely opposed to the policy of this government to suppress the news of world happenings, no matter whether such is liked or disliked by any nation. The Russian rebellion is a fact. We have accepted that fact and any newspaper, pictorial or film presentation of that rebellion is absolutely entitled to presentation so far as the government is concerned. We do not object in any degree to any showing of that revolution on the ground that the Romanoffs were the head of the friendly government."

Asked whether he would object to the showing of the taking of human life on the screen, Mr. Creel replied:

"There is the same right to a free film that there is to a free speech and a free press, and when the newspapers of the country comment daily upon the destruction of human life, it is stupid to try to keep it from the screen."

Judge Reviews Film

Federal Judge Carpenter in Chicago this week held a brief session of his court in the projection room of the Universal Film Company. Accompanied by the attaches of the federal court the jurist watched the presentation of "The Rose of Blood."

Judge Carpenter later rendered a decision by declining to interfere with the city authorities. The court ruled that there was no occasion for a federal judge to interfere with the city officials in such instances unless fraud entered into the case.

Stock Company Experience Valuable

Harold Hickman's Success in Character Roles on Screen Results from His Early Stage Career

AMONG the players who appear at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles in support of the stars J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale and Henry B. Walthall is Howard Hickman, who is noted among the players and with the general public for the completeness of the illusions he creates and also their great number. Mr. Hickman may be seen in one picture as a most accomplished agent of evil and in another as a young man whose appeal is primarily goodness of heart.

Mr. Hickman attributes his success to the fact that when he first adopted the stage as his profession he did so through the medium of the stock company. Mr. Hickman made his first stage appearance with the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco, where he speedily built up a decided following. He also played with the Belasco Stock Company in Los Angeles. Then followed a series of engagements in support of leading stars in Broadway productions, including Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.

"I have played many parts," said Mr. Hickman recently.

Completes Prosperous Twelve Months

World Film Corporation Reaches Its Zenith in Matter of Earnings and the Accumulation of Valuable Assets

"THE World Film Corporation," said William A. Brady, director general, "approaches the end of the year in a most enviable state of prosperity. At a time when the doctors are vehemently disagreeing as to what ails the motion picture industry and how the malady shall be banished, we find ourselves at a higher point of earnings and in possession of a greater quantity of perfectly sound, tangible, negotiable assets than at any moment in our career.

"This is not said in any spirit of boastfulness, nor is it in the nature of crowing over those who are unable at this time to render a similar report. Conditions such as those which occasion the general complaints flaunted before the public recently are indeed regrettable, whatever their cause, and are to be viewed with the deepest concern.

"Thus, without uttering any reflections upon the prevailing situation and the matters which have brought it about, we may revert at this time to the policies and principles which have resulted in the existing happy condition of World-Pictures—policies and principles which I have described on various occasions only to call out vigorous criticism.

"In the first place, we have observed sanity in our productions. We never yielded to the temptation to compete for the services of stars already immensely over-paid. On the other hand, when our own stars, acquiring great popularity under World development, have been approached with largely increased offers from other companies, we have not made the slightest effort to meet those offers.

"From this it is not to be charged that our corporation is niggardly in its expenditures for salary account or in any other direction.

"We insist only upon keeping our outlay within limitations which permit us to sell a completed picture to the exhibitor at a price he can afford to pay.

"This has been accomplished to the complete satisfaction of the public and the exhibitors. We have produced pictures, while adhering strictly to these lines, which have not been charged with falling short in any particular. On the other hand, our photoplays, mostly in five reels, have been frequently and favorably compared with the special price pictures produced upon a scale of prodigality amounting simply to waste.

"Dependability was what we sought for World-Pictures—dependability in the pictures themselves and dependability in the dealings by which they reached the public through the exhibitors.

"Upon several occasions—an instance of which was supplied by 'Rasputin, the Black Monk'—we assumed a very much increased outlay upon a production of greater length than usual, and sold it to our customers without adding to the regular price. This also was a part of our policy—to give the public and the exhibitors, where possible, more than had been contemplated in the original bargain.

"We believe the present highly desirable position of World-Pictures is an eloquent object lesson demonstrating the value of sanity in production and good faith in delivery."

Wallace Reid Pays Visit to Chicago

Wallace Reid, Paramount-Artcraft leading man, stopped off in Chicago last week, and made several personal appearances in local theaters. He was accompanied by Kenneth McGaffey, publicity director for the west coast studios, who formerly was a newspaperman in Chicago—"the best 6-cap head writer who ever worked on the Inter-Ocean."

Mr. Reid was the guest of honor at a luncheon attended by newspaper and trade press representatives at the Sherman House. Following the luncheon it developed that both Mr. Reid and Mr. McGaffey were wearing wrist watches. This fact is not held against them by those who know them both as regular human beings—an attribute not always applicable to motion picture stars of Mr. Reid's calibre.

Also it developed that Mr. Reid is an accomplished violinist and that he can get high quality melodious harmony out of a ukulele.

While in Chicago Mr. Reid was kept busy autographing photos of himself and visiting a doctor to receive treatment for injuries inflicted when, in the making of a blizzard scene in "Nan of Music Mountain," an over-enthusiastic laborer, hired to shovel snow through the whirling blade of an aeroplane propellor, dug too deep and shoveled into the blizzard atmosphere a few large sections of rock and heavy gravel.

Mr. McGaffey found employment in renewing newspaper acquaintances and answering phone calls of "sweet young things" who wanted to talk to Mr. Reid.

As armor against the wiles of the host of feminine admirers who seek him out constantly Mr. Reid carries with him a photograph of Mrs. Reid and Wallace, Jr.

Constance Talmadge in Los Angeles

Constance Talmadge, Select's brilliant young comedienne, who left Los Angeles less than a year ago, comparatively unknown, returned to the coast last week in a blaze of glory, a star in her own right with seventy-foot electric signs on Broadway, and her friends made her arrival in the west the occasion for an enthusiastic demonstration.

Alfred A. Cohn, western editor of Photoplay, arrived at the depot with a reception committee headed by Charles Fuhr of the Hoffman Press Service as chairman; Bennie Zeidman, secretary; Louis Montana, treasurer; Spike Robinson, drum major; and Buster Keaton, cheer leader. Rivaling them in fervid welcomes was E. V. Durling, Los Angeles representative of the Morning Telegraph, who showed up with the famous Hollywood silver cornet band, and Scoops Conlon, the boy soprano. Speeches were made and the star and her mother were escorted to their hotel in state.

Miss Talmadge will begin work shortly on "The Shuttle," which has been arranged for the screen from Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's widely read novel of the same name.

Return from Desert

Viola Dana and company have returned from the Mojave Desert, where they went recently to film scenes for the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Winding Trail," adapted for the screen by H. P. Keeler from the story by June Mathis and Katherine Kavanaugh, and in which B. A. Rolfe will present Miss Dana as star.

Uses Brains as Well as Legs

Billie Rhodes Is Meeting with Success in Mutual-Strand Comedies Without Pie or Slapstick

Billie Rhodes, Mutual-Strand comedy star.

BILLIE RHODES, who uses brains as well as shapely legs and flimsy lingerie to impress her public, is meeting marked success in Mutual-Strand comedies, being booked in big houses from coast to coast.

Miss Rhodes, "darling of the pictures," as exhibitors call her, owes her extraordinary success no less to the fact that she has provided a class of clean comedy that is full of legitimate fun without a trace of slapstick or pie in a mile of it.

Aside from being one of the prettiest girls on the screen, Miss Rhodes is given credit for shrewdness, since it was only through her determined insistence that the new style comedy was substituted for the old.

Miss Rhodes repeatedly asserted that the public was tired of slapsticks on the screen and would welcome a more intelligent type of entertainment.

The Mutual-Strand comedies are much in demand at this moment and increasingly so with each week that passes. A survey was made through the branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, last month, for the purpose of establishing the status of various brands of comedy now being offered the public, with the result that seventy-five per cent of the replies called for Mutual-Strand comedies and gave important reasons for the demand.

It was stated and reiterated in many of these expert opinions that Billie Rhodes comedy constituted by far the most popular form of screen fun now being shown. The point was insisted on that Mutual-Strand productions appeal to the public's intelligence aside from the fact that they are invariably funny throughout.

Miss Rhodes had her first launching as a comedienne in San Francisco, where she established herself in the affections of the school entertainment managers at a very early age by imitations and recitations. Before she was ten years old, Miss Billie, as she was always called, had established a city-wide reputation as a mimic. Now her fame has spread from coast to coast, as it deserves to have done.

Gown Is Designed for Triangle Feature

Alma Rubens, Triangle star, in "The Gown of Destiny," wears a gown that was designed especially for this Triangle play by Hickson Inc., 661 Fifth avenue, New York City. It exploits the bustle frock, the first silhouette America has introduced and America's tribute and aid to the couturiers of Paris at this their time of need. This gown is a bustle evening dress made of rose and silver brocade, trimmed with crystal and bugles. The waist is made of the same material combined with rose chiffon, the shoulder straps are in rhinestones.

Kerrigan Play Is Strenuous

One great quality which exhibitors have already found their patrons liked in the feature photoplay is the virile—the strenuous. This quality is especially to be found in the acting of J. Warren Kerrigan, star of the Paralta feature, "A Man's Man," by Peter B. Kyne. Mr. Kerrigan is enabled through this quality of his acting to get his audiences values that would be otherwise impossible.

Kerrigan himself is virile. In his life apart from the studio there is no athletic feat too difficult for his successful accomplishment.

Pettijohn Weds Actress

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, has become a bridegroom. In East Orange, N. J., he married Miss Belle Bruce, a leading woman in several Vitagraph and Metro features. The ceremony was performed at the home of Miss Rose Tapley, formerly a Vitagraph star. After spending a few days in New York and Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Pettijohn have returned to his home city of Indianapolis, Ind.

Today in the Pictures

PRODUCER DIAGNOSES SYMPTOMS OF THE INDUSTRY

BY JOHN R. FREULER
President of the Mutual Film Corporation

IF one were to take the recent eruption of interviews, statements, letters and other expressions in the trade press at all seriously it would be necessary to feel highly alarmed about the present and future of the film industry.

A great many very drastic remedies, a vast number of prescriptions, a lot of "expert" advice is being offered for conditions in the motion picture industry.

I did not know it was that sick.

I do not now think it is.

In fact the film industry is a lot better off than this sudden uprising of the doctors would imply.

Alarmed at Red Figures

Every once in a while somebody who has the impression he is in the film business goes and takes a look at his ledgers and finds things in red figures.

Right away he decides the world is upside down and that the film industry is wrong side out, headed for ruin on high gear. Like as not he rings for a couple of stenographers and frames up a "piece for the papers." It relieves his feelings, produces a headline and gives some of his associates who happen to have financial colic, a chance to do some more writing and talking.

All of which is quite as natural to the film trade as spring freshets in the Missouri river.

The film business is not headed for perdition.

In fact the film business is doing fairly well.

There are a number of things the matter just now and there always will be. There always will be a certain percentage of unwise investors who will put their money into the hands of the unfit for film projects. There probably always will be a certain percentage of exhibitors who will encourage anything which is held up with extravagant promises as the newest "last word in pictures, the super extraordinary." Promotions based on these factors will always have unhappy periods, but that will not spell ruin for the picture business any more than now.

"Lunatic Competition" Arises

What I am impelled to call "lunatic competition" is bound to arise at times. It is also bound to be periodically downed by its own folly.

So they of the film trade may talk of wastes, of mergers, of the star system, of the multiplicity of distributing systems, of the extravagances of advertising campaigns, of this and of that, but all this talk can have extremely little to do with the courses of nature.

The film business is working out its own salvation and it will continue to do so until the end of time.

When the wind blows hold on to your hat.

What About Star System

Probably the most popular question about the motion picture business, from the trade and the consumers of photoplays alike is: "What about the star system? Will it keep up?"

That this question should be so universally raised is the natural outcome of the so-called star system, itself. The public thinks of photoplays entirely in terms of stars, and the exhibitors, manufacturers and distributors can only reflect in some manner the attitudes, expressions and opinions of the public.

And right there, I think you have the answer—to quote myself as my favorite author and authority—"The public thinks of photoplays entirely in terms of stars."

The "star system" is in my opinion entirely natural, inevitable and desirable. I am sure that it will survive as one of the biggest elements in successful photoplay production and distribution.

I might go into the question at great length from the point of view of the photoplay alone, but perhaps I can arrive at more convincing evidence by stepping out into two other closely allied fields of enterprise, the speaking stage and the publishing business.

Build History on Stars

The history of the drama is written in the biography of stars. Not star actors alone, but star producers, star dramatists, star playwrights.

The publishing business is also a star business. In the publishing field we have star authors, star publishers, star illustrators and even star book binders. And also star fiction characters.

In both of these parallels I mean by "star" the focal personality on which the goods are sold, the personality which is the dominant factor of the production.

In the field of the drama we can point readily to many easy examples of the star personality, as for example Maude Adams. Her drawing power is influenced in but slight proportion by the character of the vehicle in which she appears. The people go to see Maude Adams, just as in earlier days they flocked to see Charlotte Cushman, Edwin Booth, Sol Smith Russell and as they now go to see Sarah Bernhardt. As examples of other expressions of star personality in the dramatic field we find certain productions have gone out on the market to sell mainly on such names as Belasco or Charles Frohman, exemplifying the star producer. Also we have plays which go forth with the star dramatist as their chief selling factor, and I might cite examples all the way from William Shakespeare to Lord Dunsany and J. M. Barrie.

Names Sell Books

In the publishing field we can point to innumerable examples to prove our star contention. Books and magazines are sold on the names of authors as for instance Tarkington, Chambers, Lewis, etc., of the star authors. Sometimes they are sold on the stardom of characters created by the author and which grow to overshadow the fame of their makers —I have in mind for example J. Rufus Wallingford, whom, I will wager is at least as well known as Mr. George Randolph Chester, his creator.

Potash and Perlmutter are better known than Mr. Montague Glass who made them what they are today. The public looks, however, for "another Wallingford story" or for "another Potash and Perlmutter story," not for the new Glass story or the new Chester story, which proves the character is the star. Not a few published productions depend for their success on the names of the men who draw the covers and illustrations, and thus we have the star illustrators of high price like Howard Chandler Christy or James Montgomery Flagg or John McCutcheon or the late Howard Pyle.

Enter: Art and Stars

Since the photoplay passed the novelty stage when pictures which moved constituted an attraction, or in other words ever since the photoplay began to be an art there have been stars. There will be stars as long as the photoplay exists.

In the terms in which I define the word there is no starless photoplay which has met important success—since as I reiterate, the photoplay became an art product. The public mind has made all of these stars and no manipulation by producers and picture distributors can affect the condition in the least.

I see somebody in the back of the house rising to demand the name of the star in "Intolerance."

And I reply "David Wark Griffith."

And another gentleman defiantly asks "Who was the star in 'The Barrier' and 'The Spoilers'?"

And I reply "Rex Beach."

Again somebody suggests Keystone comedies, with a question, and he is as easily answered with the name of Mack Sennett.

Charlie Chaplin—$40 Per Week

If we would look into the "life expectancy" of stars and the star system let us take the insurance companies method of canvassing the life history of the "risk." Three years ago Charles Chaplin was a knockabout character comedian getting a lot of fresh air and about $40 a week.

A little earlier perhaps there was a curly haired girl who made a good many friends in the pictures and presently the public wanted to know and learned she was Mary Pickford. Mary Miles Minter, another pretty child of the confectionery type, was a stage child with considerably more beauty than fame.

When all these people started to work they were just appearing in the pictures. With the exception of Miss Minter these people started when a thousand feet of anything was a picture. Their success with the public made them stars. No producer ever made a star on purpose.

Star Scheme Often Fails

A producer once in a long time thinks to create a star and then cash quick before the price goes up, but the experiment fails fifty times where it succeeds once, and on the celebrated law of averages it is a poor way to try to make money. It is too much like prospecting for gold, the strikes are too far apart. The public only can make new stars.

Quite apart from the certainty that the public creates and will maintain the star in the star position, there are other forces working in the same direction by which the producer quite automatically is forced to support the star system.

Real Stars Cost Money

A real star costs a great deal of money. Capital is careful, or as nearly careful as it can be. Hence the high priced star is given every support possible to insure that the big salary investment will pay dividends.

The big star gets the big story, the most skilled director and the utmost in studio facilities. So quite apart from the star himself, the fact of the star's presence at the top of the cast has come to mean to the public the best picture, the finest settings, most perfect direction, and all of that.

The star will not and can not be eliminated. Any attempt to eliminate the star will be followed by a loss of capital.

Chaplin Draws $670,000

It has been my pleasure to pay the highest star salary in the history of the amusement business, being a matter of $670,000 for one year of the services of Mr. Charles Chaplin, an exemplar of stardom, and the only actor who does not need a cast. And out of that supreme trial of the star system I can insist that it pays. There are limitations but they are set only by the public, and the star principle stands unimpaired.

Serial Now Is Stable

I believe that the serial reached its high peak from a commercial stand point some time past and that it has now settled into a practically stable position.

The class of houses which can best utilize the values of the serial are now practically the only ones which use the serial. The demand for and support of serial productions is holding an even course. I see no reason to anticipate any marked change in the character of serial production or the methods of serial exploitation, either by the distributor or the exhibitor.

Public Dictates Length

The length of pictures will continue to be established and dictated largely by commercial conditions and the public.

No marked deviation from the standard length of the five reel feature appears probable on the basis of the reception with the exhibitor and the public have given deviations from this standard.

The war tax will not in my opinion affect the length of pictures. Its effect is much more likely to be evidence on the quantity of picture production, and by its process of the stiffening the commercial struggle it will tend to hasten the processes of elimination of the unfit and the weak.

Rental Prices Are Low

The rental price of film is not, I deem, likely to fall much below present levels.

On the other hand it is not likely to be markedly increased unless the processes of elimination to which I have just referred result in curtailment of the decided over-production, which is responsible in the main for the present rental prices. These rental prices are in my opinion decidedly low in their ratio to theater earnings.

Countless instances can be cited, of course, tending to show that exhibitors have paid more than their business could afford, but the average will show the reverse of these instances.

Standardization of prices is still a good way off, I fear. The only standardization which should ultimately apply would be based upon the earning power of the picture in the theater. We are far from that as a general practise. At present the nearest approach to any sort of standardization is what investigation finds to be in effect the "price per town," which means that in a certain community the theaters will pay about a certain figure for a feature production, this quite regardless of its age or earning power. Others may differ but the business microscope tells the story.

Development of Service

The service which goes with the pictures is developed by many of the distributing companies considerably beyond the average demand for service among the exhibitors. It is interesting that the successful exhibitors who probably need the least aid from the exchange and the distributor are the best users of the service offered. Service with the films will keep pace with the demands of the exhibitor, whatever they may be.

In administering the affairs of the Mutual Film Corporation, I seek to impress our branch managers with the fact that it is more desirable to hold a customer and give him adequate service than it is to get a new customer. The exhibitor well served proves our best salesman.

On Distributing Films

The distributing systems of the larger picture concerns are today considerably more than adequate to the requirements of the trade. In the multiplicity of distributing systems and their duplications of equipment and effort the industry suffers considerable economic waste.

There may come a time some day when one great central distributing company will be able to give physical distribution service for all film makers. That would be an ideal condition, leaving the makers of film and the sellers of film service still amply in competition, but still saving to the business the great cost of duplicate exchange systems. Meanwhile the commercial battle will continue.

The public will continue to get steadily improving pictures under improving methods of presentation in better theaters.

Irwin Writes Message to Exhibitors

In connection with the forthcoming release of the new Greater Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance—and the Woman," Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the company's distributing organization, has addressed a message to the exhibitors of the country in which he predicts new box-office records for those who play the big feature.

Mr. Irwin's message, promulgated through the Exhibitors' Plan Book, which goes to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada, contains a summary of the success which exhibitors have achieved with "The Fighting Trail," in many cases the greatest in the history of serial runs; and expresses confidence that the new serial will exceed even this record.

"Vengeance—and the Woman" is the work of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It was directed by William Duncan, who is also the male star with Carol Holloway as the feminine star. In referring to the featured players, Mr. Irwin's message says "they are probably the most famous couple in serial pictures today, this being due both to their personal triumphs in 'The Fighting Trail' and to the mammoth advertising campaign that has put their names on billboards all over the United States and Canada, as well as in magazines and representative newspapers."

Mr. Irwin states that "Vengeance—and the Woman" will have behind it an advertising campaign unprecedented in serial promotion.

Ouida Bergere Opens New Offices

Miss Ouida Bergere has perfected plans for a complete and independent organization along lines of the most advanced efficiency.

A long time lease has been executed for New York offices situated at 516 Fifth avenue, with affiliated branches in London, care of Hughes Massie, 40 Fleet street, and at Los Angeles through the recognized activities of the Mabel Condon exchange. These affiliations will give an international significance to Miss Bergere's operations.

Responsible executives of long experience are to be found in the departments now established. Additional executives are already being contracted for to head the new departments under consideration. Miss Bergere will be operating free from any other affiliations or business complications.

Poses for Summer Styles in Zero Weather

While the thermometer was skidding around the zero mark last week Grace Darmond, the new Vitagraph star, was standing around, blithesome and gay, in nifty middy blouses and tennis costumes. Not that she was crazy about the stunt, but a woman's magazine wanted Grace to pose for some fetching styles for next summer's display, and, as the magazine goes to press many months in advance of the seasons, it was up to Grace to look sweet and happy in the lightweight goods despite snow and zero temperature.

Urges Name of Producer Be Featured

TRIANGLE BELIEVES EXHIBITOR WOULD PROFIT BY ADOPTING THIS CUSTOM

"IT has been noticeable of late," says a statement issued last week by the Triangle Distributing Corporation, "that exhibitors in announcing programs, are failing to include the name of the producing company in their advertising. This is a short-sighted policy and one that is likely to harm the exhibitor's business in the long run, rather than improve it.

"The average photoplay patron of today, is conversant with many details regarding the moving picture industry, through knowledge gained from magazines and from attendance at the theater. The continual growth in popularity of the moving picture has resulted in the movie follower learning a great deal about picture stars and producing companies. Consequently, in reading the exhibitor's advertisements he looks for the name of the company responsible for the production. Failing to find it, he may lose interest in the picture.

"A 'movie fan' as a rule, is a most ardent follower of the profession and in many cases, more ardent than the regular playgoer. From patrons leaving a photoplay house you will often hear the remark 'That was a good Cloverleaf picture shown tonight!' And the next day these same people will tell friends of the feature. For instance, Mrs. Jones will say to her neighbor, 'I saw Evelyn Gross in a Fouraces feature last night, called 'The Living Soul' and it was wonderful. The Fouraces pictures are always good.'

"For that is the manner in which news of pictures travel. Having been impressed by the uniformity and high quality of pictures of a certain company, Mrs. Jones and her neighbor in reading the local papers, will always look for the company's name.

"Therefore, it always pays exhibitors to include the name of the producing company in all advertising or publicity. The large New York houses, on the order of the Rialto and the Strand, always announce in their advertising copy that 'Such and such a company presents so-and-so in the,' etc.

"And as the tendency of late, on the part of the average exhibitor, has been to neglect the insertion of this important element, Triangle believes it is again time to call it to the attention of exhibitors. The announcement of the company's name will distinctly aid the picture, help the attendance and build up the reputation of the theater."

New Casting Director

Horace Williams has, this week, been engaged by Western Representative B. A. Rolfe, as casting director at the Metro west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif.

Eleven Gone to War

A service flag bearing eleven stars was raised this week over the Christie Studios by Al. E. Christie.

Jewel Carmen Makes Her Bow as Star

Jewel Carmen in her first production as a star is William Fox's Christmas week offering to exhibitors. The first photoplay which Miss Carmen may call her own will be released December 23 as a Fox Special Feature. The production, which is titled "The Kingdom of Love," deals with a situation developing from a girl being left alone in the Klondike through the death of her father.

"The Kingdom of Love" was made in the west under the direction of Frany Lloyd, who has thus occupied himself while William Farnum was taking a much needed rest. The cast includes Nancy Taswell, Genevieve Blinn, L. C. Shumway, Fred Milton, Ernest Wade, Joseph Manning, G. Raymond Nye and Murdock MacQuarie, nearly all of whom are well known to motion picture theater patrons. The story was written by Doty Hobart.

Fox Films "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal"

Producer Obtains Rights to George Horace Lorimer Story Which Has Been Read by Millions of Persons

"JACK SPURLOCK—PRODIGAL," written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, is to be filmed by William Fox.

It required some persuasion accompanied by the largest sum of money ever paid for a similar privilege to get Mr. Lorimer's consent to picturization of his pre-eminently successful tale, but Mr. Fox personally conducted the negotiations which finally made it possible.

Mr. Lorimer's "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" appeared in Saturday Evening Post in serial form. Its human interest appeal has been characterized as a notable contribution to fiction of the lighter vein. Its introductory chapter in which young Spurlock, at Harvard, awakens after a wild night and discovers a bear with boxing gloves on his feet in his bathroom, which he had brought home as a "lark," compels the reader to settle in his chair anticipating an "out of the ordinary" tale —and he is not disappointed.

Irresistible humor, convincing "horse sense" philosophy, appealing human interest touches, a wee bit of a love romance and a dash of pathos, all blended by Lorimer's adept hand make a charming story and one especially adaptable to picturization.

The story was read by millions of persons and clippings from twenty-five hundred newspapers testify to the unusual interest it awakened. If the Fox people can convey to film even a tithe of its humor and philosophy the result ought to be gratifying. And Mr. Fox is on record with a promise to do this very thing.

Six Exposures to Make Sub Titles

George K. Spoor's art directors are engaged in designing the subtitle scheme of Mary MacLane's first and only screen presentation: "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

The celluloid on some of these subtitles went through the camera six times to obtain the desired effect. These particular ones show Miss MacLane as she sits at her library desk, relating the story of her "six piquant love affairs—each damnably real." The smoke of her cigarette curls in and out through the spoken lines at Miss MacLane's elbow. It is a deviation and an artistic improvement on the "spoken subtitle" idea.

Other subtitles required days of constant effort on the part of the artists in the producing of sculptored effects.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me" is to be released some time in February as a George K. Spoor Ultra Feature.

---

Nigel Barrie, the well known young English actor who plays the part of "Roger, the husband," in Clara Kimball Young's latest production, "The Marionettes," has passed examinations for entry into the British Royal Aviation Corps.

Uses Own Bedroom Replica in Picture Set

In "The Marionettes," the third Select picture produced by Clara Kimball Young with her own company, Miss Young has used an exact replica of her own bedroom.

This is an exquisite French room done in pale gray and mellow old rose, its furniture of ivory toned wood and golden brown wicker, and its hangings bordered in rare old cream lace. It was personally designed by Miss Young and every detail carried out under her supervision. The only thing missing in the duplicate is the wonderful view from the star's windows, but the impossibility of carting the Hudson up to New Rochelle necessitated the omission.

"The Marionettes" has been arranged for the screen from Pierre Wolff's brilliant French play. It will be distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

He Wants to See Miller

A theater owner of Salt Lake City has written H. C. Miller, manager of three Chicago moving picture theaters, the Rose, Alcazar and Boston, telling the Chicago manager that he desires to look upon the man who writes such fair criticisms of pictures as those signed by Mr. Miller in Motography's "What the Picture Did for Me" department. The Salt Lake man said he had the same opinion of the same pictures as those voiced by Mr. Miller and he complimented the Chicago exhibitor on the expressiveness of his criticisms.

"When I'm in Chicago I want to call around and see what you look like," wrote Mr. Miller's correspondent.

New Studios of Paralta Are Model

Progress on Construction Work Surprises Carl Anderson, President of the Company, on Los Angeles Visit

VISITING Los Angeles, after an absence of four months, Carl Anderson, president of the Paralta interests, was astonished as well as gratified at the extent and rapidity of construction work done on the new Paralta studios.

"Even Los Angeles," he said, "does not yet realize the extent of this new motion picture plant which is being created within its midst. Starting only last May, practically unheralded, the Paralta producing studios have grown into a veritable principality in themselves.

"While not the largest, perhaps, in point of area, the Paralta studios are being constructed upon the scientific principle of condemnation, of convenient location, and of unity which will vastly promote efficiency and thus give us the plant for insuring the greatest production.

"We have gone back to the old Spanish style of architecture to insure such conditions. In creating a city, or even a small town, the Spaniards based their construction on the plaza or public park. It was the center of life and activity; from it radiated the remainder of the community. Usually on one side would be the cathedral; on the other the government buildings; on a third the barracks, and on the fourth the jail. Thus would be gathered in a nucleus, the military, the religious and the political functions of ordinary life. Appreciating that everything in the moving picture industry is contributory to what transpires on the stages, we have our stages laid out as the center of the new studio architecture, corresponding to the plaza of Spanish idea. Surrounding the stages on the four sides are the various buildings which supply the life and color to the stages, just as from the four sides of the plazas flock the life and color of the Spanish communities.

"This close grouping not only saves time and promotes efficiency, but the compactness saves much space on the twenty-four acres of the new studio site, for use as natural feature locations.

"Southern California is the best place in the United States for producing moving pictures; and Hollywood is certainly the pick of Southern California locations."

Carl Anderson

Paralta Booking Plans Completed

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Will Distribute Plays — General Exchanges Will Be Used

PARALTA PLAYS are now ready for booking in every corner of the globe. Arrangements have been consummated for the distributing of Paralta Plays to exhibitors throughout the entire civilized world. A plan was completed last week whereby Paralta bookings will be made through General Film Company exchanges. A representative will be placed in each General exchange throughout the United States by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation which are now receiving bookings for the first two Paralta productions, "A Man's Man" in which J. Warren Kerrigan is the star, and "Madam Who" with Bessie Barriscale in the stellar role.

"Madam Who," which will be the second picture to be released by the Hodkinson Corporation and which marks Bessie Barriscale's debut as a Paralta star, promises to be one of the really big successes of the year. In speaking of this production in his review, Alan Dale, recognized for many years as the foremost dramatic critic in America, stated: "'Madam Who' is a particularly excellent picture, it is the best piece of emotional work I have seen in many a day. I should say that it is a distinct advance in the picture art—and I emphasize the word ART."

Henry B. Walthall's initial Paralta Play, "His Robe of Honor" will probably be selected for the third release, but this has not been definitely settled. The picture is finished, however, and it is said by those who have seen it that it is another triumph for Paralta which presents Mr. Walthall in one of the most forceful characterizations in which he has appeared.

Paralta Plays will be distributed through Canada by the Globe Films, Limited, the main offices of which are located in Toronto with exchanges in Montreal, Winnipeg, Glagary, Vancouver and St. John.

Countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and South America will all receive Paralta Plays through the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

"Troublemakers" Is Going Good

"Troublemakers," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, released December 9, found immediate favor with the public, according to reports from Fox exchanges. The "Baby Grands" undoubtedly have attained a degree of popularity far above the point of mediocrity, due chiefly to their work in film and helped materially by intelligent, well directed publicity and advertising. Very recently their pictures appeared in forty influential newspapers on the same day.

Warde Directs Keenan

Ernest C. Warde, son of the great English actor, Frederick Warde, and producer of a long list of artistic and financial successes, has been engaged by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, as director for Frank Keenan, the new Pathe feature star.

Lieb a Metro Player

Herman Lieb, an experienced player of the legitimate and vaudeville stage, appears in a prominent role in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak," the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. June Mathias and the director, Albert Capellani, made the adaptation.

Risks Death to Film Disaster

Gaumont-Mutual Cameraman Obtains 500 Feet of Scenes in Halifax and Beats Competitors to U. S.

JAMES BARR O'NEIL, Gaumont-Mutual camera man, who was on duty in Halifax, N. S., at the time of the disaster that cost 1,800 lives, accomplished an extraordinary feat in making 500 feet of film covering the worst aspects of the disaster and arriving in New York twenty-four hours ahead of any competitor, the pictures being exhibited on Broadway Thursday evening, December 13. They were on exhibition in Chicago and the central west Saturday, December 15.

Mr. O'Neil was five miles from the harbor front visiting the home of a friend when the explosion took place, the windows of the houses being shattered and several occupants cut with glass.

The camera used by O'Neil had to be dug out of a mass of wreckage to which the upper floors of his hotel on Prince Edward street had been reduced, but the machine was soon put in working order and the operator succeeded in obtaining some of the most thrilling scenes of the great holocaust.

The cameraman had hard work in getting out of Halifax, all trains having been commandeered for the removal of wounded, but O'Neil was determined not to be beaten on so important a piece of work. He clung to the rods of the last coach on a hospital express and once clear of the wrecked area managed to make his way by automobile to a direct train for Portland, Maine, when he proceeded to New York.

Spoor Starts Billboard Campaign

Essanay Chief Begins to Spread the Contagious Smile of Taylor Holmes from Coast to Coast

THE opening gun of George K. Spoor's campaign of bill-boarding the entire country in advertising the ultra features to be produced by him during the year has been fired and as a result the contagious smile of Taylor Holmes is beaming from coast to coast and lakes to gulf.

"Uneasy Money," a comedy-drama featuring Mr. Holmes, is the subject of the first poster drive. Twenty-four sheets in six colors are being used exclusively. The first went on the boards December 15. They show Mr. Holmes in a typical comedy scene from the picture.

Following the Holmes drive will come another twenty-four-sheet campaign for Mr. Spoor's second feature, Mary MacLane, the daring authoress, in a picture from her own pen, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," another Spoor ultra feature, with Taylor Holmes in the role of "Ruggles," will be the subject of the third drive.

"Uneasy Money," "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," and "Ruggles of Red Gap" will be distributed through branches of the George Kleine system.

A scene from the Fox production, "Troublemakers," starring Jane and Katherine Lee.

After one week's vacation, Miss Theda Bara started her twenty-eighth William Fox photodrama this week at the Fox Fort Lee studios. She is working under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. This has been the longest rest that Miss Bara has ever had between pictures.

Backer Brings Confidence to Industry

President of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Enters Film Business with Record for Integrity and Achievement

George Backer, president of M. H. Hoffman, Inc.

CONFIDENCE exercises so positive an effect upon everything in life that it is small wonder big men of affairs have come to regard it as the backbone of business success. Let a man become known as a doer of large commercial deeds, who punctually meets every obligation the hour it is due, and his association with enterprise imparts confidence to it. Other men realize that such a man will not alone succeed, but that his manner of succeeding will be to the advantage of everyone doing business with him.

Men who go through life after this fashion leave the impress of their constructiveness on whatever they touch. No industry reaches the height of its development until many men of this sort cast their lot with it.

The fact that the motion picture industry has begun to attract men who have gone far in other business is a most encouraging sign. It proves for one thing, the nearness of the introduction of business methods which are indispensable to progress and stability.

Right now, when for its welfare the motion picture industry most needs the strengthening, steadying touch of men who instill confidence, the entry of George Backer into the field means much. How much it already has meant is shown in the accomplishments of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., of which Mr. Backer is president, and the effect upon the industry as a whole resulting from upbuilding policies to which Mr. Backer is pledged.

Not quite six months old, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., occupies a position among distributing organizations which could scarcely have been gained without wisest planning and administration. Its place among independent concerns reflects the application of business procedure as yet too little practiced in the motion picture field.

Merchandising methods similar to those found in institutions like United States Steel, National Cash Register, United Cigar Stores and American Telegraph and Telephone have prevailed with M. H. Hoffman, Inc., since its inception. Existing practices in the motion picture industry which have been frowned upon by the ablest men in it, have been put under the heel of this concern.

George Backer acquired his fortune through his own unaided efforts. His holdings are perhaps the most eloquent tribute to his industry, his capacity and his integrity. When he decided to engage in the marketing of motion pictures —which he did because he foresaw possibilities through a rightly administered organization—his first step was to invite as his chief associate and executive a man who had the confidence of the industry.

This man, M. H. Hoffman, recognized in Mr. Backer the one capable of accomplishing those things awaiting the attention of an exceptional individual. So Mr. Hoffman became a large stockholder in M. H. Hoffman, Inc., assumed its vice-presidency, and undertook the task of administering its affairs in accordance with basic principles on which all large commercial achievements rest.

What George Backer has done in the building industry it is more than likely he will do in motion pictures. In New York City Mr. Backer is held to be one of the best of builders.

"Those Who Pay" Is Well Received

New England exhibitors, according to reports received by Frank G. Hall from Nathan Gordon, well known New England exhibitor and exchangeman, have put their stamp of approval upon "Those Who Pay," the Thos. H. Ince special seven part drama recently released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation as its second feature attraction.

"Those Who Pay" was presented for the first time in New England at a trade showing last week and exhibitors from ail over the district were present, many coming from Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire to see what the Booking Corporation had to offer as its secand release. The presentation was under the joint direction of Mr. Gordon, through whose Globe Feature Film Corporation, U. S. subjects are being marketed, and A. L. Erghott, U. S. representative in the New England territory.

Arrangements also are under way for another trade showing for "The Belgian," the third U. S. release, for which there already has been a strong demand in the New England district. Exhibitors are quick to recognize the money getting qualities of the title of the Sidney Olcott drama and many are preparing to run it during the holidays in hope of counteracting the anticipated depression.

Show "The Belgian" on Belgium Day

"The Belgian," Sidney's Olcott's first independent production, was shown at the Hero Land bazaar at the Grand Central Palace in New York on December 5, when Belgium Day was observed.

The presentation was given at the request of Mrs. W. T. Mali, wife of the Belgian consul in New York, under the joint auspices of Mr. Olcott and Frank G. Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, by which "The Belgian" is being distributed.

Prepares Press Sheets for "Shame"

Jules Burnstein who has been carefully preparing the campaign which will place the new Zena Keefe vehicle "Shame" on the state rights market, announces that the elaborate advertising matter which will introduce the special John W. Noble production to the theater going public is now ready, and the picture will be offered to state rights buyers before the holidays.

"Shame," is seven reels in length and represents the supreme effort of this well known director to surpass other special pictures representing the best work of famous directors who have also concentrated upon single big subjects and taken the time necessary for their proper presentation. Mr. Noble whose more recent productions include Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Romeo and Juliet," and Ethel Barrymore in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," decided early last summer to confine his work to the staging of pretentious features and spent several months on the elaborate treatment of the Zena Keefe subject.

Hoffman Starts Trip

Detroit—December 4th and 5th.
Cleveland—December 6th and 7th.
Chicago—December 8th and 9th.
Minneapolis—December 10th and 11th.
Kansas City—December 12th and 13th.
St. Louis—December 14th and 15th.
Cincinnati—December 16th and 17th.
Pittsburgh—December 18th and 19th.
Buffalo—December 20th.

The world rights to the Mack Sennett feature "Mickey" in which he presents Mabel Normand, have been purchased by the Western Import Company.

Release Twenty-Eight Keystone Comedies

W. H. Productions Company Offers Re-Issues to Exchanges at $80 Per Reel and Without Footage Tax

ON THE heels of the successful exploitation of the Hart productions, W. H. Productions Company announces the release on the state rights market, of twenty-eight of the most successful Keystone comedies, which are largely responsible for the success of Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Sydney Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and Charles Murray. The W. H. Productions Company made the following statement relative to their exploitation campaign on these new subjects:

"We are launching this campaign at this time for the purpose of helping the exchange man that has been up against it and the exhibitor who has been forced to pay exorbitant rental prices for his program. It will be noted that we are the first distributor to come out boldly and state the price we intend charging for these subjects to the exchange, $80 per reel. This price assures to the exchangeman the greatest galaxy of comedies and stars on the screen today at a price that will bring to them bigger profits than they have ever made before and it will also assure a reasonable rental price for the exhibitor.

"In addition to this we also intend to pay the war tax on these subjects so that every exhibitor booking them can refuse to pay any tax if the exchange demands it. We are getting up exceptional one and three sheets and careful attention is being given to the titling on each of these productions. In fact the best comedy title writers in the business have been employed."

Foreign Rights Are Selling

Notwithstanding slack conditions in the foreign film market, Miss Edna Williams, special representative of the Robertson-Cole Company of New York and London, which has acquired the foreign distributing rights to the productions released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has encountered no difficulty in disposing of the subjects thus far put on the market by the booking concern. By the arrangement between the U. S. corporation and the Robertson-Cole Company the booking concern has been brought into direct touch with exhibitors and distributors in all parts of the world, and during the past week a number of important sales were negotiated.

Exhibition rights to the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" have been sold for Japan, China, India, Burma, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, Philippines and Hawaiian Islands.

Rights to "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian," the three first releases of the U. S. Corporation, have been disposed of for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador and arrangements have also been made with the purchasers to take the entire output of the concern.

Buy World Right for "The Liar"

The world's right to "The Liar," a six part feature starring Jane Gail, former Universal lead, have been acquired by General Enterprises, Inc. The picture was directed by William H. Haddock and is a society drama dealing with one of today's most vital domestic problems.

Another Shorty Hamilton Comedy Offered

In accordance with a statement recently made in the trade papers relative to the "Shorty Hamilton Comedies," consisting of twelve five-reel comedy dramas per year, the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company now announce another release entitled "The Snail," a Chinese-American story. This title, however, does not suggest in any way the activities of "Shorty" in the telling of the story. From its very beginning and continuing through the entire unfolding of the tale, there is a rapid fire of action and mirth provoking incidents with the star in the lead. There is a refreshing absence of the slapstick methods or over-acting in order to get a laugh.

Shorty Hamilton as he appears in "The Snail."

The marketing of the "Shorty Hamilton" series is being negotiated in the Ernest Shipman offices, 17 West Forty-fourth street, New York City, both for the domestic and foreign rights.

Declare "Peggy" Is Censor-Proof

During the past week New York has been the scene of many conferences of prominent state right buyers from all over the United States, and there is also a considerable influx of foreign buyers. From very many of these, officials of the Mayfair Film Corporation have received assurances that the six-part production, "Persuasive Peggy," is an ideal booking proposition. Its cleanliness and simplicity of theme making it "censor-proof."

Laemmle Gives Double Entertainment

Arranges for Continuous Program with Two Big Feature Pictures at His Broadway Theater

Carl Laemmle, president the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and managing director of the Broadway theater.

MANAGING DIRECTOR CARL LAEMMLE, of the Broadway Theater, makes announcement of important productions which will go into the Broadway during the months of December and January, during which time a double bill and continuous performances, at popular prices, will be Mr. Laemmle's rule.

The first of these special Broadway house features were "My Unmarried Wife" and "Beloved Jim."

"My Unmarried Wife" is adapted from the Frank R. Adams novel, "Molly and I," by Doris Schroeder and produced by George A. Siegmann. Carmel Myers has the leading feminine role and Kenneth Harlan plays the male lead. The cast includes Beatrice Van, Pat Calhoun, Marc Fenton and Jack Hutchinson. The story is that of Phillip Smith, who reluctantly leaves the shelter of his father's luxurious home because of his penchant for a literary career and who subsequently meets with an accident while saving the life of a child in an explosion blast. He is taken to the home of a doctor by his beautiful young ward and there becomes the husband of the girl under unusual circumstances. His eyesight is restored in Switzerland, but a harmless vampire and a wooden-shod immigrant re-enter the scene when Smith, restored to health, returns to New York minus his newly acquired bride. Both the vampire and the immigrant bring about a happy finale with a decided twist in the fifth reel.

"Beloved Jim" is also in five reels. The story is a Christmas one by Joseph Girard, and produced by Stuart Paton, who has a long line of cinema successes, including Universal's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," to his credit. Priscilla Dean plays the leading feminine role. Harry Carter, J. Morris Foster, Charles Hills Mailes, Frank Deshon, Sydney Deane, Ed. Brown, Joseph Girard and Mrs. A. E. Witting are members of the cast.

Special musical programmes accompany all of these features at the Broadway.

Exhibitor's Daughter in Film Play

Miss Sylvia Jacobs, daughter of George Jacobs, manager and part proprietor of the Paramount Theater on Broad street, Newark, made her motion picture debut in Metro's "Red, White and Blue Blood," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

She played a "bit" as a society girl in the elaborate hunt club ball scenes staged at the Metro studios in New York. She acted her part so well that she attracted the attention of the stars and their director, Charles J. Brabin. At the conclusion of the scenes, they complimented her on her excellent performance. Both of the stars were struck with Sylvia's beauty and vivacity.

Sylvia's father can count on capacity audiences, when "Red, White, and Blue Blood" is shown at his theater.

Shows First Colored War Pictures

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theater, New York, last week arranged for the exclusive presentation of two distinct novelties during the coming week. One of the novel offerings of the week will be the first exhibition of colored motion pictures of the present war ever given in this country. These pictures present scenes of actual warfare in their actual colors and are expected to create a sensation.

The other novelty is the initial presentation of the James Montgomery Flagg series of comedies.

Public Wants Variety in Pictures

The advantages of a service which carries a wide variety of pictures is pointed out by F. E. Hughart, owner and manager of the Eagle Theater at Grand Junction, Ia., one of the most progressive of small city exhibitors in Iowa.

Public taste may run to comedy dramas or to sex pictures or to melodrama, and the fickle public does display amazing changes in its entertainment demands, but it demands diversity before anything else.

According to Mr. Hughart, the most valuable service to the exhibitor is one which furnishes variety enough to keep his audiences entertained for the patrons of motion picture theaters soon tire of a steady diet of westerns, comedies or any particular variety of productions.

Mr. Hughart has written his opinions to the Mutual Film Corporation in the following letter:

"Please accept my thanks for the good judgment shown in sending me pictures that vary—that are different in character and plot.

"The features last month were every one fine and some of them exceptional. William Russell goes best with Jackie Saunders a close second.

"An unsolicited notice in our local paper is ample proof that patrons like the sort of pictures you are furnishing me. I want to express my aprpeciation too, for the fine quality of the film."

Theater Owner Dies

F. H. Weaver, owner and manager of the Jefferson Theater at Coffeyville, Kans., is dead of hemorrhage of the lungs. The funeral services were conducted by the Coffeyville lodge of B.P.O. Elks. Frank Gaverick has assumed Mr. Weaver's duties as manager of the Jefferson.

Gives Morning Shows

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theater, New York, announces that special children's performances will be given every morning during Christmas week, commencing at ten o'clock. A special Christmas program of interest to children will be presented.

Conditions Bad in Canada

Exhibitor Writes That War Situation Is Reflected in Loss of Business But Sees Brighter Prospects Ahead

THE serious state of affairs in the motion picture industry, as outlined by Samuel Goldfish recently in his sensational interview, finds confirmation in a statement on conditions in western Canada made by J. R. Muir, owner and manager of a chain of theaters in British Columbia, including the Dominion of Vancouver, the Dominion Theater of Victoria, the Dominian of Nanaimo and many other houses in those and neighboring cities.

"The film business is in a critical condition, from the exhibitor's quite as much as from the manufacturer's point of view. Of course, we have the Canadian war tax to face out there, as well as a local levy, and the new Victory Loan. I feel that the last-named, while it is the largest begetter of economy among theater patrons, is also purely transitory. In a short time, the pocket books will be adjusted to the new outlay and people's normal and constant craving for amusement will rule.

"But I know, as Mr. Goldfish contends, that exhibitors everywhere in Canada, as in the United States, are suffering from the upward tendency in rentals, due to lack of organization among the producers and to reckless bidding for stars. It is the exhibitor and his patrons who have made these player's famous, and when they hold out for huge sums of money which prevent producers from making legitimate profits off any but excessive rentals, they are biting the hand that has fed them.

"The producers who have 'come back' by placing such stars in 'specials' are doing almost as much to ruin the legitimate picture business.

"As to public taste in war time—and Canada has had a longer siege than the United States—it is most decidedly away from the heavy and the morbid. The people still relish pathos of the finest sort, but it must be pathos relieved by comedy touches."

Sees Half of Exhibitors Forced Out

Organizer for League Declares Fifty Per Cent of Nation's Theaters Will Fail Unless Tax Law Is Amended

AT the monthly meeting of the Washington Theater Managers' Association in Seattle, two of its members were appointed to represent the organization at the conference of motion picture men with members of the Internal Revenue department concerning the readjustment of the war tax at Washington.

W. H. Smythe, manager of the Strand Theater, Seattle, and Dr. Howard S. Clemmer, of the Clemmer Theater, Spokane, departed in time to reach Washington December 9.

The Washington organization was addressed at its meeting by David L. Rodgers of Minneapolis, national M. P. E. L. organizer. Mr. Rodgers told how the ten per cent tax was working a hardship on exhibitors all over the country, except at those places where concentration camps were bringing greatly increased attendance. And he declared that as the country's participation in the war progressed, with casualty lists coming in and the consequent depression which will sweep over the people, the exhibitors' business would become a great deal worse.

When that time comes, Mr. Rodgers declared, fifty per cent of the exhibitors will have to go out of business, if the tax as it now reads is still in force. He laid before the exhibitors the plans of the national organization for readjustment of the law.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected. James Q. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer Theater, Seattle, was elected president; John Hamrick, Rex Theater, Seattle, first vice-president; Fred Mercy, North Yakima, second vice-president; George Ring, Society, Seattle, secretary; Louis Goldsmith, Class A, Seattle, assistant secretary, and J. H. von Herberg, treasurer, Seattle.

Film Conditions Good in Australia

Film conditions in Australia, like all belligerent countries, suffered at one period a set-back due to the war, but are now flourishing, according to advices from Harold Bolster, a Goldwyn executive touring the Orient in the interests of that corporation.

"Both from personal investigation and from conversations with the leading film men of Australia and New Zealand, I have received a most optimistic impression of the state of the market for American films here, and the prosperity of theaters and exhibitors. Australia has suffered in the past from the war, both materially and spiritually. Depression, I hear, was particularly acute following the costly failure of the British at Galipolli where Australian troops lost heavily. But since the British fortunes on the battlefield have improved and war conditions at home have grown normal, the attendance at motion picture houses has steadily improved. For a time this year, labor unrest also played a part in creating an unsatisfactory state; but the government speedily solved the difficulty, and now the islands of Australia and New Zealand are in a steady and most satisfactory condition."

Manager Sees Lack of Originality

"I fear that producers of today are feeding the public too many war pictures," says Harry C. Miller, manager of the Boston, Rose and Alcazar theaters in the Chicago "loop" district. "Of the past ten pictures I've run, each and every one has had something to do with the war. Since we are in the war itself now up to our necks, I think it would be a good idea to keep away from war subjects in motion pictures as much as possible.

"There is a great lack of originality among picture producers. I believe that if a successful picture was put out dealing with a snow-man, the next fifteen or twenty pictures would have something to do with snow. And all the time the thing the public wants is that each picture be different from the preceding one."

Transforms Lobby Into Railway Depot

Manager of Toronto Theater Uses Unique Set for Attracting Public to See "Vengeance and the Woman"

MANAGER HARRY POMEROY of the Globe Theater, Toronto, Ont., who began building special fronts for theaters four years ago in Buffalo, has an interesting collection of photographs which show the progress he has made in lobby displays during his lively career. Probably his best effort was the transformation of the Globe front for Vitagraph's "Vengeance and the Woman."

The whole theater resembled a railway depot with the ticket seller disposing of pasteboards through the rear of a passenger coach.

In place of poster sheets, Pomeroy arranged "time-tables" on which were listed the various pictures on the program while a large clock gave the hours of departure for the next show.

The doormen were dressed like conductors and there was a pullman porter on duty. Passengers entered the house through gates and the fare for the round trip, according to an appropriate sign was fifteen cents.

The lady ushers were garbed as locomotive belles. Ouch!

Here's an Example to Follow

Edward L. Hyman, an exhibitor who is always doing something that demands the notice of the moving picture industry, has accomplished something in the way of adding to the revenue of the house which he manages—the Victoria, a neighborhood theater of Buffalo, N. Y.

Taking advantage of the fact that Christmas advertising could be had for the trouble of going after it, Manager Hyman got busy among the merchants whose customers are patrons of the Victoria. He went out after advertising so strongly that when it came time to make up his bi-weekly program booklet, he had so much paid copy on hand that he was compelled to curtail the announcements of his attractions for the coming fortnight. The program netted the Victroia more than $75 in excess of its cost. The program is a twelve-page booklet and it contains more than seven full pages of advertising in addition to the program announcements.

Sunday Law Kicks Back at Supporters

Theater owners of Wichita, Kans., and the film companies for a year have been opposed strongly by an alliance of the churches who were voted against the opening of the moving picture houses on Sunday. The churches succeeded in defeating an ordinance last year which would have given the theater owners the Sunday theater privilege they were seeking. During the year the churches have been operating moving picture machines on Sunday for the purpose of showing Bible stories in picture form. Last week an ordinance was passed by the city council and a notice sent to all the churches to postpone their moving picture programs for the next Sunday and all succeeding Sundays, as it is now against the law at Wichita for even the churches to conduct a moving picture show on Sundays.

Novel Way to Increase Price

Manager F. E. Osborne of the Star Theater, Kitchener, Ontario, hit upon a novel scheme to enable him to raise the price of admission for his house. He issued a combination ticket for fifty cents which was good for three different shows within nine days, one attraction being "Womanhood." His admission price had been fifteen cents, and with the three-show combination ticket the admission became only approximately seventeen cents. But without a combination coupon the admission for "Womanhood" was fifty cents and for the two succeeding productions the general admission price was twenty-five cents each. The combination ticket made a saving of fifty cents to a purchaser but it practically guaranteed patronage three times during the nine days. The idea made it easy for Osborne to work up to the increased price of twenty-five cents permanently.

Says Stars Draw Too Much Salary

Charles L. Dooley, president of the Motion Pictures Association of Paterson, N. J., and managing director of the Regent and Garden Theaters, has taken a stand for what he believes will be the salvation of thousands of his colleagues. In a message to the exhibitors of the United States Mr. Dooley says:

"No star is big enough to earn a profit for the exhibitor if the picture is too costly. My opinion is that entirely too much attention is being paid to the star, and entirely too little attention to the story.

"The present salvation of the exhibitors of the country is in booking pictures at prices that will give us a fair return on our investment. It was a question of either discontinuing expensive productions that do not bring sufficient revenue or of going out of business. We have thrown off the shackles. The Regent and Garden theaters are not going out of business.

"I believe that there are thousands of exhibitors in the country in the same position. My advice to them is to do what we have done—throw off the shackles and book pictures at prices that give them a chance to make a living."

Mr. Dooley booked as his first picture after making this announcement, "The Fringe of Society," produced by the George Backer Film Corporation and distributed by Foursquare Pictures.

Give Red Cross Receipts

All the moving picture theaters in Fort Worth, Tex., recently gave one entire day's receipts to the Red Cross. The money was divided equally between the local chapter and the national organization.

Complete New Theater Building

The Floral Block, in Binghampton, N. Y., which will house the Floral Theater, four stores and eleven living apartments, is nearing completion and will be ready for opening during this month. The theater will be conducted by J. F. Small and his son, Kenneth Small.

"Her Sister"

Olive Tell in Empire-Mutual Five-Reel Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

OLIVE TELL'S charm and beauty, and the beauty of the scenes, both interior and exterior, make this an enjoyable photoplay. Taken from a Frohman stage success, the story contains some dramatic moments, especially in the last reel, but the story is rather involved and is occasionally hazy. It has the merit of originality, however, and cannot be called hackneyed. With its pictorial beauty and a certain air of refinement and richness, it will please most audiences very well.

David Powell plays opposite Miss Tell. Eileen Dennes plays her sister. A large cast does evenly good work. John B. O'Brien directed the picture. December 24 is the release date.

The story: Eleanor (Miss Tell) and Jane Alderson are left unprovided for at the death of their mother. Eleanor answers an advertisement which results in a position as a mystic, "Isis," under the protection of an old woman who had long been a fortune teller. Eleanor is so beautiful that she becomes very popular and she is able to support herself and her sister very well.

Jane, who is unsophisticated and fun-loving, becomes involved with a wealthy "fast" set and as the result of an escapade finds herself named as a co-respondent in a divorce suit. A newspaper reporter runs a picture of Eleanor as the woman in the case. Jane has fallen in love with a worthy youth and in order that the scandal may not destroy the girl's happiness, Eleanor does not correct the false story. However, Ernest Bickley, a man of fine family, is in love with Eleanor and is trying to convince his family that although following an unconventional profession, she is respectable and of fine character. The newspaper notoriety given Eleanor gives them another impression. Then Jane confesses that Eleanor was not involved in the case, and Eleanor in turn is able to prove that Jane was merely indiscreet. Both girls are cleared of any blame and their devotion to each other completely wins the high regard of the families of both suitors.

"Blue Jeans"

Metro Production with Viola Dana. Released December 10. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"BLUE JEANS" has returned to spread its thrills and pathos and story of love over the emotions of picture fans. As a play twenty years or so ago it went on record as one of the most successful ever produced, and it has since lived down the years, revived from time to time by enthusiasts who know that it contains all of the fundamentals necessary to good melodrama. It has now reached the screen in one of the most satisfying productions of the day, worthy in every respect to take its rank among the classics of picturedom.

"Blue Jeans" makes just as much of an appeal today as it did when it was first produced. Farces may come, and comedies may go, but melodramas go on forever, and "Blue Jeans" is undoubtedly one of the best melodramas ever written. Its story is human and delightful, pulling on the heartstrings and playing havoc with one's emotions and tear ducts, until it leaves one with moist eyes and fairly glowing with good intentions.

One had best take a handkerchief along for preparedness when about to view it. Relentless moving picture reviewers, hardened to and saturated with the movies, sitting with "show me" expressions on their faces, resorted to them without shame, so the helplessness of an ordinary fan is apparent.

It may be said without parley that this picture does not contain a single dull moment. From the first appearance of Viola Dana as June, to the famous sawmill scene where the hero is miraculously saved from a terrible death, one is vitally interested in the scenes unfolded, and powerless to resist the picture's charm. Exhibitors who benefit their patrons with this feature will be conferring a favor upon them which they will not forget.

The production leaves nothing to be desired in the way of direction, photography, histrionic ability and settings. John Collins directed the picture, which was adapted by June Mathis and Charles Taylor from the original play by Joseph Arthur.

Viola Dana performs with a simplicity and charm which endears her to spectators from the start. She is really delightful. The cast is highly competent and includes Robert Walker, Sally Crute, Clifford Bruce, Russell Simpson and Margaret McWade.

The story: Perry Bascom comes to the town of Rising Sun to take charge of his sawmills, which have for years been managed by a friend. Young Bascom assumes the name of Jim Nelson, as Perry's uncle, under the name of Bascom, caused the name to be despised by wronging a young girl of the village.

Bascom meets June, a quaint figure in blue jeans, who has taken refuge from the poorhouse with old Jacob and Cindy Tutwiler. Bascom and June, falling in love, are secretly married.

Sue Eudaly arrives in town and gives out the astounding information that Nelson is Perry Bascom and that he is her husband. The townspeople are greatly enraged, particularly so when they hear he has married June. June is the only one whose faith in Bascom remains firm, and she remains alone, turned from the home of the Tutwilers, while Bascom goes out into the world to prove that Sue had a husband when he married her, and that his marriage with her was illegal.

Left alone with her baby, ill-treated by the townspeople, turned from the church, June is almost in despair when Perry returns with his name cleared of the charges against him.

"The Maternal Spark"

Triangle Picture. Released December 16. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS Triangle picture concerns a youung couple who are elevated by a wealthy friend to a higher position in the city than they had ever previously known in the country. The city proves too great a temptation for the husband, and it is only after the wife has interceded with her husband's mistress, in behalf of her child, that events straighten themselves out and husband and wife return to their little country home. The story is well told and contains a certain appeal.

It would seem that very nearly every picture these days has to have its siren who is a veritable glutton for money, and this picture remains true to form. These sirens, who are not like anything that ever was on land or sea, are vastly popular with the public, a fact greatly to be deplored, except by the box-office man.

The first half of the picture rings true and offers some very pretty little home scenes which are wholesome and sweet, contrasting strongly with the later scenes in the vampire's apartments.

First honors go to Irene Hunt, who makes an appealing mother throughout. Her work is very convincing and her personality pleasing. Josie Sedgwick has the role of the siren, and others in the cast are Rowland Lee, Edwin Jobson, Frank McQuarrie and little Joey Jacobs. G. P. Hamilton directed the picture, and the scenario was prepared by George du Boise Proctor from the original story by R. Cecil Smith.

The story: John J. Mills, a prominent railroad president, takes a fancy to a young lawyer, Howard Helms, and, bringing him to New York, makes him his confidential secretary. He does this as much for the happiness of Helms' wife and baby as for Helms himself.

Helms receives tips on the market from Mills and in a short time acquires quite a bit of money and the desire to have a good time with it. His wife is unable to leave the baby alone, so Helms finds the company of an adventuress, Clarice Phillips, much to his liking.

Mills, realizing that Mary is being neglected, determines to right the wrong he has done. He breaks Helms in the market and discharges him from his post of secretary.

At the same time, Mary, learning of the other woman, goes to her and pleads for the return of her husband's love, for the sake of the child. Clarice, who sincerely loves Helms, renounces him when he next comes to see her, and Mary and her husband return to their old home town, sadder but wiser.

"In the Balance"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature with Earle Williams. Released December 17. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"IN the Balance" is an adaptation from E. Phillips Oppenheim's story "The Hillman." It is a strong story of love. John Strangeway falls in love with Louise but is prevented from having his desire to marry her gratified because of her past, which is surrounded with mystery. The story is well told and presents many interesting scenes in which certain well known tricks are used to mislead the spectators. In fact the whole story depends upon these false leads which may not constitute good play construction but which seem to always have the desired effect. After all, that is the goal to be gained, whether by fair means or foul.

Earle Williams and Miriam Miles in scene from the play.

The characters are particularly well established and there is a certain atmosphere of luxury which permeates the picture and makes up for a lack of speedy action. Earle Williams plays John Strangeway, a role which is most suited to his quiet yet forceful methods of acting. The character is an interesting one and the star has wide scope for his abilities. Although Earle Williams is starred in this picture he shares honors equally with Grace Darmond, who has the role of Louise Maurel. She gives a performance which is wholly delightful and convincing. Others in the cast are Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Miriam Miles, and Templar Saxe. Paul Scardon directed the picture.

The Story: While on her way to visit the Prince of Seyre Louise Maurel's automobile breaks down on a lonely road and she is obliged to take shelter at the home of John Strangeway, who lives with his brother, Stephen.

The Strangeways have long had a grudge against women and it has been many years since a woman has crossed the threshold of their home. John Strangeway is peculiarly attracted to Louise although Stephen warns him that the girl's friendship with the notorious Prince of Seyre is alone enough to brand her as the kind of woman that she is.

Strangeway follows Louise to the city and proposes marriage to her, but she withholds her answer and is continually seen in the company of the Prince.

After hearing the Prince make a scandalous remark about Louise one night, Strangeway rushes to her home and is completely crushed when she refuses to repudiate the statement. He returns to his home in the hills where Louise follows him a short time after and swears that her relationship with the Prince has never been anything but platonic. She is welcomed into the family by both brothers, with the usual final embrace.

"The Land of Promise"

Paramount Picture with Billie Burke. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

BILLIE BURKE will be remembered as having starred in "The Land of Promise" on the legitimate stage a few years ago—her first attempt at a substantial drama—and she made good. The picture gives her the same opportunities to be other than "cute" and she rises to the occasion in a manner highly satisfying and wholly convincing.

The play's adaptability for the screen is marked by numerous outstanding features. The sequence of events follow closely and logically one another and receive one's undivided attention, while the actions of the characters are all prompted by real human impulses. The realism and probability attached, and the sympathetic feelings inspired, make the witnessing of the picture just so much more enjoyable. Then there is just the right amount of humor which hasn't the appearance of being dragged in, and settings which are thoroughly consistent. The production, all in all, is one which should please.

The germinal idea of the story is of the brute man, trying to conquer by using cave-man methods. And true to form, the woman enjoys thus being conquered without knowing it, and when her chance for liberty comes uses a woman's prerogative and changes her mind. Billie Burke is very pleasing as the girl who is conquered, and Thomas Meighan as the cave-man person is entirely satisfactory. Others in the cast are Mary Alden, who, as the sister-in-law, does excellent work, J. W. Johnson, John Raymond and Helen T. Tracy.

The story: Nora Marsh, after having served untiringly as a companion for many years, finds herself, at the death of her wealthy employer, entirely alone, without a recompense for her years of labor.

Hardly knowing which way to turn, she journeys to the wilds of Manitoba to her brother's ranch, where she endeavors to help her sister-in-law with the work about the place. The sister-in-law, Gertie, is horribly jealous of Nora, and makes life unbearable for the girl. She resents her husband's respectful and sympathetic attitude toward his sister, which he had never shown toward her, and finally insists that Nora either leave the house or that she will.

Frank Taylor, a hired man about the farm, has purchased a farm of his own, and intends marrying a woman from an employment agency who will be nothing more or less than a housekeeper. This idea was at first repulsive to Nora, but suddenly finding she may not remain with her brother, she accepts Frank's offer and accompanies him to his farm, with the understanding that there be no sentiment between them.

Nora makes Frank's home an attractive one, and Frank at length craves to have her recognize him as her husband. Nora refuses to do this, begging him to remember his bargain, but

Frank believes in the supreme might of man and takes Nora by force.

The next day Nora receives a check from England sufficient to make her free of her husband, but when the time for parting arrives she discovers she has grown to love the crude man with whom she has thrown in her lot, and she remains as his acknowledged wife.

"Because of a Woman"

Triangle Picture. Released December 16. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A NEW type of vampire is given us in this Triangle picture, in the person of a wholesome, fun-loving girl whose worst vice is the desire for a good time, and who is (paradoxically speaking, for she wrecks happy homes) really good at heart. Where one expected a deep-dyed "vamp" of preconceived proportions, one was introduced to a most likable creature, pleasingly interpreted by Belle Bennett. This was the innovation of the picture.

The principal character is a young man who sacrifices everything—even his reputation and own happiness, to insure the happiness of the woman he loves who is married to a worthless fellow. He even wins from the other man the siren for whom he is neglecting his wife, only to fall in love with the siren himself and realize that his life-long, overpowering love was as naught compared to this. This is made plausible by allowing the wife's charms to sort of dwindle away toward the finish of the picture and to allow her to be seen in the unsympathetic role of wallflower and gossip.

The action of the piece is at times slow, and it has not been particularly well constructed, lacking that continuity which is the saving grace of many a picture. It was picturized by George Elwood Jenks and directed by Jack Conway.

The story: While Noel Clavering is general manager of an engineering company a serious leak occurs. Suspicion points to Noel and Colonel Gwynne, the father of the girl Noel loves. In order to protect the Colonel's good name, Noel resigns and disappears, although he suspects Allen Barrett, the company's mineral expert, of being guilty.

Later he wrings a confession from Barrett, but upon learning that Barrett and Muriel Gwynne are happily married, he decides not to use this knowledge to exonerate himself.

Barrett soon tires of Muriel and becomes infatuated with a newcomer to the town, Valerie Greenway, an unconventional girl whom the gossips have all condemned.

Noel attempts to break up this affair by threatening Barrett with exposure, but, this ruse failing, he manages to win the girl away, only to fall in love with her himself.

The girl is discovered to be in reality a good girl, spending the greater part of her time caring for an invalid mother, and as she has fallen in love with Noel, all ends happily.

"Uneasy Money"

Taylor Holmes in Six-Reel Essanay Ultra Perfection Picture. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS story rambles along in a most entertaining fashion. Its progress is leisurely, but very enjoyable. The characters are not only likeable, but they stand out individually as though each had a real life background behind him. They are all true, from the American millionaire with a passion for golf, and the caddies who laugh at his mistakes, to Lord Dawlish, played by Taylor Holmes, and one of the best roles he has had.

The situations throughout the play are unusual and amusing. Taylor Holmes is excellent and the supporting cast is fine. Virginia Valli is very attractive as the girl in the case. Among the players is a monkey who furnishes much comedy. Care has been given to the settings and many of the exteriors are beautiful. The photography is up to the standard. L. C. Windom directed and handled the play well. P. G. Wodehouse is the author.

If your patrons have seen and liked the previous Holmes pictures, you may be sure they will greatly enjoy this one. Audiences who take kindly to screen comedy drama will appreciate it. We believe that a majority among the patrons of any class theater will be pleased by it, especially if they have been surfeited with war and problem plays. There isn't much plot to it, and the ending is a trifle weak, but there is much good, clean humor and human characterization. Unless your patrons absolutely demand heavy fare, advertise this well and you will be justified by the enjoyment it gives.

The story: Lord Dawlish is a young Englishman with a title, but no money. An American millionaire, whom he had once taught to play golf correctly, dies and leaves him five million dollars. Over in America, a niece and nephew of the millionaire are disappointed in not being his heirs. They live on a small farm near a suburb of New York.

Lord Dawlish comes to America to take charge of his property. He learns about the niece and nephew and decides to give them half the fortune. He meets the boy by chance and the latter, not knowing who Lord Dawlish is, invites him to visit his home. The sister is angry with her brother and the guest is unwelcome. Thinking she will thus get rid of him, she sets him to work at various tasks, from washing the dishes to whitewashing the chicken yard. But the Englishman thinks it great fun and the girl begins to like him. Then she learns who he is and becomes enraged at his audacity. Lord Dawlish goes away, leaving behind a document transferring the entire fortune to the girl. Again she changes her opinion of him and decides to marry him and share the millions with him.

"The Volunteer"

World Film Picture with Madge Evans. Released December 24. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

IN "The Volunteers" William A. Brady presents a decided novelty. Madge Evans is given the unusual task of portraying herself and is seen, during the pretty little story, hobnobbing with the World Film celebrities and even interrupting William A. Brady himself at his work.

Many of the scenes are taken unconventionally in the World Film studio and it is quite unique to thus bring the mechanism of the studio life before the public. Picture fans who are keen about the personal side of celebrities' lives will be overjoyed. Madge is seen in intimate chats with Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Kitty Gordon and others, and is even seen attending a picture theater where one of her own pictures is being shown and of viewing herself with avid interest.

There is an element of war introduced, but no actual war scenes, it being confined to the advocation of enlistment and the leaving of troops, and of a stirring plea for volunteers on the part of Madge. Children will especially enjoy this picture although older people will find in it much that is entertaining. Harley Knoles was the director.

The story: Madge Evans's daddy enlists for service abroad and her mother enroles as a red-cross nurse in order to do her bit, making it necessary for Madge to give up her picture work and go to live with her grandparents, who are stern old Quakers.

Madge bids farewell to all of her dear studio friends and journeys to the home of her grandparents only to find that they consider it unseemly to show any signs of affection to the little girl and that good times and moving pictures do not enter into their routine of life. Her grandfather refuses to allow her to wear her pretty, frilly dresses, making her wear, instead, a plain, unworldly Quaker frock.

Madge attends the village school but is jeered at by the "teacher's pet," who makes life more or less unendurable for her until "The Little Duchess" is shown in town with Madge as the star. Then she has to succumb to Madge's charms, and even the grandmother and grandfather take a peep at the picture, unbeknown to each other, and find themselves laughing and crying like human beings.

Madge's uncle Jonathan wishes to enlist in the army although it is against the teachings of his religion and against the commands of his father who claims he will disown him if he persists in speaking of the matter. On his twenty-first birthday, however, Jonathan enlists and also makes a speech calling for volunteers. When the recruits do not enlist fast enough little Madge makes a speech herself, telling how her mother and daddy are working "over there" and begging young men to follow their example.

The young men start to enlist in droves and then there is nothing left for Madge to do but try and soften her grandfather's heart so he will say good-bye to his only son. Her grandfather cannot resist her pleadings although he had sworn never to speak to his son again, and with the reconciliation comes the realization that he is a bigoted old crank and that one ounce of a child's love is worth more than all the relentless teachings of his religion.

Henry Hull as Uncle Jonathan is wholly acceptable and others in the cast are Muriel Ostriche, Jack Drumiere, Kate Lester and Victor Kennard. Nothing need be said about little Madge Evans herself except that she is just as delightful as ever.

"Shirley Kaye"

Select Picture with Clara Kimball Young. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE screen version of "Shirley Kaye" is adapted from the play made popular on the stage by Elsie Ferguson. As a picture it is made satisfactory by Clara Kimball Young's charms and abilities, and by a production which is, in every way, high class.

The story concerns Shirley Kaye's fight for her father's financial interests. Realizing that the only way to strike at T. J. Magen, her father's business enemy, is through his social-climbing daughter, Shirley makes a bargain with Magen, whereby she is to give his daughter her heart's desire if he will ally himself with the Kaye interests. There is a last scene where Shirley follows Magen's woman hating associate in business to the west and makes him confess his love.

Clara Kimball Young gives an admirable performance as Shirley Kaye. The part is a light one and Miss Young endows it with the right amount of color and earnestness. George Fawcett gives an excellent interpretation of T. J. Magen, contributing a very large portion of the entertainment to the picture. Others who do acceptable work are George Backus, Claire Whitney, and Corliss Giles. The settings are very beautiful and have been selected with care.

Clara Kimball Young and George Fawcett in a scene from "Shirley Kaye."

The picture was prepared by Margaret Turnbull from the play by Hulbert Footner, was directed by Joseph Kaufman and photographed by William Marshall.

The Story: Shirley Kaye, a prominent society girl, learns that T. J. Magen, a financier from the west, is planning to gain control of the railroad of which her father is president. If he succeeds he intends to make John Rowson, his young associate in business, its president.

Shirley, realizing that Daisy Magen is desirous of breaking into society, takes her up socially with the idea of getting around Magen through his daughter. She also meets Rawson by posing as her own maid and obtains information from him which is valuable in furthering her fathers interests.

Magen, whose love for his daughter is the biggest thing in his life, succumbs to his daughter's plea to allow Kaye to remain where he is, and admits to Shirley his defeat.

Rowson goes west to forget Shirley, whom he believes to be a cold-blooded seeker after wealth, but she follows him there and all ends happily.

"Until They Get Me"

Triangle Picture with Pauline Stark. Released December 23. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"UNTIL They Get Me" proves to be a Triangle offering of considerable worth, dealing with the ruthless workings of the Northwestern Mounted Police, and bringing in a distinct and satisfying element of romance. A mere thread of a story has been ingeniously developed into a picture which admirably holds one's interest.

A man of the great northwest kills, in a frenzied moment, a fellow man, and he is pursued and hunted by the mounted police through interminable years until they finally get him. Although the hunted man is revealed in tender moments with his child whom he visits yearly, the picture does not resort to the commonplace and allow the man his freedom to satisfy the sentimental audience, or show the police as displaying a weakness in desiring to give it to him. The police remain firm in their duty and the man accepts the fate which is inevitable.

Oddly enough, the character which attracts the most attention has almost nothing to do with the development of the story. Pauline Stark is seen as a growing youngster at the army post who attains young womanhood while the police are searching for their man. Her interpretation is exceptional, bringing out the irresponsible joys of youth and the winsomeness of girlhood. Her gradual growth is displayed with much charm and Miss Stark gives promise of some day leading the younger screen stars in youthful roles. She shows a rare combination of intelligence, witchery and piquant beauty.

The picture was written by Kenneth B. Clark and produced by Frank Borsage. It seemed to satisfy a large audience at the Rialto Theater, New York, where it was being shown, and exhibitors will do well to book it.

The story starts with a petty fight over the breaking of a bottle of whiskey, and the killing of one man by another in a moment of irritation. The murderer is pursued by a mounted policeman to a cabin where he is found with a new-born child in his arms. The officer grants his man five minutes to remain alone with his dead wife, but, at the end of a few minutes, seeing a man fleeing from the rear of the cabin, he starts in pursuit only to discover it is an Indian helper about the place, taking a little exercise.

Returning to the cabin the officer finds his man had waited the five minutes and has gone. As this is the one black error against an otherwise perfect record, the officer makes it his sworn task to eventually get his man.

After many years have passed the officer learns through a girl at the army post whom the murderer had befriended years before, that the sought man, every fifth of September, pays a visit to his son at a nearby cabin. In spite of the fact that the girl hadn't meant to disclose this information, the officer takes advantage of it, and finds the outlaw, who, after ceaseless years of wandering, is glad to give himself up.

Franklyn Farnum in Bluebird Play from R. H. Davis Story. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MYSTERY story by Richard Harding Davis serves as Franklyn Farnum's latest Bluebird vehicle. It is directed by Joseph De Grasse and contains plenty of action, good acting and photography. It is well up to the standard of Farnum's previous Bluebird releases. The story contains suspense and holds the interest, and even though occasionally it becomes so confused that the spectator seems to have lost the thread of the plot, everything is straightened out in the end.

There is a flavor of novelty in the situations and patrons cannot complain that it is just like others they have seen. The settings have been given proper attention, and the rain storm scenes are very good. While not exactly a comedy drama, it has rapid action and touches of humor. It should be very well received in the average photoplay house.

Edith Johnson plays opposite Mr. Farnum. Al Filson, Howard Crompton and Lon Chaney play their roles skillfully. December 24 is the release date.

The Story: Billy Winthrop, whose father is managing, with poor success, the small town newspaper, decides to stop his idling and go to work. In the same small town, is Paul Revere Forbes, an eccentric but aristocratic old man who is cashier of the bank. Billy is in love with his daughter, Beatrice. Forbes disappears under circumstances which make him look like an embezzler. Beatrice goes to live with the Peabody family, leading citizens of the town. She accepts the son's proposal of marriage because she feels she must.

Billy, on his father's paper, discovers a clue to the missing bank funds. A scarlet automobile has been wrecked and the driver killed on the night of Forbes' disappearance. Documents which incriminate Peabody and his son are found. Billy follows the clue, first arranging to elope with Beatrice on the night her engagement to the younger Peabody is to be announced. But things do not work out as they are expected to and Beatrice comes near being forced to marry Peabody after all.

However, when she runs away from him and hides in a deserted cabin, she finds her father there. His mind is weakened by the shock of the accident of the scarlet car, in which he had been placed after being almost killed by the elder Peabody. He recovers enough to disclose the true villians and the villagers give Peabody and his son a coat of tar and feathers. Beatrice of course marries Billy.

"The Fighting Trail"

Episode 15, "Out of the Flames." Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE final episode of this thrilling serial closes with a fitting climax in which Gwyn gains control of the Lost Mine and captures the remaining members of the outlaw band with the assistance of a troop of United States cavalry. This has been a splendid feature from beginning to end and one guaranteed to cure the most helpless state of inertia.

William Duncan and Carol Halloway have handled the leading roles with a naturalness and daring which has made their work very effective throughout.

Nan and Gwyn having been miraculously saved when the express train upon which they were traveling was wrecked, they meet the troop of cavalry, which had been sent to protect the mine, and journey back to town with them.

Von Bleck and his gang had conceived the heinous plan of attacking the town and of setting it on fire, believing that Nan and Gwyn were killed and that they could soon claim the mine.

In the midst of activities the United States troops arrive, capture the bandits and rescue the townspeople. With the death of Von Bleck by his own hand Gwyn is free to carry on his work at the mine. He learns that a two million dollar check has been deposited to his credit in a New York bank and all ends happily with Nan and Gwyn in a fond embrace.

"The Fair Barbarian"

Paramount Picture with Vivian Martin. Released December 17. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A GENEROUS abundance of merriment is interspersed throughout Vivian Martin's new screen play, "The Fair Barbarian." The little star is seen as a willful, breezy American girl who is deposited in a poky, English town amongst prim, snobbish relatives and she fairly romps through the picture and bubbles over with the mischievous humor which makes her so delightful. The contrast between the whirlwind American and her horrified relations presents many mirth-provoking situations, of the unmistakable slapstick brand. Yes, slap-stick, disguised and dressed up, to be sure, but slap-stick nevertheless. The means of securing a laugh by smearing a pretty girl's face with mud could not be credited with subtlety.

The story is very slight and spasmodic, but there is charm in the English atmosphere and in some of the queer characters. The young curate, Poppleton, is very amusing when awakened to the possibilities of a turkey-trot, and when seized with a longing for the hand of the fair barbarian. William Hutchinson in this role presents a clever character sketch which will cause many a laugh. Josephine Crowell is seen as the snobbish Lady Theobald, Mae Busch as Lucia, her granddaughter, and

Jane Wolff has the amusing role of Belinda Bassett. Robert Thornby directed the picture.

The story: Martin Bassett, a wealthy American, sends his daughter Octavia to visit his English relatives. Octavia arrives in Slowbridge, the home of her aunt, and unsettles the whole town by her unconventional manners.

The greatest snob in the town is Lady Theobald, who is trying to form an alliance between her granddaughter, Lucia, and Captain Barold, who is considered the "catch" of the season. Lucia prefers Mr. Burmistone, who is only a manufacturer, and therefore has no social standing in Slowbridge.

Octavia terrifies her aunt and shocks the good townspeople by her gowns and behavior and thoroughly upsets a musicale when she dances a turkey trot with Captain Barold, who is very much enamoured of her. In fact even the shy curate succumbs to her unseemly charms.

Then Octavia inspires Lucia with enough pep to insist upon Mr. Burmistone for a husband instead of Captain Barold, who doesn't want her anyhow. Captain Barold is about to propose to Octavia when she rushes wildly on an errand of mercy to some homeless dogs and comes back with such a bedraggled heap that the Captain's sense of propriety is sadly upset and he alters his decision.

At this point Octavia's father arrives with Jack Belasys, Octavia's former sweetheart, with whom she had quarreled, and who now looks like heaven itself to the girl. She hugs him in ecstacy, much to the surprise of the townspeople, who had considered her a title-hunting barbarian.

"The Silent Lady"

Zoe Rae in a Pleasing Butterfly Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ATMOSPHERE and charm make up in a large part what this story lacks in action and plot. Zoe Rae is featured and is given a fine supporting cast. Winter Hall, Harry Holden and Edwin Brown do unusually good character work. Gretchen Lederer in the title role is pleasing. Lule Warrenton and E. A. Warren have important parts.

The story is not strong and is worked out in an indefinite, hazy fashion. The ending is especially weak. But the people in the picture are interesting and pleasing in themselves and Elsie Jane Wilson, the director, has followed her usual custom of making her scenes natural and charming. There is much of good in the picture but it is not as a whole very satisfying because the story is not worked out well. Its appeal will be greatest to neighborhood houses catering to women and children especially. It is a sweet, clean little offering, but lacks the dramatic power to make an impression upon a mixed audience. E. S. Clawson is the author of the play. December 10 is the release date.

The Story: Zoe Rae appears as a little waif who is cared for by three old chaps who tend the lighthouse. Many amusing incidents of their home life are shown. When the little girl becomes ill, a nurse, Miss Summerville, is brought to the lighthouse home to take care of her. There is a mystery in the nurse's life and this becomes evident when she is greatly disturbed at the information that a certain officer is about to visit the lighthouse on his tour of inspection. She plans to go away, to the grief of her young charge and of the three men, who are fond of her. However, the doctor of the village, who has fallen in love with the nurse, persuades her to stay. He convinces her that he believes in her in spite of the gossip which connected her name with that of the officer and which was malicious and false.

"Without Honor"

Triangle Picture with Margery Wilson. Released December 23. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THERE is heart interest aplenty in the Triangle picture "Without Honor" which features Margery Wilson. C. Gardner Sullivan has written a story which is full of those little human touches which affect all classes alike, and which are sure to spell the word success for an offering.

The story runs along with exceptional smoothness to a climax with a punch, and in which pathos and happiness are so intermingled that one doesn't know whether to laugh or to cry. Most people will probably do both. It is essentially an appeal to the emotions from first to last, but put forth in such an intelligent way, and with such a knowledge of what the dear public wants, that it will undoubtedly appeal both to the classes and the masses.

Margery Wilson is seen in one of her "little mother" roles. Miss Wilson makes the figure an appealing one and she creates a deal of sympathy in the role.

Walt Whitman has the role of Deacon Hanford, a despotic believer in harsh justice, and he portrays the part with enough realism to make the spectator heartily despise him. Others in the cast who give pleasing touches are Arthur Moon, Darrel Goss, Laura Sears and Anna Dodge. The picture was directed by E. Mason Hopper and photographed by Charles Stumar and both deserve high praise for their effective work in this pleasing production.

The story: Roy Hanford is driven from his home by the harsh policies of his father and the narrow standards of his wife. In the west, when he is down and out, he is befriended by "Breeze" Ballard who finds work for him in a hardware store where he himself is employed as a salesman.

Hanford meets Jean McGregor, and, falling in love with her, decides to disregard man-made laws and seize his opportunity for love and a home and happiness. They are married, "Breeze" Ballard is best man, but of course Hanford says nothing about his wife back home. He thinks that by unfailing devotion he can right the wrong he did to Jean when he married her.

A baby brings much joy to the two and then Hanford's father and wife back home hear of the duplicity. When Deacon Hanford arrives with a warrant for bigamy, firm in his desire for justice, Jean sacrifices herself by saying she never was married to Hanford, and the Deacon takes his weak son back home to his first wife.

Left alone, Jean finds it difficult to take proper care of her baby until she finds work on a ranch near where the Hanford's live. Young Hanford, going from bad to worse has met his death under the influence of liquor and the Deacon, finding the hiding place of Jean, tries to drive her from the community by branding her as a "scarlet woman."

Too tired to fight, Jean is on the point of leaving when "Breeze" arrives, after having searched for the girl for months. He tells the hard-hearted old man about the wedding and the wonderful sacrifice which the girl has made in the cause of love and loyalty, and leaves the deacon bowed in sorrow at the great wrong he has done.

Japan Makes Incombustible Film

The following report on the manufacture of incombustible film in Japan has been issued by the government Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

"About a year ago a considerable amount of interest was aroused in the United States by the announcement that a professor in one of the Japanese universities had invented a successful incombustible substitute for celluloid, to be manufactured from soya bean cake. At the time it was not found practicable to secure any more definite information with regard to the project, but recently further data have been received by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The new product has been given the trade name of 'Satolite,' derived from the name of the inventor, Prof. S. Sato, and a company for its manufacture has been started with a capital of 2,000,000 yen ($1,000,000). Satolite is a galalith made of the glucine of soya bean, coagulated by formaline. It is said to be produced much more cheaply than ordinary celluloid, and to have several advantages for industrial use not possessed by the latter. The factory is to be built in the Mukojima district in Tokyo, and the actual production will begin this autumn."

Here's Where Pictures are Popular

That the number of persons equal to the total population of Syracuse, New York, attend the local motion picture shows once every eight and a half days was one of the significant statements made by Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, in his lecture before the Commonwealth Club in the First Baptist church the other night. A total equal to the population of New York attends in the metropolis once every six and a half days, and the figures for Cleveland, Ohio, show that the equal of the total population attends every six days.

Becomes Picture House

The Hippodrome of Marietta, O., which was seriously damaged by fire recently, may be remodeled and put in operation as a moving picture house. The building was so badly damaged that the owners do not feel like bearing the cost of putting it in shape for vaudeville, inasmuch as construction costs are almost prohibitive. A temporary rear wall will be constructed and a new roof will be laid, while seating arrangements are perfected and equipment installed to make a moving picture theater of the structure. It will be used the remainder of the winter for pictures and next season it may be converted into a vaudeville house again.

Penny Poverty Puzzles

Exhibitors of Grand Rapids, Mich., are encountering a great deal of difficulty in collecting the admission war tax on account of the acute shortage of pennies in that city. It may become necessary to boost prices in order to overcome the difficulty. At one house last Sunday 600 pennies were given out in change, and the manager was unable to obtain more coppers. Managers are making daily canvass of groceries, cigar stores and newspaper stands in search of the elusive penny. In Battle Creek, Mich., one exhibitor was forced to lower his prices to nine and thirteen cents, accepting ten and fifteen cents for admission and war tax.

Uses Novel Display

When Manager C. Everett Wagner of the Dreamland theater, Chester, S. C., showed "Baby Mine" recently, he installed in the lobby a cradle with three live-looking dolls, presumed to represent the three infants who form a part of the plot of the picture. The local newspaper in commenting on the display remarked at the correctness of the method that had been used in tucking the "babies" under the cover and said: "One could easily see that the man who fixed the cradle was not a single fellow."

Finishing New Building

The work on the new Cadillac theater which is under construction at Cadillac, Mich., is progressing so rapidly that announcement was made last week that the house likely will be ready to open by January 15.

Quits Theater Job

Lee L. Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson and Strand theaters in Louisville, Ky., has resigned both positions to take charge of a film exchange. He will handle the distribution of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of which he is secretary and treasurer. The corporation controls the franchises of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Kentucky and Tennessee. Mr. Goldberg is a native of Louisville. He enjoys a wide acquaintance in that section of the country.

Remodels Old House

James Jordan, manager of the Electric theater of Manila, Ia., is having the house remodeled. When finished it will class with the most modern picture theaters in the state.

Talkers Well Received

The four-minute-men of Uniontown, Pa., are being so well received by moving picture audiences in that city, that many patrons attend the theaters to hear these gifted orators. The government does not permit these speakers to exceed four minutes in making their addresses, but the audiences frequently applaud and demand more speech when the four-minute-men have finished.

Josephine Whittell Is Screen Player

Miss Josephine Whittell, the popular musical comedy beauty who is now appearing in the leading feminine role of "Hitchey Koo," will make her motion picture debut in the near future as the star in the Selexart Films Company's production of "Alimony," the sensational divorce drama written by Hayden Talbot and produced under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. As the star in the production Miss Whittell will be seen in the role of "Mrs. Bernice Bristol Flint," who with the other two leading characters, interpreted by Lois Wilson and George Fisher, forms the triangle of the play.

Run Sunday Shows

Sunday theaters are running in Chattanooga, Tenn., without molestation by the authorities. Keith's Rialto is advertising that no vaudeville will be shown on Sunday, but that pictures will hold the boards exclusively. Thousands of soldiers come in from the army cantonment at Fort Oglethorpe, just over the Georgia line, on Sundays to view the pictures, and every house in the city runs to capacity.

Gives Penny Note

A theater owner of Lewisburg, O., has solved the penny shortage problem with the assistance of the officials of a local bank. When no pennies are to be had for change in collecting the war tax, this theater issues a slip of paper on which is printed an American flag and the following inscription: "Due the bearer one cent. People's Banking Company, Waldo C. Moore, treasurer."

Two New Theaters

Two other theaters have changed hands, J. W. Crough having purchased the Elite at St. Paul, Neb., and Thietje and Case having bought the Ideal theater in West Point, Neb.

Gives Red Cross Aid

The appearance of Louise Huff, dainty Paramount star, at two benefit performances of "Freckles" and "Seventeen" assisted Manager L. A. Schlesinger of the West End and Clune's theaters at Santa Ana, Cal., in raising $1,000 for a war fund, in co-operation with the local committee of the Red Cross.

A scene from Goldwyn's production of "Thais" in which Mary Garden is the star.

Mary Garden Feeds 500 Defenders of Nation

In an out-of-the-way corner of a New York newspaper the other day appeared a paragraph acknowledging receipt of a check for the fund of the Patriotic Service League, to be applied toward its dinner for the soldiers and sailors on Thanksgiving Day.

There was no cause for comment in this simple fact, although the amount of the contribution—five hundred dollars—was inclined to make the practical reader wonder just how many dinners the donor was providing for the boys. The name of the giver did cause comment, however, not merely because she happens to be a well-known woman, but rather on account of the hardly noticeable space given the considerable amount.

The lady bountiful was Mary Garden, who is to appear in "Thais" for Goldwyn. It is significant that the money came to the organization in the form of a cashier's check from the singer's bank. Had it not been for inquiries made by the recipients it would never have been known that the sender was Mary Garden.

Trimble Suffers Physical Breakdown

As a result of the unceasing effort and tireless work which he devoted to the second Petrova production, the title for which is being selected this week, the producer, Larry Trimble, suffered a temporary physical breakdown last week. He is now under the care of an expert osteopathic physician who has promised to bring the director around to his usual fine physical trim within the next few days.

The Man Inside the Booth

Should License Operators

I am chairman of a committe from our Local which was appointed to work in conjunction with a committee from our city council and building inspector, to draft an ordinance for a license for moving picture orperators. Can you give me any information on the subject or could you tell me where to get copies of laws used in other cities. The members of our Local feel that a license law would be a benefit to us. What do you think of the proposition?—H. H. J., Ind.

I license for operators is a good thing, providing that the license carries a practical examination with it and that the examination is given by a committee that is composed partially of experienced men. Quite a number of states and cities have a first-class license law and the men who hold licenses are practical operators. That kind of a law is a benefit to the operators. On the other hand there are license laws in effect that are a travesty on justice. In my home city, Indianapolis, we have one of these "jokes" in effect now. We have a law known as the Vocational License Law, and it provides that operators on moving picture machines shall take out a license to operate the same and that the fee shall be $5.00 per year and $1.00 for issuance making $6.00 per year. For what? For the privilege of working, and if you do not work then you are subject to arrest for vagrancy. There is no examination connected with the license and any one who feels that he would like to become an operator is privileged to take out a license. At the time this license law was drafted the excuse was made by some of the city officials that the operators' work was a hazardous occupation and should be controlled by a license law. But when it came to the acid test and these officials found out that if an examination was given and then some operator would have a fire and possibly cause a panic and some one would get hurt (which is an improbability), that the city of Indianaapolis would be a party to any suit that might be brought for damages, they did not care for the examination, which only goes to prove that the license was framed as a money raising proposition pure and simple. The operators have employed three attorneys and the Business Agent, J. O. Benner, has had the president of the Local, Robert Gavin, arrested.

The police had refused to arrest an operator who did not pay the license, but the local is going to take the case to the highest court to beat the license scheme. Brother Gavin was arrested so that a test case could be brought in court and the operators of Local No. 194 are paying all the expenses attached to the case. At the last session of the state legislature an effort was made to have a law adopted on a state license proposition but the bill was never passed. Take my advice and go very slowly on any kind of a license ordinance. It will not be worth your time that you will spend in drafting it. I am told on good authority that no city license in respect to operators will be legal and that the only way that the operators will ever get a license that amounts to anything will be through the legislature with a state law. Before you do anything at all with the ordinance, get the advice of some good attorneys and have them draft the ordinance for you embracing your suggestions. I have copies of license laws that are in effect in several states and cities. I am mailing them to you so that you may see how they are drafted. When your are through with them please return them to me.

Invents Signal Device

This is the first time that I have ever contributed anything to any magizine, but if it will help anyone along, here goes: I am an operator in this little, one-horse town and I like the work and most of all the experience. Now, regarding the punch marks in the film, we get some bum stuff once in a while from the exchange but I have a warning device which I think is good and I do not need any punch marks at all. I have but two bolts in the top magazine as indicated A in the accompanying drawing, and they are the binding post ends for the electric wire and the spring "B" makes the contact. The lower sides ends, bottom and door I covered with asbestos paper pasted on the metal so as not to short-circuit. I then had some pieces of tin cut four inches long and one inch wide. I bent these pieces of tin to fit the reel hub and about two turns after starting to rewind the film I place one of these pieces of tin in the reel so that when the reel is a few feet from the end the tin drops out on the switch and lights a red globe on the front of the other machine as a warning. Dry batteries and a miniature lamp may be used for this but I am using the city current and a large lamp. Now, if I have made this plain and you think that it is worth while you can pass it along. I would like to get a position in some larger town. I am using two Power's 6A machines and think they are fine. I have had them four years and they are as good as new. I do all my own repair work. I work three nights a week and am a reader of your Projection Department. I like it very much. The spring used in the device is made of a wide piece of heavy tin, and the upper side of the tin is covered with asbestos. When the piece of tin comes out of the reel it falls on the tin and makes a contact with the stud bolt, thus completing the circuit and lighting the signal lamp.—Yours truly, J. N., Idaho.

Your device as far as a signaling device is all right, but you would not be allowed to use it in most of the cities of the country. It is not practical from an electrical or safety standpoint, but it will act as a signaling device. I believe that you have overlooked one point in your description of your device and that is this—you did not mention that the two bolts should be insulated through the magazine. These bolts would have to be insulated, otherwise the signal light would remain lit all the time.

Trouble with Lights

I am working on two Power's machines and using a Ft. Wayne compensarc on each machine. The current is 110 volt, 60 cycle alternating and I am having trouble with my lights. At times the light will get very dim and will be that way for possibly a reel or two and then it will get bright again. Can you tell me what is causing this?—F. F. D., Mich.

From the way your letter reads, I take it that you are having trouble with the light on both machines, and if that is the case I have ever reason to believe that your voltage at the compensarcs varies. I would advise you to have your electrician to install a volt meter on the line just ahead of the compensarcs and take readings from it at regular intervals for a few days and then you can ascertain whether you are getting a 110 volts at the compensarcs at all times. If you find that the voltage does not vary, then examine all connections from the main switch to the compensarcs and from the compensarcs to the lamps. A loose connection will cause a variation of current at the lamp. A variation of current on the mains will also cause a variation at the lamp. Be sure that the jaws on the lamp are kept good and clean. The jaws should be taken out once a week and the part of the jaw making the contact with the carbon should be cleaned thoroughly. A good contact between the jaws and the carbons is essential to a good light. Examine the terminals at the lamp jaws and see that they are making a perfect electrical contact with the lamp and that the lead wires at the terminals are making a perfect contact also. About one-half of an operator's trouble with light is caused by poor connections either at the lamp or at the terminals. Take the terminals off the lamps and clean them thoroughly before putting them back.

New Play Chosen for Edith Storey

Metro has acquired the rights to "The Claim," a Broadway play written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare, as a starring vehicle for Edith Storey. The play had a New York run earlier this season, with Florence Roberts in the leading role. Metro recognizes in this play an ideal vehicle for Edith Storey, who has made a name for herself in western roles, and will give it an immediate production.

Triangle Seeks to Relieve War Stress

Offers Features That Detract from Thoughts of World Conflict—Two Dramas Head Schedule for the Week

CONTINUING its efforts to furnish the most enlightening and most interesting photo dramas of the day, Triangle offers two features for the week of December 23 that bear out the policy of the company. Triangle believes that in these days of war and trouble that the public should be given pictures so constructed that they will detract from thoughts of stress and woe.

"Without Honor," scheduled as the first release of the week, is a drama dealing with a true situation in life and is one of a series that offers unusually realistic portraits of American life. Margerie Wilson appears in the stellar role.

"Until They Get Me," the second release of the week, is a dramatic story of the Northern country, showing the work of the Northwest Mounted Police, in an interesting manner, and emphasizing most strongly the characteristics of that organization. Pauline Starke, the sixteen-year-old star, has the leading role in this feature and her unaffected acting is said to be one of the best parts of the picture. Cast as the waif Margy, she puts real feeling into the character and according to reports, really is Margy, in no instance having to act the part. "Until They Get Me" has already been shown on the screen at the Rialto Theater, where it enjoyed a week's run and was generally praised by critics.

In the Keystone Comedy, "Afraid to Be False," also scheduled for release December 23, Milton Sims plans to elope with Dorothy Hagar in spite of the fact he already possesses one wife, in the person of Maude Wayne. But when the appointed day for the elopement arrives, Milt quits cold on the proposition and goes home to his wife and a mighty big surprise. Lloyd Bacon has designs on Milt's wife and when Sim's arrives home, a lively scene follows.

"A Counterfeit Scent" and "A Birthday Blunder," one-reel Triangle Komedies, are also included in the week's releases.

Saxe Adds to List of Characterizations

Templer Saxe, erstwhile grand opera singer and for several years past a prominent Vitagrapher, has produced another of his fine characterizations in the role of the theatrical manager in "In the Balance," a Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, starring Earle Williams, which was released this week. Mr. Saxe has been one of the most consistent screen artists and has many fine portrayals to his credit, among them that of the impresario in "The Sixteenth Wife," the town treasurer in "Mary Jane's Pa," and the real estate sharp in "The Fettered Woman." Mr. Saxe's versatility has been shown recently by his appearance in comedy roles in one picture while at the same time he appeared as a heavy in another.

Adopts War Motto

Jewel Productions, Inc., are stamping all their printed matter with the motto, "Smiles Help Win the War."

Brandt Urges "Go to Movie Week"

Universal General Manager Gets Behind Chicago Newspaper's Idea to Make It a National Movement

GETTING behind an idea originating with "Rob Reel," the moving picture expert of the Chicago American, exhibitors throughout the country will be urged by General Manager Joseph Brandt, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., to promote a "Go-To-The-Movie-Week" during the holidays.

"We intend to get behind the 'Rob Reel' idea with enthusiasm," says Mr. Brandt in his statement announcing Universal's purpose. "There is every reason in the world why the moving picture interests should have a special 'drive' once a year to center public attention on the screen. Many lines of commercial industry make special efforts at certain seasons of the year through 'fashion shows,' 'grand opening' and 'dollar days' to enliven the routine of business—and why not the movies?

"The 'Rob Reel' scheme was put through with great success in Chicago last year, and the exhibitors who cooperated with the purpose of awakening special interest in moving pictures during the holidays profited accordingly. The uplift was felt by the most obscure picture show as well as by the big houses and an increased effort will be made this year to stir the public to box office action during 'Go-To-The-Movie-Week.'

"Universal will circulate publicity to every exhibitor in the country, explaining the purpose of the movement and 'the way to do it.' The 'Rob Reel' idea will be passed along to other communities where the scheme is unknown and untried, with the object of making the movement a national purpose once a year. Holiday week has been well selected as the time to concentrate on the general public.

"The distributors usually concentrate their efforts on timely and particularly attractive subjects for Christmas and the New Year and the motto, 'Let's Be Cheerful,' fits to a nicety into the 'Rob Reel' idea. If exhibitors in every community will unite, for once, in a campaign of advertising, newspaper publicity and a co-operative purpose to bring moving pictures into prominence as part of the family entertainment during the holidays there is every reason to believe that the individual managers will reap a great benefit."

Bluebird Program Arranged far Ahead

Productions Are Scheduled Until Well into February and Future Subjects Are in the Making

WITH the Bluebird program arranged well into February, stars and directors are busy on locations with future subjects for release in the early months of the new year. With the exception of Violet Mersereau, who operates at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio, all of Bluebird's stars are working on the west coast with Universal City as their base of activities.

Mae Murray, under direction of Robert Leonard, has just completed "The Eternal Columbine," written for her by H. Sheridan Bickers, especially created to introduce Miss Murray's dancing. Carmel Myers will be the star of "The Green Seal," to be released late in February with Ashton Dearholdt, her new leading man. A. G. Kenyon prepared the scenario from a book written by Charles Edmund Walk and Stuart Paton, who has lately been directing Universal serials, supervised the production.

"The Girl Who Dared" will present Dorothy Phillips as a February star among Bluebirds with William Stowell and Lon Chaney featured in her support. Allen J. Holubar is just finishing the production from a magazine story written by James Oliver Curwood. Priscilla Dean will in this feature, appear for the first time in Miss Phillips' support, the company also including William Burress, Harry De More, Joseph Girard, J. Gordon Russell and Frank Brownlee.

Two features starring Ruth Clifford, with Monroe Salisbury sharing the advertising honors, have been created by Rupert Julian. "The Highest Card," from a story and scenario by Elliott J. Clawson, and "His Wife in Arizona," contributed by the same writer, are depended upon to maintain the popularity of the Clifford-Salisbury-Julian combination at the standard lately obtained through their Bluebirds of artistic excellence. Both plays were produced in the foothills of the Sierras at Seven Oaks, Cal., where three companies from Universal City were, at one time, profiting by the scenic beauties of the natural surroundings.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

A "blue Monday" was picked for the shedding of tears on the part of little Mary McAlister, Essanay's six-year-old star. Mary insisted that all her crying for "Sadie Goes to Heaven," her newest vehicle, be achieved in one day, so that the misery need not be stretched out over a longer period. Hence, her director was forced to arrange for all her "tear scenes" to be taken together. And Mary did considerable crying, too. Real tears and real sobs.

Unnatural history note: Albert Glassmire. Triangle-Keystone's director of production, who is more than slightly bald, has a father in Philadelphia who is in the wig and hair-restoring business. For purely business reasons, Bert was never taken into the firm.

In taking scenes of Mary MacLane's picture, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," a gross of cigarettes was used, not only for the smokers, but to provide the proper effect for the subtitles, through which the smoke curls as the famous writer-actress speaks.

Howard S. Moss, Essanay director, who produced the novelty photoplay, "The Dream Doll," recently received a letter from Jessie McCutcheon Raleigh, sister of the cartoonist and creator of the famous "Good Fairy" statue. In this letter the artist told of her admiration of Mr. Moss' creation, expressing a wish to watch him at his work some time.

In order that the thousands who are going to the box office at the Lyric Theater in New York, may pronounce the name correctly, William Fox placed in the lobby by the box office of the Lyric Theater, the following sign:

"To pronounce Les Miserables say it this way—
Le-Mee-zay-rabbl."

The first "e" is sounded like "e" in the English word "let" and the "s" is silent. There is no accent on any syllable. The "l" in "rabbl" is blended in the syllable and is not a full sound.

H. R. Durant, until recently advisory head of the editorial department of the Empire All-Star Film Corporation, has joined the Goldwyn scenario staff. His able work for many years as assistant editor of the Munsey publications equipped Mr. Durant with a keen sense of story values.

A thrilling and picturesque view of skiing in the Rocky Mountains, where thousands gather annually for the games, forms another feature of the ninety-eighth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen." A background of scenic grandeur renders these scenes more than ordinarily beautiful, and some of the feats are exceedingly thrilling.

Enid Bennett will entertain some of her fellow artists of the silent drama with a real, old-fashioned Christmas. Miss Bennett's plans contemplate a trip from Los Angeles to the famous Bear Valley, where the fir trees rise to great heights and where six cabins have been rented for the occasion. During the days, the Ince players will spend their time at various outdoor sports, in the picturesque valley, where snow comes early and stays late. A big fir will be "made up" to look like a Christmas tree and will contain remembrances for those in the party.

As described by the producers, "Taming Target Center," the Paramount Mack Sennett comedy which follows "That Night," begins with a riot and ends with a prayer. It brings again into prominence Ben Turpin, the sheriff; Polly Moran, who succeeds him; Tom Kennedy as a cafe proprietor, and Gonda Durand, the leading vampire. William Campbell directed it with the supervision of Mack Sennett.

A cablegram received at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, from George Melford, director of "Hidden Pearls," starring Sessue Hayakawa, supplies the information that the company has left the Hawaiian Islands and is on its way to the States.

Vivian Martin has solved the problem of time saving in the business of knitting sweaters for soldiers. When not actively engaged on a scene, Miss Martin does her own knitting, but while she is rehearsing or appearing before the camera she turns the job over to her maid, who takes it up without dropping a stitch.

Wheeler Oakman, who was "the Ne'er Do Well" in the play of that name, and who for the past year was Mabel Normand's leading man in "Mickey," has joined the Metro forces and henceforth will be seen as Edith Storey's leading man.

Refusal of a monkey to eat peanuts played the dickens with the making of "Peanuts and Politics," a Big V Comedy, featuring Montgomery and Rock, at the Vitagraph western plant in Hollywood. Instead, the animal persisted in climbing over the tripod of the camera and it was half a day before the scene could be taken.

In a scene for "A Woman Between Friends," the Vitagraph feature in which Alice Joyce and Marc MacDermott are starred, Director Tom Terriss was able to reproduce the famous Mardi Gras at Nice faithfully, because he had been a frequent participant in the festivities there.

Alice Terry, the former Washington Square player who is now with Vitagraph, has returned to her work at the studio after a lay-off of several weeks due to illness.

How a child of the tenements believes she has gone to heaven when she finds herself in a millionaire's home is the story of little Mary McAlister's latest Essanay picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven."

When Dorothy Dalton, working on her third Paramount picture, found that she needed a dressing room on "location" several miles from Los Angeles, carpenters erected one in just an hour. It was complete, too, with mirrors, electric lighting and even chintz curtains.

Taylor Holmes and his supporting company are now in Phoenix, Arizona, filming the exterior scenes of George K. Spoor's special feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap."

The soldiers who ate turkey dinners at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Thanksgiving day, can thank Mary Garden for part of the treat. The star of Goldwyn's "Thais" gave $500 to the Patriotic Service League, which arranged the feast. The money was sent by means of a cashier's check and the identity of the donor would have remained unknown but for a chance inquiry by an official of the league.

Keeping step with the times, Director George Loane Tucker has decreed that Mabel Normand's newest picture, "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and Aubrey M. Kennedy, shall play upon the ice-skating rather than the dance craze In a supper grotto set for the new picture an ice rink will replace the customary waxed floor. Mabel Normand and Tom Moore, her leading man, will do the skating.

Madam Olga Petrova recently purchased a magnificent estate at Great Neck, Long Island. The house, which stands upon several acres of land, was formerly owned by Sam Harris, the prominent theatrical magnate, and Madame Petrova's nearest neighbor in her new place of residence will be the famous comedian and playwright, George M. Cohan. There will be two hundred and fifty chickens, several Holstein cows and four finely blooded horses on her new estate. The inmates of the famous Petrova kennels, which number many prize-winning dogs of various breeds, have been moved to the Great Neck place.

Nazimova, who will soon be seen in a Metro production, "Revelation," made her first public appearance at the age of twelve, playing violin solos at a Christmas concert in her native town in Russian Crimea on the shore of the Black Sea.

Anita King, who was the first woman ever to cross the continent alone in an automobile, has mapped out another big adventure for herself. She plans to go to France the latter part of next February to join in the reconstruction work being waged there by the American Red Cross.

Brandt Recovers from Serious Illness

After an illness that came dangerously near ending his career, Joe Brandt returned to his desk Monday morning of this week looking better than he has at any time during the past year. Four weeks ago the general manager of Universal overdosed himself with calomel and mercury poisoning resulted.

Ten days ago he had recovered sufficiently to be removed to a rest cure in New Jersey and there he completely recuperated. When the fact that Mr. Brandt had returned to work was noised around his principal occupation became receiving a stream of visitors congratulating him upon his narrow escape from death.

Spectacle's Day Over

"Spectacle for spectacle's sake is a dead precept and a deadly precept for the modern picture producer." That is the dictum of R. A. Walsh, the Goldwyn director.

Three New Pictures Are Started

Triangle Directors Are Showing Results at Culver City Studios—Four Plays Are Finished

WITH three new pictures of unusual merit just started, four pictures completed, three other stories in various stages of completion and five directors waiting for new stories, the Triangle Culver City studio is keeping well up on the production schedule set by Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis. The scenario department is working overtime turning out the continuity for several well-known magazine stories and several original stories are practically completed.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton has started work on "Captain of His Soul," an unusual story which is the screen adaptation of "Shackles" by Eleanore Kinkade. Working with Hamilton is an all-star cast, including William Desmond, Charles Gunn and Jack Richardson. Others who will appear in the picture are Mitzi Gould, a recent addition to the Triangle playing forces, Gene Burr, W. A. Jeffries and Walt Whitman.

"Captain of His Soul" is a gripping story in which a young man makes a tremendous sacrifice to save his younger brother, whom he believes guilty of a crime, and shows the hero's awakening to the right course while hiding with a hermit in the mountains.

"Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," a screen adaptation from Francis W. Sullivan's story by the same name which recently appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal, has also been started by Director Raymond Wells. Included in the cast are Allen Sears, Margery Wilson, Wilbur Higby, William V. Mong, Aaron Edwards and Anna Dodge.

"Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," is a war story with a most unique love theme running through it. In this subject Margey Wilson, as Jeonette Gontreau, a New York stenographer of French descent, longs to "do her bit" in the world war, and so adopts three prisoners in a German camp as her godsons. This is accomplished through the New York Red Cross Society and the little stenographer keeps the allied youths supplied with good things and cheering letters. In the end her kindness leads her in jail as a German spy, but she is delivered in a most sensational way.

The other new picture about to be started at the Triangle studio is the screen adaptation of Randall Parrish's novel, "Keith of the Border," made by Alvin J. Neitz. Director Cliff Smith will direct this and Roy Stewart will be seen in the leading role. In it Stewart will appear as a Government scout on the frontier during the time of the Indian uprisings. There is a gripping love theme that sharpens the interest. The story has plenty of mystery.

Director Smith is now putting the finishing touches to "The Law's Outlaw," in which Roy Stewart appears as the star, cast as a most capable young deputy sheriff who solves a mystery single-handed and under heavy odds. There is an abundance of western atmosphere in this drama. Stewart is supported by Fritzie Ridgeway, Norbert Gills, Percy Challenger, Pete Morrison and Louis Durham.

Director Jack Dillon is now well under way in Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, a screen adaptation of Ida M. Evans' Red Book Magazine story, "Limousine Life," which bears the same working title. In this picture some exceptionally beautiful costumes, prepared in the Triangle wardrobe in charge of Designer Peggy Hamilton, will be shown in the fashion shop, around which the action of the picture centers. Those who are supporting Olive Thomas include Joseph Bennett, Lee Phelps, Lillian West, May Warren, Virginia Foltz, and Mildred Delfino.

Director Frank Borzage is making exceptional progress on an unusual western story, "The Gun Woman," in which Texas Guinan, former New York Winter Garden favorite, has the title role.

A western street scene has been erected at the Culver City studio expressly for this picture, this frontier town at the ranch studio, Hartville, not being suitable. Daily, bad men and wild women are cavorting about at Culver City. In the supporting cast with Miss Guinan are Francis McDonald, Ed Brady, Curley Baldwin and Draxy Harland.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Latest News of Chicago

A. S. Dowd, formerly special representative for Universal Screen Magazine, Current Events and Animated Weekly, has been appointed sales representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. In line with his program of organizing an aggressive sales campaign in 1918, Mr. Dowd expects to leave for Detroit the first of the new year and from there he will visit Buffalo and the other cities where Universal exchanges are located. Mr. Dowd's duties in Chicago will be taken over by Irving N. Mack, who in addition to his publicity duties becomes service manager and takes charge of the sales promotion department.

The suit of Louis Frank, Chicago exhibitor, seeking to obtain money he claimed was due him for work performed in the interest of the exhibitors' convention in Chicago last summer, was brought to a close in Municipal court when the case was decided without giving Frank the relief he sought. The ending of the case releases the funds of the convention which were held up pending the outcome of the litigation.

M. H. Bryer, formerly Pathe representative in Michigan and Illinois, has been appointed special representative of the Paramount exchange, Chicago. He will specialize on short reel subjects.

Jack Meredith, former leading man with Norma Talmadge, Evelyn Nesbit, Charlotte Walker, Winifred Allen and others of prominence, has forsaken the screen and will try his hand at selling films. He has joined the sales force of the Universal Film Exchange of Chicago.

C. W. Bunn, formerly manager of Pathe's Chicago branch, has been appointed special sales representative. Working under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby, he will visit the various Pathe exchanges of the country.

Dwight Furness, official United States photographer, enlisted man in the Aviation camp to Hampton, West Virginia, who was until recently employed in the American Film Company offices at Chicago, has taken his first pictures in the air. Mr. Furness has had his first flight in an airplane, during which he took eight pictures.

A group of Essanay actresses helped along the Red Cross National theater day in Chicago the week of December 2. Lead by Helen Ferguson, an Essanay player, who supports Taylor Holmes in "The Small Town Guy," this group succeeded in soliciting over a thousand dollars in their canvassing of the big Loop hotels. Following their solicitations, these girls acted as ushers on Friday, December 11, in those Chicago theaters dedicated to the Red Cross benefit.

J. R. Grainger, general manager of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, which company controls an extensive part of the middle west states for "The Warrior," announced this week that Jack Lait, well known author and playwright, had been engaged to create a series of special comedy subject titles for several scenes in the spectacle.

Taylor Holmes and his supporting players, producing George K. Spoor's special, "Ruggles of Red Gap," will return from Phoenix, Arizona, to Chicago for a part of the Christmas holidays.

So serious has become the penny shortage in Chicago that Peter J. Schaefer, vice-president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has gone to Washington to seek relief. It is his purpose to impress the Secretary of the Treasury, MacAdoo, who is the only man in control of the penny market, with the solemnity of the situation.

I. L. Leserman, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, announces that he has appointed Joe Roderick, formerly sales manager of the Laemmle Film Service, to the position of manager of the serial department of the Universal Chicago office. Mr. Roderick's rise has been rather unusual. Four years ago he started to work for the Laemmle Film Exchange as a shipping clerk, and later became booker, after which he sold films and specialized in serials.

Manager Jenner of the Kleine exchange gave a special showing of the new edition of "Quo Vadis," December 3, to the trade press. With the artistic titling and fresh prints, the Cines classic will hold its own very well against newer productions. It is reissued under the "Perfection Brand."

Trade showings are being arranged for the first Essanay-Perfection Ultra feature, "Uneasy Money," which begins the schedule of the new year. Taylor Holmes is featured in this screen version of the Saturday Evening Post story by P. G. Wodehouse.

We Abolish Advance Deposit System

Notice To Exhibitors

When the system of advance deposits was introduced into our business to guarantee contracts, I announced

1. That these sums would be held in a separate Trust fund, apart from our business bank accounts, and that they would be withdrawn from time to time when earned by film rentals.

2. That a cash discount of six per cent upon the amount deposited would be allowed.

These agreements have been kept. The unearned advance deposits of the K. E. S. E. Service are deposited separate from our business funds in the Harriman National Bank of New York, the Merchants Loan and Trust Company and the Continental Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

Recognizing the justice of the exhibitors' attitude that the advance deposit works a great hardship upon many whose funds are tied up—one exhibitor tells me that he has on deposit, scattered among various exchanges, without security, the sum of $14,000—and after consultation with the manufacturers associated with me, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Mr. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Mr. Spoor of the Essanay Company, I take pleasure in announcing that

K. E. S. E. WILL ABOLISH THE SYSTEM OF ADVANCE DEPOSITS

No further collections will be exacted to guarantee rental contracts by Keys Service.

Funds now in our hands will be returned to their owners as soon as adjustments can be made, and current business protected. These adjustments and refunds will be made from the home office through our branches, and will require some time for the labor of accounting, but all will probably be closed out before August first.

It is necessary that our rental charges be protected, and I confidently look for the co-operation of exhibitors in asking payment of each rental charge before shipment of the film.

Here's the biggest and quickest State Rights clean-up in film history

Playing all this week as the feature attraction at the Strand Theatre, New York

Throughout the country—the world in fact—the people—rich and poor—cry "Give us food—lest we perish."
Our nation is at war. Our Allies look to us for FOOD. The struggle of the Ages will be won or lost on the American Farms.
Meanwhile the American people bend to the soil. The earth God bequeathed gives forth its fruit. But still the cry—"Food, give us Food."
And far across the waters of the earth from distant shores, the echo reverberates, "Food, give us Food, lest we no longer have strength to withstand our enemies."

Why is this so?
There is food aplenty—but the FOOD TRUST—the most criminal combination in America's business history—is grinding the masses in its insatiable desire for PROFITS.
Herbert Hoover, food administrator of the U. S. A., and chairman of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, publicly assailed the FOOD TRUST before the U. S. Senate last week, stating: "In the last five months $250,000,000 has been extracted from the American consumer in excess of normal profits of manufacturers and distributers."

He not only endorsed its revelations but declared its timeliness would go far to correct an outrageous condition. "Every person in America should see it," he said.

HEROLD EDEL

Managing Director of the Strand Theatre, N. Y., saw the first thousand feet of this picture and exclaimed: "It's a knockout. I'll play it all next week as the feature."

How many men can sell a new prospect by one call?

Most first calls and a good many second and third calls are merely missionary visits.

"In reply to your letter of June 4th, allow me to say that I not only see no reason why commercial conventions should be omitted during the war, but should regret to see any instrumentality neglected which has proved serviceable in stimulating business and facilitating its processes.

"This is not only not a time to allow any slowing up of business, but is a time when every sensible process of stimulation should be used."
